STOPPED BY BULLETS.

THE WILY COLORED "CACK" A HARD PRISONER TO TAKE.

He Outran Sergeant Kiely's First Attempt to Capture Him—Detective Then Took a Hand—Now in the County Jail.

The arrest of Walter, alias "Cack" Carter, at Elizabeth last Friday afternoon was more exciting than was reported to this paper It appears that when Sergeant Kiely saw the Negro the fellow dashed down a side street to the Pennsylvania Railroad and climbing up the elevation ran along toward North Elizabeth, when the Sergeant stopped. He did not give up hope of capturing his man, however. Securing the services of Detective Decker, of the Elizabeth police force, the officers started after their man. They soon spotted him lying on the bank in a shady spot near the railroad, and they surrounded him. The Negro saw them coming and again ran up the track.

Detective Decker, being the nearest, started in pursuit. A hot chase resulted. Finally Decker, who was getting winded, pulled his pistol and fired a couple of shots at the fugitive, who slackened his pace and then stopped running. He surrendered quietly when the detective overtook him. Carter was then taken to police headquarters in Elizabeth and later turned over to Sergeant Kiely.

He was arraigned before Justice Moffett Saturday afternoon and held to await the action of the Grand Jury. He is now resting in the Union county jail.

NAVAL RESERVE REORGANIZED.

Governor Voorhees' Orders to Be Carried Out.

The officers of the Battalion of the East, Naval Reserves, will carry out the order issued by the Governor, as Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard and will consolidate the First and Third Divisions. This is in accordance with the plan of reorganized which was devised by the military commission which the Governor appointed sometime ago. As this plan to a great extent destroyes the efficiency of the battalion as a ship's company, and as it was formulated by military gentlemen having as much knowledge of naval matters as a ben has of dentistry the Reserves petitioned the Governor to grant them an opportunity to show how disastrous the military scheme was. This the Governor promised to do and the matter of the consolidation was held in abeyance until the hearing had taken place. But as the Governor has evidently forgotten his promise, like the good sailors that they are, the officers will carry out the Commander-In-Chief's orders. The First and Third Divisions will be consolidated, and Lieutenant Charles Vreeland, commander of the First Division, will have command of the new division. Chief Engineer Hart, who commanded the Third division, will be made navigator.

TRACK RECORD DROPS QUARTER OF SECOND.

"Rattler" Did a Mile in 2:17 Flat Saturday Afternoon.

SOME FINE MATINEE RACING

NEARLY 500 PEOPLE WERE AT THE DRIVING PARK.

"Rattler's" Owner, S. D. Kelly, Was in the Sulkey When He Made the Fast Mile—Exhibition Mile Trotted By Handsome Team Formerly Owned By Bank Wrecker George Vallentine.

Nearly five hundred people, by far the largest number for this season, visited the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association Saturday afternoon and witnessed one of the best programmes presented in a long time. The trotting events were all interesting and in addition to the fact that excellent time was made, the track record of 2:17¼ was reduced to 2:17, by "Rattler," owned by S. D. Kelly, of Woodbridge. The race was in competition against Thomas Brantingham's "Myrtle Twig," and was trotted in two heats. "Rattler," won the first heat in 2:23 and the second in 2:17. Mr. Kelly drove his horse and it was one of the prettiest exhibitions witnessed.

Another great event was the exhibition mile trotted by the handsome team, "Tom" and "Charlie," formerly owned by George Vallentine, the defaulting cashier of the Perth Amboy bank. The team is now in other hands. They trotted the mile in 2:28¼ and the race brought out plenty of enthusiasm from the crowd. The team did not break once and gave as fine an exhibition as one would care to see.

A fine race was given in the 2:35 class in three heats and good time was made, the horses all being evenly matched. Four horses entered as follows: "Chas. Green," John Taylor, Wheatsheaf; "Sunday," D. Darby, Alton; "Fairmount Maid," C. L. Wright, Plainfield; "Viola F," Robert Fairbairn, Westfield. The result of the race follows:

"Chas. Green"	4	3	4
"Sunday"	2	4	3
"Fairmount Maid"	3	2	2
Time	2:31¼	2:30½	2:29½

A very interesting race in the 2:30 class was given by J. W. Johnson's "Barney Williams," A. I. Smalley's "Belle," N. B. Smalley's "Kittie Rue," and Chas. Brower's "King," which resulted as follows:

"Barney Williams"	2	1	1
"Belle"	4	2	4
"Kittie Rue"	1	4	2
Time	2:31¼	2:31¼	2:29½

The last race was a "make-up" between "Andy," owned by Andrew Hayes; "Sampson," F. S. Emmons; "Prince," J. M. Smalley; "Jeanness," David Smalley, and horses owned by Harry Gwynett and Fred Suydam. The first heat was won by "Jeanness" in 2:30. This so aroused the indignation of the other contestants that they refused to go the next heat if this horse entered. They claimed she was out of their class. This horse was ruled out and in the second heat "Prince" won in 2:47½, with "Sampson" second in 2:48.

The final event of the day was an exhibition mile by "Viola F," and it was a pretty race. She made the mile in 2:25½ and won the admiration of all.

Robt. Fairbairn was in charge of the races and he was ably assisted by J. W. Johnson, C. L. Wright and several others, all of whom occupied places in the judges' stand.

CYCLES BROKEN, RIDERS UNHURT.

Thomas Chamberlain and Wm. Elvery Came Together With Force.

Saturday afternoon a somewhat serious accident occurred on Park avenue, when Thomas Chamberlain, while riding his wheel, ran into Wm. Elvery, also on a wheel. Both men were thrown from their bicycles, but the latter's wheel suffered the greatest damage. Twelve spokes were broken and other parts of the bicycle wrecked. Fortunately neither rider suffered any injury. The other wheel was damaged to some extent, necessitating both riders to walk home, a distance of a mile.

Tried to Steal Chickens.

A few nights ago three men entered the premises of Mr. Brown on Verdon avenue and made a strong effort to walk away with his chickens. Neighbors were aroused by the noise made by the intruders and they called Mr. Brown, who assisted the men in making their escape by giving them a warning. The thieves were too far away for Mr. Brown to tell who they were, but still he has an idea, and if they come back everything will be in readiness to receive them.

S. A. Ginna and family, of Watchung avenue, have returned from Watch Hill, R. I. They will leave the city again in a short time and will remain away till fall.

Miss Mabel Van Middlesworth, of Elmwood place, will leave tomorrow for Jersey City, where she will visit her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Foster.

COST $25 TO KEEP DECAYED VEGETABLES

Wm. Ross Severely Punished By the City Judge.

STENCH AROUND HIS PLACE

HE HAD NOT HEEDED WARNINGS OF HEALTH INSPECTOR.

The Restaurnter and Vegetable Dealer Hated to City Court This Morning—He Pleaded Guilty. But Was Given Full Penalty of the Law—He Was Very Indignant Over the Treatment.

The odor of decayed vegetables that issued from the basement under the Delmonico Oyster and Chop House on Park avenue, near Front street, has been so strong that all the tenants of the neighboring buildings have been complaining to City Judge Runyon and the Health Board. Friday Health Inspector Wm. Addis made a complaint against the proprietor, Wm. Ross, who was arraigned before City Judge Runyon Saturday.

Ross not only runs his little restaurant, but deals in vegetables. He displays them along the sidewalk and stores them in his basement. Ross sometimes forgets to dispose of his remaining stock when business isn't good, but the vegetables do not forget to decay. Ross was arrested during the late Judge DeMezz's term of office. He has been warned repeatedly by the health inspector, but apparently it didn't do any good.

Ross was very indignant when he appeared before the Judge Saturday and insisted upon talking. He pleaded guilty, but tried to argue that he wasn't to blame, and that the neighbors exaggerated the stench.

Judge Runyon declared that Ross's establishment was a nuisance, and that he deserved the full penalty of the law. He consequently fined him $25, the extreme limit under the health ordinance. Ross left with the intention of getting a rebate on the fine from the President of the Health Board.

VISITED WITH THE DUKE.

ENTERTAINING EXPERIENCE OF REV. MR. MURPHY AT WESTMINSTER.

Talked With the Titled Foreigner on the Latter's Estate, but It Was Sometime Before They Knew His Highness.

Lawyer Clarence Murphy, of West Front street, received a letter from from his father, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, who is traveling with Mrs. Murphy and daughter, Miss Anna Murphy, through foreign countries. The letter was written from Westminster Hotel, Chester, Eng.

Mr. Murphy relates an interesting incident which happened while they were sight-seeing in Westminster chapel. They were looking about for a guide to show them about, when they noticed a fine-appearing gentleman approaching. Miss Murphy caught a glimpse of a fine portrait on the wall, and inquired if that was the Duke of Westminster. The stranger spoke up and remarked: "Yes, that's my picture." The Americans then enjoyed a social time with the Duke, and he expressed pleasure in meeting the travelers. Later they met the guide who expressed surprise that they were able to meet the Duke, as he rarely discloses his identity.

The party left Liverpool Saturday, July 29th, and are now in London. They are enjoying good health, and Mr. Murphy is rapidly regaining his strength and is beginning to feel like himself again. They report that thus far they have had fine weather.

BORROWED J. A. SMITH'S WHEEL

So Lou, the Bookblack, was Invited to See City Judge.

Louis Randolph, the little colored bootblack, paid a visit on City Judge Runyon Monday last by special invitation. Lou incurred the wrath of J. A. Smith, the West Front street grocer, Saturday morning. Smith left his wheel on Park avenue and asked Lou to look after it. The fire-alarm blew and Lou jumped on the wheel a moment to investigate. He took the wheel back to the store. The owner of the wheel was very indignant and told Chief Grant about it. Hence Lou's visit to the court. Judge Runyon warned Lou to take better care of wheels left in his charge and then suspended sentence.

MR ACKERMAN WILL NOT BE A CANDIDATE

Will Positively Not Enter the Race For Senator.

EVEN IF CROSS WITHDRAWS.

PLAINFIELD'S STRONGEST CANDIDATE IS B. FRANK CORIELL.

He Wants to be Republican Nominee for County Clerk—J. Martin Roll Has no Chance for Sheriffalty Nomination the Knowing Ones Say—Clerk Howard's Mistake at Last Convention.

With the announcement that Senator Cross might not look for a renomination to the Upper House of the New Jersey Legislature, but was quietly gunning for a judicial appointment instead, Union county Republicans are wondering who is likely to be the party choice if Cross is out of the race. With that announcement was a vague rumor that Plainfield would try to capture the plum for which it unsuccessfully fought at the county convention last fall.

The name of Ernest R. Ackerman was mentioned for the nomination for which he was a candidate last fall. There is, however, no truth in this rumor. Mr. Ackerman is very positive in his statement that he will not make any attempt to secure the Senatorial nomination, and that he will under no circumstances allow his name to be presented to the coming Republican convention this fall. Mr. Ackerman's time is too much occupied with his business duties to allow him to devote any of it to politics at present.

J. Martin Roll, of Springfield, is mentioned for the place and is known to be willing to accept the nomination could his friends secure it for him. Those who stand high in county affairs, however, are positive in their statements that whoever may be nominated for Senator, it will not be the former Assemblyman from Springfield. The same influences that worked for his defeat for renomination to the Assembly would appear again should he attempt to win a seat in the Senate. His stand in regard to corporations and turnpike roads in particular has, they claim, given Roll a political black eye that it will take him long to recover from.

So far, Plainfield has no candidate in line for the Senatorial nomination. Judging from the present situation in Plainfield, the strongest candidate from this city will be B. Frank Coriell in the race for sheriff. The Elizabeth politicians pretend that it amounts to nothing and class it as a scheme to aid the present incumbent, Clerk Howard, to secure a nomination. In that they are far from the truth. Plainfield owes Rahway nothing after the decidedly shabby way in which the Rahway delegation deserted the standard of Mr. Ackerman at the last county convention and went over to the enemy. Rahway practically defeated Mr. Ackerman and the Plainfield politicians haven't forgotten that fact. If Clerk Howard did not clinch the renomination for himself by that deal, he made the mistake of his life.

DEMANDED MONEY.

Fred Pittis Met With Two Highwaymen in the Borough.

Fred Pittis, who is employed as an electric light inspector for the borough by the Plainfield Electric Light Company met with a lively experience Saturday night while in the performance of his duty on Willow avenue, near Magnolia avenue. It was a fizzling one of the lamps that did not work properly, when he was accosted by two strange men. They demanded that he give up his money. The young man protested, and said that he did not have any money. The highwaymen proceeded to go through the man's clothes. They discovered that he did not have any money and after using some strong language, disappeared in the darkness, and were not seen afterward.

CLAMBAKE AT GLENSIDE PARK.

Quoit Match Between Veterans Was an Exciting Feature.

Joseph Miller, who gave a clambake to several score of his friends Monday afternoon at a pleasant little camp near Glenside Park. A delightful repast was spread and the clams were an appetizing part of it. During the afternoon there was an exciting quoit game between veterans of the 3d N. J. Vols and the 22d N. Y. Vols. Dan Shea and Herbert Overbaugh represented the 3d New Jersey, while M. Kane of Plainfield, and A. H. Evans, of New York, pitched for the 22d New York. The latter team won by a score of 21 to 4.

Miss Cora Sheppard, of Fifth street, has returned from a visit with friends at Easton, Pa.

Mrs. L. H. Biglow, of Madison avenue, is stopping at The Bluffs, Bay Head, this State.

Mrs. Clarence Leland, of West Second street, who has been seriously ill, is improved slightly.

MAYOR SMALLEY'S ECONOMY UNPOPULAR

Borough People Complain of Inadequate Police Force.

WANT ANOTHER MARSHAL.

SAY THAT PRESENT SITUATION INVITES EVIL DOING.

Mr. Smalley's Failure to Appoint a Man to Fill the Vacancy on the Police Force is the Cause of Much Grumbling—A Dangerous Way to Try to Make a Good Record for His Administration.

There is a great deal of adverse criticism regarding the action of Mayor Newton B. Smalley, of the borough, in not appointing a marshal to take the place of John H. Schenck, who resigned to take a position as engineer at the Plainfield Water Works. Some of the people of the people of the borough do not feel that they are adequately protected. They say that the fact that there have been so few arrests is no reason why the police force should be reduced, and thus invite evil-disposed people to come to the borough and make trouble for them.

It has been said that if Mayor Smalley is holding back an appointment until he can find someone who will earn the salary, $50 per month, his motive is a good one, but if he is adopting his course out of a desire to follow up his idea of an economical government and administration, he is doing that which is against the best interests of the borough.

That for some time past there has been trouble in the police department cannot be gainsaid. There is a committee on marshals in the Council, but they do not govern. It is said that the chairman of the committee is nothing more than a figure-head, while the running of that department is looked after by someone else.

In point of seniority ex-Marshal George Wise should have been appointed chief under the present administration after Chief Wilson resigned, and it is claimed that he has every qualification for the position. He was turned down and another appointed in his place. Mr. Wise recently had an opportunity of doing something better than police duty, and he quickly resigned. At the last meeting of the Council Marshal Schenck resigned to accept a better position, and thus it can be seen that the force is in a weakened condition.

A representative of this paper in connection with a prominent borough official, recently, was informed that certain ordinances are not enforced as they should be. As an instance he remarked that often cyclers are allowed to ride in the borough at night without a light; in fact, a Councilman not long ago rode his wheel home and his lamp was not lighted This same official contended that instead of one marshal doing day duty there should be two, one for each side of Somerset street. He also claims that not one per cent. of the Council stands with the Mayor in his position on the marshal question. They claim false economy is an expensive luxury and they think that the Mayor is practicing false economy. It is also stated by those opposed to Mayor Smalley on the marshal question, that he is trying to make a record this year, and as few arrests as possible will be made, and what the administration don't see there is no use bothering with. It is affirmed that violations of the borough ordinances occur continually, and yet no attempt is made to prevent them, and it is these things that make certain people object to the present method in vogue.

FIRE IN A CLOSET.

Harold Phillips Had His Hands Burned Putting Out the Flames.

A fire was discovered in a closet on the second floor of the home of Percy F. Phillips, 921 Madison avenue, Thursday evening. It was a spontaneous combustion in a heap of oily rags. The contents of the closet were ruined. The loss will amount to $50, which is covered by insurance. On a shelf in the closet was a leather bound book containing an inventory of the contents of the house. The cover was burned off.

The fire was discovered by Miss Margery Phillips and was extinguished by Mr. Phillips and his son Harold. The latter had his hands badly burned and his eyebrows singed.

NO TRACE OF BULLMAN.

His Family Have Given Up Hope of Ever Hearing From Him.

Thus far no word has been received regarding George Bullman, who disappeared from his home in the borough over two months ago. Relatives have spent time and money in a fruitless search for Mr. Bullman, but not a trace of him cannot be found. Mrs. Bullman and her family have about given up all hope of learning of his whereabouts. The family have received letters from all parts of the country making inquires about the missing man, but no clew has been secured.

BUILT FIRE UNDER LIGHTED OIL STOVE

LIVELY BLAZE RESULTED.

FIRE DEPARTMENT HAD TO BE CALLED TO EXTINGUISH FLAMES.

Morning Fire at Home of John Ryan, 1024 West Third Street—Small Boy Wanted to Get Breakfast—His Method Had Disastrous Consequences—Loss Will Amount to $700—Only House Was Injured.

Little eight-year-old Johnny Ryan tried a combination that wouldn't work Saturday. He lighted the oil stove and then started a fire in the cook stove on which the oil stove rested. The result was rather disastrous. The home of his father, John Ryan, 1024 West Third street, corner Manson place, was partially destroyed by fire. The total loss will reach $700, which is only partially covered by insurance.

Mrs. Ryan had just finished the breakfast operations for her husband, who works in the foundry at the Pond Tool Works. She had been up with a sick child nearly all night and lay down in the bed room on the second floor to take a nap. Little Johnny, who is the oldest boy, decided to begin breakfast preparations on his own account.

He lighted the oil stove which stood on the regular coal burning cook stove. Then he built a fire in the latter and set about getting himself some breakfast. But the combination didn't work. As the cook stove grew hotter and hotter it caused trouble in the oil stove. When Johnny looked again, the oil was bubbling over on the floor and the flames were spreading rapidly. Johnny fled without loss of time and yelled as loud as his little lungs would permit.

The neighbors saw the flames burst out of the kitchen window and started the cry of "fire." The cries awoke Mrs. Ryan. She seized her baby and sick child and, with the aid of Mrs. William Hewitt, carried them to a place of safety. Meanwhile Sam Robinson ran down to fire alarm box 47, on South Second street, opposite the Pond Tool works, and sent in an alarm at 8:35 o'clock.

The No. 3 hose company was the first on the scene and laid in two lines of hose. They found the rear of the house all ablaze. The flames were fast spreading to the front of the building. Neighbors had saved part of the furniture and bedding which was heaped up in the street opposite. While the firemen were at work the oil stove exploded, and the rush of smoke drove them back. In a short time, however, the fire was extinguished.

The house was a two-story and small attic frame structure. The kitchen was gutted and the other rooms were badly damaged. The fire was under such headway that it was necessary to flood the house before the flames were extinguished.

Mrs. Ryan places their loss at $900, on which there was no insurance. The house is the property of Dr. Daniel H. Thickstun. His loss will reach $500, and is covered by insurance.

ACCUSED HIS WIFE.

Barber Mann Takes Sudden Leave of the City in Fear of Arrest.

A warrant was issued by City Judge Runyon Friday for Charles Mann, a colored barber whose establishment is on East Fifth street, near Watchung avenue. The complaint was made by Mrs. Mann who charged her husband with abusing and cruelly assaulting her She said the trouble was over another woman. The Manns live at 927 Arlington avenue. Mann has run his barber shop for several years and has always appeared to be a quiet and peacefully disposed negro.

One of Mann's colored friends reported to the police Friday that he saw Mann riding his wheel in the direction of Elizabeth with two grips strapped to his wheel. It is supposed that he heard of the warrant and departed suddenly. His shop is closed today.

Fireman Found Floor Missing.

Howard Manning, a call man in the No. 3 hose company from the West End engine house, had a narrow escape Saturday from injury. He was on duty at the fire at the home of John Ryan, 1025 West Third street. He was instructed to take the stream into the kitchen. He sprang through the window expecting to land on the floor. The floor had been burned away and he fell into a shallow cellar. He was badly shaken up but escaped serious injury.

Mr. Sloans' Threat.

Former President Sloan is said to have threatened that unless the new managers of the Lackawanna Railroad stopped discharging his friends he would strive to regain control of the road and discharge all the new men and reinstate all the old ones.

PROGRESSIVE EUCHRE WAS GREAT SUCCESS

Big Social Affair at the Hotel Hunterston.

HAD TWENTY-FOUR TABLES.

VALUABLE PRIZES WERE AWARDED TO THE WINNERS.

Was a Benefit to Raise Funds to Purchase Reading Matter for Soldier Boys in Philippines—Balance Will Net About $200—List of Efficient Committees Who Had Charge of the Affair Thursday

There was a jolly party at the Hotel Hunterston Thursday for the progressive euchre party, given to raise funds to purchase reading matter for the soldier boys in the Philippines. It was for a worthy cause and proved a most delightful affair. Besides the guests at the hotel there was a representative attendance of Plainfield society folk. The threatening weather undoubtedly kept some away but the enchre party was pronounced by all to be a great success, socially and, financially. It will be several days before all the returns are received but it is estimated that the affair will net some $200.

The great ballroom of the hotel was arrayed in the national colors, which were draped at every convenient point. American flags were on every hand. Play began shortly after 8:30 o'clock. There were twenty-four tables and it took all the energies of the committee to keep play going smoothly. All was very satisfactory, however, and the plan adopted of keeping score proved all right. Besides those who took part in the game, there were a number of guests who congregated on the broad piazzas and watched the animated scene within.

Music proved an attractive feature of the evening's enjoyment. The game was over after two hours of play and the floor was cleared for a dance. From that time until long after midnight there was no cessation in the endless succession of waltz and two step.

The affair was arranged by a joint committee composed of ladies and gentlemen now stopping at the hotel. The burden of preparing the arrangements fell on the committee of gentlemen. Samuel Garr was president of the committee, and proved a very able head. Joseph Naylor Jones was vice-president, Frederic L Kane, Jr., secretary, and Captain Jas. A. Snyder, treasurer. S. B. Carson and F. D. Condit also lent efficient aid as members of the committee.

Mrs. Coleman was chairman of the ladies' committee, which proved a very satisfactory auxiliary to the other. She was well assisted by Miss Kane, Miss Garr, Mrs. F. D. Condit, Miss F. K. Misch and Mrs. Daniel Speyer. The decoration consisted of Captain James A. Snyder, chairman; Miss Snyder, Mrs. E. B. Cudlit, Mrs. F. D. Condit, Miss De Lareintzie and Mrs. S. B Carson

The prizes, which were unusually valuable, were displayed at the hotel previous to the game, and were distributed among the prize winners at the close of the contest.

The winners of ladies' prizes were: First, Miss Furze, purse and card case; second, Mrs Horsley Barker, lamp; third, Mrs. Jones, box of handkerchiefs; fourth, Miss Chevalier, bon bon dish; fifth, Miss Brown, Bohemia vase; sixth, Mrs. Baird, box of handkerchiefs; seventh, Miss Snyder, cut-glass bottle of perfume; eighth, Miss Wescous, Wedgewood plate; ninth, Mrs. Condit, pincushion and fan; tenth, Miss Lux, handkerchief box; eleventh, Miss Chevalier, workbasket; twelfth, Mrs. Kane, silver candlestick; thirteenth, Miss Overton, bottle of perfume; fourteenth, Mrs. Misch, pair of slippers. STATE COUNCILOR CAME UNAWARES.

Pleasant Surprise for the Members of Franklin Council Last Night.

The members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., enjoyed a treat Thursday by receiving a visit from State Councilor Luther L. Hansell, of Jersey City. Only a few of the members knew that he was coming, but the usual large attendance was present, not only surprising the chief officer, but the members themselves were agreeably surprised. Councilor Hansell gave the boys a good talk, that was both interesting and instructive. Later the members were given a chance of saying a few words, and everyone had a little to say of the good of the order.

The business of the evening was transacted in a thorough business-like manner, and the members were highly complimented by their State officer.

THE KENTUCKY GIRL.

She was bred in Old Kentucky,

But she wandered from the homestead,
And to Asbury she flew.
Here her breeding cut no caper,
For you'll find her on the Bowery,
In a "quick lunch," slinging hash.

Bit Gave Way in Horse's Mouth.

David S. Dunavan, foreman of Hose Co. No. 1, had a peculiar experience Saturday when on the way to the fire, accompanied by Burt Little. When opposite the hospital the bit gave way, allowing the headstall to slip back to the horse's neck. Fortunately the horse is well trained and at the word of command from his driver when he called sharply "whoa!" the faithful animal came to an abrupt stop.

Home From Central America.

J. J. Shafer, Burt Jacoby and his friend Mr. Spenser, have returned from Costa Rica, Central America, where they have been engaged in contract work. Mr. Jacoby says Costa Ricans are a shiftless class and that during the Spanish-American War their sympathies were with the Spaniards, although for business policy they assumed a neutral aspect.

May Be Made a National Bank.

It is reported in Perth Amboy that the old Union County Bank in Rahway, which is a State bank, is about to be changed into a National bank. The capital will be increased from $50,000 to $100,000.

MAY NAME BERGEN AS M'GILL'S SUCCESSOR.

If the Present Chancellor Has to Resign.

COULD HAVE IT BY ASKING.

LITTLE ELIZABETH LAWYER HAS THE NECESSARY QUALIFICATIONS.

He and Governor Voorhees Have Long Been Intimate—Frank Bergen Has Also Been Very Useful to Senator Kean—Chancellorship is a Seven Year Berth With $10,000 a Year—Some Other Facts.

If Chancellor McGill is compelled by reason of ill health to resign his place and Governor Voorhees is called upon to appoint his successor, it may not be Chief Justice Magie who will receive the appointment. There is another man in this State who can have the place for the asking and who, a quiet but defined rumor has it, is seriously considering the move should Chancellor McGill resign. That man is Frank Bergen, the well-known Elizabeth lawyer.

The Governor and Mr. Bergen have always been the closest of friends and allies. As the Governor often tells, they started together in a boarding house. Bergen, Voorhees says, did not go into politics while he did. The result, the Governor points out, is that he still lives in the boarding house while Bergen owns his own residence in the city and a country home as well. Mr. Bergen has never figured prominently in politics, but, in his own quiet way, he has been one of Senator John Kean's most able lieutenants. He would, therefore, undoubtedly have the latter's support for the Chancellorship, should he decide to ask for it.

With this strong backing and his intimacy with the Governor and the assistance he has rendered the latter, there isn't any doubt but that the little Elizabeth lawyer could have the appointment the moment he asked for it. Regarding his ability, there is no question of it. He is one of the smartest lawyers in the State and could fill the duties of chancellor very satisfactorily.

The only question is whether Mr. Bergen would wish to give up his lucrative practice. He has more than he can do at present. As Chancellor, he would have to give up all his private law business. The Chancellorship appointment is for seven years and carries with it a salary of $10,000 a year. The salary of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is the same while the other Justices of that court receive $9,000 a year.

DEATH OF A YOUNG WIFE.

Mrs. Nellie Voorhees Veitch Passed Away Friday Morning.

A telegram received Friday a. m. by relatives in this city announces the death of Mrs. Nellie Voorhees Veitch, wife of Charles Veitch, of Brooklyn, at the summer home of her father at Bergen Beach. Mrs. Veitch was the youngest daughter of William H. Voorhees, and was born in Plainfield, where she resided for many years. A little less than two years ago she was married to Mr. Veitch, who was a devoted husband, and their married life was very happy. All that medical skill could do to save her life was done, but the disease—kidney trouble—could not be stayed. Mr. Veitch is a clerk in the office of George Gould, in New York.

Burial in Plainfield

The body of Mrs. Nellie Voorhees Veitch, wife of Charles Veitch, who died at the home of her father, Wm. H. Voorhees, Bergen Beach, Friday morning, was brought to Plainfield and was interred in the family plot at Hillside cemetery. The funeral was held Sunday at 3 p. m. at Bergen Beach. Rev. A. H. Lewis, D D, met the sorrowing relatives and friends at the railroad station in Plainfield and accompanied them to the grave where he offered prayer and pronounced a benediction.

To Receive Dewey at the Eden Musee.

When Admiral Dewey reaches New York, he will find that no amusement place has taken so great preparation to welcome him as the Eden Musee. For weeks the artists have been at work making new groups and remodelling old groups. The Musee will present a military appearance. They have a peculiar way at the Musee of making a group prominent by giving it a peculiar position. This will be done with the host of army and navy groups in the Musee for the celebration. There will be lots of other groups but the general impression will be that everything represents the army and navy. All the heroes of both will be represented. Some of the battleships will be shown in sections with paintings in the background to give effect, while the stars and stripes will be everywhere. In addition the Cinematograph will exhibit war views every hour and if Admiral Dewey visits the Musee he will have an opportunity of seeing familiar scenes in and around Manila. The Neopolitan Orchestra will present patriotic airs and sing patriotic songs both afternoon and evening.

ELECTRICITY LOOSE; KNOCKS DOWN HORSES.

William Henderson, Clerk, Received a Severe Shock.

HE STEPPED IN THE MUD.

CURRENT ESCAPED FROM WIRES OF ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY.

Insulation Rubbed Off Against Wet Tree—Current Ran Over Guy Wire to Iron Pole and Thence to the Ground—Mac. Donald's Horses Felt it First—Truckman Summers' Horses Knocked Down.

The electricity ran away at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Front street Thursday and managed to upset both men and horses. All escaped serious injury. It was rather exciting, however, until the cause of the strange happenings was found out.

Four wires of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company pass along the southern side of Front street, just west of Watchung avenue. They carry the alternating current of 1,000 volts which that company furnishes for power and interior lighting. In one of the trees near the corner one of these wires has rubbed on a limb so long that the insulation has been entirely rubbed off. A little further down the tree one of the wire guys, that supports the iron electric light pole near by, has cut deeply into the bark. It is supposed that the current passed down the tree, which was very wet by reason of the heavy shower, and then along the wire guy and down the pole to the earth. The street was wet and muddy and probably carried the escaping current to the trolley rail and thus back to the power house.

The first to make the discovery of the runaway electric current was a horse to one of the grocery wagons of J. F. MacDonald. As the horse came around the corner it stumbled and nearly fell, and apparently went lame.

When a second horse belonging to Grocer MacDonald did the same thing, and went through even wilder movements, Wilbur Henderson, one of the clerks in MacDonald's store, wondered. About 10 o'clock the two-horse truck belonging to A. B. Summers, driven by Summers, himself, came along. They turned the corner and crossed the fated spot. Both horses were thrown.

Henderson decided to investigate. When he stepped in the mud near by he received a severe shock that nearly knocked him off his feet and caused him to make a spring in the air. After he recovered from the immediate effects, he piled barrels around the place to prevent further accidents.

As the tree and pole dried the force of the current became perceptably weaker. The street railway company was notified and sent linemen to the scene. Meantime it was discovered that the stray current belonged to the electric light company. The leak was stopped in the afternoon.

TRINITY DID NOT GO.

EXCURSION WAS POSTPONED ON ACCOUNT OF THE RAIN.

The Train and Several Hundred of the Excursionists Showed Up, But Committee Decided to Postpone It.

Several hundred wet and bedraggled would-be excursionists wended their way homeward Thursday They braved the falling rain and the promise of more and appeared at the North Avenue station at the appointed hour of 8 o'clock when the Trinity Reformed church Excursion was to have started for Asbury Park. But the excursion didn't start. As one of the excursionists remarked, they couldn't be expected to swim all the way there and after they arrived as well. Nevertheless, there was quite a number who ventured out with the intention of going if the train did.

The railroad officials did their part and the train was there twenty minutes before the hour. It lay on the siding until the excursion committee held a hurried conference and decided that it was no day for an excursion to the seashore. The decision was reached shortly before 8 o'clock, and the railroad officials and crowd were informed that the excursion was postponed indefinitely.

Everybody knew it was no kind of a day for such an outing but there was a chorus of disappointed "ahs" at the news. A heavy downfall of rain put an end to such remarks, however, and the would-be excursionists in their white gowns and best clothes took shelter under convenient roofs until the worst of the rain was over and they could wade homeward without being swept away by the torrents that at times roared through the main thoroughfares.

The contract to build a stone and iron bridge over the brook between Garwood and Cranford has been awarded to John M. Ledley of Westfield. The bridge is built to accomodate the electric railway.

TO RECOMMEND FOR THE PORTO RICANS.

Dr. Carroll's Report is Being Rapidly Finished.

FOR THE PRESIDENT'S USE.

NO DOUBT ABOUT THE ABILITY OF THE ISLANDERS.

Commissioner Says That He Found Every Person Approached Ready and Willing to Aid in Securing Material for the Report—To Report a Territorial Government for the Islanders.

At his headquarters in the Hand building on Watchung avenue, Dr. H. K. Carroll, United States Commissioner to Porto Rico, together with his staff, is busily preparing his report to be submitted to President McKinley before Congress meets.

The report will be a voluminous one. The Commissioner made extensive researches into every department, examining bankers, farmers, merchants, artisans and officials, and secured valuable information. He also made a complete and accurate census of the island and of the different races that inhabit it. This he has compiled in a systematic and convenient form, something that has not been done before in Porto Rico.

The Commissioner found every person he approached exceedingly willing to assist him in his efforts to secure material for his report. He made an exhaustive inquiry into the municipal governments, and examined the budgets in the various districts. In every case he found that the Mayors and Councils desired municipal autonomy. His report states that under the Spanish system the people are unable to do anything without prospects to the insular government at San Juan, which itself exerts a powerful initiative, and proposes or orders enterprises, which sometimes do not meet with the popular approval. Few cities have any debt, except small deficiencies in current accounts. The municipalities include not only cities and towns proper, but rural districts approaching in extent the counties of the United States.

The Commissioner states that he found planters at one time complaining of the lack of money in the island and of the difficulty in harvesting. The natives insist that merchants take unfair advantage of them, lending money at high rates and taking crops in payment, and allowing such prices as they see fit. The lowest rate of interest found by the Commissioner was 8 per cent., and very little money is lent at that. Ordinarily, it is 12 to 18 per cent., and sometimes 20 to 24 per cent., that is demanded. The farmers believe that the only way out of this difficulty is to be able to borrow money, on long terms of twenty or thirty years, at not exceeding 7 or 8 per cent. They confidently expect American capital to come to their relief. If this resource fails them, the outlook will be gloomy.

An interesting feature of the report is that devoted to visits among the laboring classes. The Commissioner visited their huts in the poor quarters and in the cities. He saw them in the fields and received deputations of artisans. Though they are in wretched circumstances, they are cheerful and much less concerned than merchants, bankers, and planters about the future. Their clothing is of the most meagre description, the young children going naked. It is estimated by the shoe-dealers on the island that only 200,000 pairs of shoes are required for the whole population of 900,000 persons, per annum. The report cites that the people are industrious and that travelers see few loungers. The people work hard and continuously, and it is wonderful how much they can endure, especially when it is considered how small an amount of food they are able to obtain.

Of the island Trades Unions visited by the Commissioner, nine of the eleven are composed of colored men, who maintain the unions for self-improvement. They learn to read and write and are anxious to increase the knowledge already obtained. Under the Spanish Government they were not allowed to hold meetings, and any attempt at a strike was severely punished.

There seems to be no doubt that Commissioner Carroll will recommend a territorial form of government for the island. He is impressed with the ability of the natives, and feels confident that if properly started they will be able to manage themselves and their own affairs with justice and profit. The report will probably be completed before December.

BURGLARS VISITED A DUNELLEN FAMILY

Broke Into Gus Warden's House and Stole $58.

ALSO ENTERED A STORE.

CARRIED OFF CONTENTS OF TWO DINNER PAILS.

Acted in a Bold Manner in the House of Augustus Ward n, Where it is Thought That They Were After the Pension Money of Mr. Smith—The Check Had Not Yet Been Cashed and They Did Not Disturb it.

Burglars visited Dunellen early Monday morning. They are not believed to be professional cracksmen but local "talent," familiar with the citizens and their affairs.

The first house visited was that of Augustus Warden on Prospect street. Entrance was effected by raising an L window in an outside kitchen apartment.

The burglars then lighted a lamp and went up stairs and proceeded to help themselves to the cash in Mr. Warden's clothing. Securing also the trousers of Robert B. Smith, an uncle the burglars carried them to the foot of the stairway and rifled the pockets. In Mr. Warden's trousers they found a roll containing $33, while in Mr. Smith's pockets was but $26. The burglar was generous enough to leave one dollar, which they placed in the pocket of Mr. Warden's waistcoat. They also carried away Mr. Warden's silver watch. A check for $200—Mr. Smith's pension—was not taken.

The robbery is believed to have taken place about 3 o'clock, as about that hour Mrs. Warden awoke and thought she heard a noise. It is believed that the intruders realizing that Mrs. Warden was awake suddenly left the house without visiting the sleeping apartments of Miss Lillian Warden, where they could have secured a gold watch and other valuables that were conspicuous about the room.

The store of Mrs. David Kuldosche of Lincoln avenue was also entered early Monday, presumably by the same party who entered Mrs. Warden's house. The only thing disturbed at Mrs. Kuldosche's was two pails containing the dinners of her two sons which were in the dining room. The thief or thieves carried off the contents of the dinner pails.

Chief Grant visited the scene of the burglaries this morning. He is of the opinion that the Warden house was entered by parties who are familiar with the premises and affairs of the Warden family. It was known to several residents of the borough that Mr. Smith received his pension check last week. Chief Grant is of the opinion that the burglars believed that he had got it cashed and that they would secure the cash.

SAID IT WAS ALL FIXED.

ROUNDSMAN FLYNN TOLD OF HACKMAN BERRY'S BOAST.

The City Judge Denied 'Twas Fixed And Fined the Offending Hackman $1 for His Trouble, Which was Paid.

It was the turn of Hackman Charles Berry this Tuesday He came before City Judge Runyon and explained that he had carried a passenger out to Hillside cemetery yesterday morning so that he was unable to appear in court when told. He pleaded guilty to the charge of violating the hack ordinance.

According to the statement of Roundsman Flynn, Berry was tossing a silver dollar in front of the station Monday afternoon when one of the other hackmen told him that he had better take care of the dollar for he would need it in the morning. Berry said that he had fixed it with the court all right. The hackmen declared that he had heard the remark made.

The Judge was not pleased with remarks of such nature and was frank in telling Berry so. He further explained that Berry's actions had not in all been satisfactory and that the dollar was needed in the coffers of the city. Berry paid it.

Berry denounced the general management of affairs at the station and declared that certain other hackmen could violate the ordinance with impunity while he was held to a strict observance of it. The Judge reminded him that he had the right to make a complaint at any time.

Changes to be Made in the Carrier Force of Local Postoffice

Commencing with September 1st, the local letter-carriers will have different routes. The work of redistricting the city has not yet been completed, but will be in a week or two. The change as proposed will be one of great advantage to everyone in the city and borough and should meet with the approval of all. Postmaster Bird will do his best to give general satisfaction, and if he fails to please all he should not be blamed by the public.

Bennett has been made general freight agent for Elizabeth, and will have charge of the freight business done in the city by the Central Railroad.

Funeral of Little Bessie.

The funeral services of Bessie May, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Addis, of East Second street, who died while in New York State on a pleasure trip, were held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the house. The service there was private on account of Mr. Addis being quarantined for scarlet fever. At Hillside cemetery a longer service was held, conducted by Dr. Rodman. The interment will not take place until Mr. Addis can leave the house and be present.

A BRIDE FROM THE WEST

MARRIAGE OF N. E. LEWIS AND MISS EUNICE M. MERCHANT.

The Groom a Valued Employe of the Pond Tool Machine Company—Have Returned and will Reside in This City.

The St. Joseph (Mich.) Saturday Herald printed the following account of the marriage of Miss Eunice Maria Merchant, formerly a teacher in the public schools of this city, and Nathan Edward Lewis, also of this city.

"On Tuesday afternoon Nathan Edward Lewis, of Plainfield, N. J., and Miss Eunice Maria Merchant were married at the home of the bride's parents, on Main street, in this city, Rev. Thomas B. McRoberts, pastor of the Congregational church, tying the knot. The couple appeared in traveling costume. Miss Merchant is the eldest daughter of the proprietor of the Saturday Herald. Her birthplace is Benton Harbor, but she grew from the cradle to womanhood in St. Joseph, and though favored with many true friends on both sides of the river, as well as friends elsewhere, all of whom she holds in the highest esteem, it was her wish and that of the groom for a simple, quiet home wedding, and so with one exception those present at the ceremony comprised only the immediate members of the family. There was none the less happiness, however, surrounding the event, and after light refreshments were partaken of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis, accompanied by Miss Grace M. Merchant, left on the 5 p. m. G. & M. steamer for Chicago, whence after a pleasant visit with relatives and friends there, they start to-day for their new home in New Jersey.

"Mr. Lewis has worked his own way upward, securing his education at Ann Arbor, in this State, and at the Kansas Agricultural College, where he graduated, and now holds a responsible and lucrative position as draughtsman in a large iron works establishment at Plainfield. He is of quiet disposition, well-spoken of and where he is known is much esteemed as a man. Miss Merchant, after graduating with honors from the St. Joseph High School in 1887, took a Kindergarten Course in the Alma, Mich., College and graduated, since when she has taught in the Kindergarten department of the schools at Alma, St. Joseph, Sheboygan, Wis., and during the past school year she filled the position at Plainfield so acceptably that she was re-engaged for another year at a liberal increase in salary.

"Mr. and Mrs. Lewis enter upon their new life together under a cloudless sky and generally favorable auspices, and all their circle of acquaintances will wish them true happiness and the full realization of their fondest hopes as the future slowly unfolds to them."

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis returned to this city Monday. They will begin housekeeping at once.

NOW REGULAR PASTOR.

REV. G. M. SHOTT PERMANENTLY ENGAGED FOR THE PLAINS

Action Taken Monday by the Board of Trustees—Rev. Mr. Shott Announces the Conversion of an Italian Youth.

At the close of the regular morning service at the Baptist church, Scotch Plains, Sunday, a business meeting was held for the purpose of extending a call to Mr. Shott to become the pastor of the church. Dr. F. W. Westcott, president of the board of trustees, called the meeting to order and stated that the six months call of Mr. Shott to the pastorate of the church was about to expire and it would be necessary for the church to take some action in the matter. George E. Hall, of Fanwood, made a speech in which he said it seemed to be the work of God the coming of Gideon M. Shott. During his work of the six months he had shown himself the right man in the right place and had endeared himself to the hearts of members and he moved that he be called as the regular pastor. This was seconded and unanimously carried.

Mr. Shott, in accepting the call, said: "It does not seem peculiar that the six months passed have resulted as they have. It has been God's work. From now on day to day I will be your pastor and you who have endeared yourself to me will be my people and may God bless the union. We may have our little differences, but true love does not always run smooth and sometimes it is all the sweeter for that."

Mr. Shott then said the first word he wished to speak about as the regular pastor was the work of the Italian mission connected with the church, and said he would like to bring before the church an application for church membership from one of the converts of the mission. It was decided to accept the young man into the membership of the church after baptism.

Congressman Daly, of Hoboken, said yesterday that he had not received an invitation to attend the meeting of Bryan Democrats at Philadelphia September 24.

WONDERFUL LIQUID AIR.

A Discovery Which Will Likely Prove Extremely Beneficial to the Entire Race.

SINGULAR EXPERIMENTS.

The Strange Substance Seems to Reverse the Ordinary Phenomena of Nature—Water Boils on Ice.

Has a Temperature of 312 Degrees Below Zero—More Explosive Than Nitro-Glycerine—Makes a Hot Piece of Steel Burn Like a Match—It Freezes Mercury Into a Solid Metal.

Charles E. Tripler made the great discovery last year that air could be reduced to a liquid as easily as water could be frozen by artificial means. Liquid air at once became the marvel of science. Its properties are so wonderful as to be almost past belief. Liquid air has a temperature of 312 degrees below zero. It is more explosive than nitro-glycerine when confined. It is as harmless as water when not kept under pressure. In color it is a steely, transparent blue. Though so intensely cold, it boils without being near a fire. It makes a piece of steel burn as brightly as a sulphur match.

Mr. Tripler made many experiments in his laboratory in West Eighty-ninth street, New York. One of the most surprising was the burning of a piece of steel in a cup of ice. The inventor first made a cup of ice. He did this by taking a tin shaker such as drug clerks use in making a milk shake. He filled this with liquid air, dipped it into a jar of water and held it there for twenty seconds. In that short time, one-third of a minute, the liquid air caused the water to freeze half an inch thick all about the tin beaker.

Mr. Tripler then poured out the liquid air, removed the tin beaker and held in his hand the perfectly shaped cup of ice which had been formed.

"Now, I will show you a strange thing," said Mr. Tripler. He filled the cup of ice with liquid air. Then, taking a piece of steel wire, one end of which had been heated red hot over a gas flame, he plunged the hot end into the inconceivably cold liquid air. Instantly it flamed up as if it were a powder fuse and burned until the whole length which had been dipped in the liquid air was consumed as if it had been a match.

This curious experiment is explained on the theory that there is so much oxygen condensed in liquid air that it can burn metals as easily as wood is ignited in ordinary atmosphere.

Another strange sight is a kettle incrusted in ice, which is boiling over a gas flame. The explanation is that the kettle is filled, not with water, but with liquid air. The vapor which pours out of the nozzle like steam is the liquid air expanding into a fog and then becoming natural air.

LIQUID AIR BOILING ON ICE.

Mr. Tripler then made an experiment which he described as "boiling water by the aid of liquid air." He poured a pint of liquid air into a large two-gallon glass jar of water. The liquid air being colder than the water floated on top like foam.

A singular freak of liquid air was then displayed. Drops of it, snow white because frozen, were dropped into the jar and then arose to the surface again. This was the nitrogen of the liquid air trying to escape. The experimenter placed his hand over the top of the jar and caused the vapor to spurt out in any direction he desired.

The most common operations in handling liquid air are calculated to excite wonder. The mere act of taking it out of a vessel with a dipper causes a furious display of vapor. The air all about is made distressingly cold. The reason is that as the liquid air expands into natural air it absorbs the heat from the surrounding atmosphere.

Its vapor is only its transition stage. It is then just midway between the liquid and gaseous state. This vapor can be made to produce a pretty laboratory geyser that spurts up and subsides with the regularity of volcanic geyser springs in different parts of the world.

Yet this mysterious chemical fluid that seems so harmless and entertaining is more powerful than nitro-glycerine when confined. A test of its explosive qualities showed this.

A handful of cotton waste was first saturated with machine oil. It was next rolled in liquid air and then placed loosely inside an inch and a quarter iron pipe, two feet long. This was in turn placed inside of a heavy six-inch iron pipe, which was two feet eight inches long. The ends of both the pipes were left open. A fuse was attached to the ball of oil and liquid air soaked cotton waste in the smaller pipe. The precaution was taken of preparing the experiment in an open lot. The fuse was then fired. The explosion which followed tore two big holes through the thick outer pipe. While the smaller inside pipe was blown into bits, except one twisted end four inches long.

Liquid air does many other curious things. It freezes mercury into a solid metal that looks like lead.

Alcohol, which is used for measuring the coldest arctic temperature it is commonly known, cannot be frozen. But its freezing point, 200 degrees below zero, is easily reached and surpassed by liquid air, with its temperature of 312 below zero.

Mr. Tripler suggests that it would furnish the best kind of smokeless powder for our war ships. It could be made on board just as it might be needed. Magazines filled with dangerous explosives would no longer be necessary.

INDIAN TORTURED.

"Doc Obija" Tells of Horrible Treatment Inflicted Upon a "Bad" Medicine Man.

This is the story told by "Doc Obija," a reliable Navajo Indian, of the horrible tortures his tribe inflicted upon Bine Nimalgo, medicine man and sorcerer:

"When the spot-sickness (small-pox) came upon the Navajos they knew that there was magic. That was why our men were dying and our young women's faces were pitted.

"Bine Nimalgo was a bad Indian. He deserved to die. His medicine was bad medicine. We had long known that; this was only why he had been driven out by the tribe long ago and lived away from the tribe. He had his revenge.

"It is not true that the sick went to him to be cured. They would not do that. He did not cure people, but made them ill. They feared the bad medicine.

"Bine Nimalgo was very strong and very wicked. He had a magic bow and arrow, with which he could shoot from very far away the bad medicines and other bad things into his enemies, and he hated everybody because he was bad.

"He alone had the bow and arrow. Many had tried to find them, but they could not. He had well hid them. There was bad magic in the cache, so that no one found it. Only at night he shot the arrows and we fell ill.

"It was this that made hundreds lie down, and many of them died. When they felt the bad medicine in them they covered their faces with their blankets and sat waiting. They died bravely.

"We could not find the bows and arrows and the tribe was dying. Soon there would be no one left. And the Navajos are greatest of all the Indian people. This is known.

"This is why they went to the hogan (hut) of Bine Nimalgo. There were seven squaws and five fighting men who went. I do not know their names, but they were all Navajos. They did not fear death for themselves, they went for the tribe.

"I have said that the angry one was far off. The chosen twelve went to his place. I do not know their names.

"They reached the hogan and danced the death dance a long time; they tied Bine to a tree, that he might see the dance. It was a dance for him.

"They took Bine Nimalgo how one by one he had slain the young men and the babies. And one by one as they told him this they broke the bones in him—broke them in short pieces, beginning with the little bones —and after that the great ones that do not break easily.

"He lived long, for he was a very strong man. The bad medicine made him strong.

"They took off his scalp, for he was an enemy. They cut off his ears. Where he has gone they will know him by these signs. I think they cut away his arms and legs. They danced the death dance and sang to him his bad deeds while they did these things.

"I do not know the names of the twelve who did this.

"When they were weary they fired twelve bullets into the body.

"Then they put the things that held the body to the tree, and they put Bine into the hogan. His legs and arms and all the parts of his body they put in together. They set fire to the hogan, singing and dancing about it, and it burned very fast. The fire ate up all the bad medicine. The ashes were clean.

"This is the true story. Whatever else has been told is a lie."

Doc Obija was with difficulty induced to tell his story. A small bribe that looks large to an Indian was the inducement finally offered. He believed firmly that the sorcerer was guilty and his punishment just.

Of course, Obija, like all the rest of the Navajos, knew who the guilty twelve were, but he will never reveal their names.

The crime was committed in what is called the Canyon country, Arizona. Officers went out from Holbrook as soon as they heard of it, but their visit was perfunctory. They knew very well that no Indian is in the least likely to turn informer.

Monstrous Scrap Book.

What is beyond doubt the largest scrap book in the world has just been completed for Dr. Peter Fahrney, of Chicago.

The book, which weighs a trifle over 1,000 pounds, is full bound, with marble edges. It is a handsomely finished blank book magnified many times. The boards are fifty inches from top to bottom and thirty inches wide. The book measures from outside hubs to front of board forty-two and one-half inches; the hubs are one and seven-eighths inches high; the title panels are nine and seven eighths by twenty-four and five-eighths inches. The sides covers of the book have sunken panels five-eighths of an inch deep. The back of the book contains 1,000 leaves, but every tenth leaf has been cut out, leaving the stub two inches wide in order to allow for the pasting.

The boards are made up of trunk boards combined with wood, and are split like ordinary blank book boards; the flap has a stiffener of iron, and the back is made of steel and tarboard. The material used in the book is as follows: Three side cowhide, one bundle No. 6 trunk board, one bundle No. 12, 20x28, cloth board; one bundle straw board for hubs, and two tarboards for back; for end papers twelve sheets marbled paper and yards of cloth.

Printing With Movable Types.

It seems quite surprising that the ancient Romans did not acquire the art of printing with movable types. Instead of printing books, they wrote it. They had wooden blocks carved with words in reverse, by means of which they stamped these words on pottery, while the latter was as yet unbaked and soft. Incidentally it may be mentioned that they knew the modern method of mending broken pots by means of rivets, and many pieces of pottery thus restored have been dug up in ancient Rome there was one daily newspaper, which was written entirely by hand, and circulated in the Roman Senate had a publication which corresponds to the Congressional Record, and which was one of the daily proceedings of that important legislative body. It likewise was written by hand. Speaking of baked clay, one might mention the fact that the little boys of Rome 2,000 years and more ago were accustomed to play knuckle-down with marbles of that material, just as children do now.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to prescribe the Ripans Tabule. which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sales of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but my sons Ripans Tabules recommended it very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found them to be what I had my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them for twice that if it were my last dollar." As the result of this letter of interview there was present two daughters who specially objected to their giving a testimonial which should parade the name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other cases like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case may be a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

WORKINGMEN WILL NOT FOUND A HOME

Mayor Drake's Philanthropy Goes Amiss.

THE PROJECT TURNED DOWN

WARM DEBATE OVER IT IN STATE FEDERATION OF UNIONS.

Arguments That the Proposed Institution Could Not Be Conducted Successfully—The Proposition of Mayor Drake Rejected By the Delegates—The Vote Against Was Overwhelming.

Silas D. Drake's philanthropic scheme of establishing a Home for Aged Union Workingmen at Lincoln has been killed by the annual congress of the Federation of Trades and Labor Unions, which was asked to stand as sponsor for the project. The closing act of the congress of labor union delegates in East Orange was to vote down the movement to father the scheme evolved from the original brain of Mayor Drake.

The opposition to the plan was led by Ferdinand C. Lampe, of the Newark Typographical Union, while Henry J. Gottlob, also a member of that union and chairman of the executive board of the Federation, stood sponsor for the scheme.

When Delegate Lampe got the floor to speak on the home proposition, Delegate Gottlob offered a resolution to accept Mr. Drake's offer, and providing that a board of seven trustees be appointed with power to further the scheme, but not to make any contract or incur any obligation involving any union or the Federation financially.

Mr. Lampe said: "No doubt the Federation would receive the moral support of 50,000, or more, but moral support is not going to pay the expenses of running a home for union men. A fact not to be overlooked is that the Federation has no guarantee of a permanent income. Any union now affiliated may withdraw, and the regular running expenses then must be borne by those remaining.

"The building," continued Delegate Comes, "would cost $20,000. According to the offer that was made to us we are to get 100 building lots at Lincoln, and we have got to sell them for $200 apiece to get even. I don't believe anyone is so charitable as to give away $20,000 without expecting some return for it. Then we are supposed to take eighty shares in something at $100 a share. Where is the Federation going to get $8,000 for that? If you decide to build this home you may get the cellar dug, but I doubt if the foundation will ever be started. It will remain a hole in the ground and a monument to folly and nonsense."

"While I believe the people who are advocating this plan are sincere," said Delegate Gehling, "they have been misled. This man Drake is a landshark, and if the metal polishers and buffers were not in his power today I'd give facts and names. He is the agent of the land company that owns Lincoln, and he gets the first month's rent of every house there. The consequence is that the people are kept moving from house to house every second month. Our union had this same scheme saddled on us. We went so far as to buy land, and it's a white elephant for us."

Mr. Gottlob objected to the statements and said he didn't believe th em He added that they should have been made while Mr. Drake was present at the secret session in the afternoon.

When a vote was taken on the proposition to accept Mr. Drake's offer it was lost. Only seven votes were recorded in favor of the plan and there were twenty-seven against it.

Friends of Mrs. Rockafellow took an interest in her and after securing the admission of two of the children to the Children's Home, they were able to get her into the hospital. Overseer of the Poor Hansen was sought and he has made provision for the infant baby so that he will be taken care of properly until the mother can recover her health and strength.

Mr. Rockafellow has been unfortunate lately in losing his position owing to a discontinuance of the business, but it is understood that he will soon secure work again, and in a short time will be able to continue housekeeping.

PLAINFIELDERS ARE THERE.

DR. LEWIS A COMMANDING FIGURE AMONG THE DELEGATES.

Ashaway, R. I., August 23.—The ninety seventh anniversary o. the Seventh-Day Baptist General Conference and of the societies connected therewith opened Wednesday in this place. Up to last evening 430 names of intending visitors had been received by the people in charge.

There is a large delegation present from Plainfield, including the well known Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, whose commanding figure attracts great admiration. The doctor has allowed his flowing beard to be slightly shorn and the change was so great that many failed to recognize him at first. However, he will take an active part in the conference as usual, to the profit and edification of all present.

The principal meetings are being held in a large tent that will accommodate about 1,200 people, and other meetings will be held in smaller tents, the church and a schoolhouse.

At this afternoon's session A. W. Vars, of Dunellen, will present a report as secretary of the executive committee, and Joseph A. Hubbard, of Plainfield, as a trustee of the memorial board, will also report. At the service tomorrow evening Rev. Dr. A. E. Main, of Plainfield, will take part.

At the session Saturday afternoon D. E. Titsworth, of Plainfield, will give an address on the subject, "The Importance of Adult Attendance at Sabbath-school," and later in the afternoon Miss Ida Spicer, of Plainfield, will conduct the Junior Christian Endeavor service.

Sunday morning J. D. Spicer, of Plainfield, will read the report of the treasurer, to be followed by a report of the corresponding secretary, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of Plainfield.

Monday afternoon next Dr. Main will again take part, and in the evening of the same day Rev. Dr. L. E. Livermore will deliver the closing sermon and conduct the conference meeting. The conference will close on Monday evening, and the programme evidences many bright and helpful discourses, addresses and reports throughout.

THE TREES WANT A WASHING.

That is the Way Orange People are Advised to Deal With a New Pest.

Much uneasiness has been felt in the Oranges over the recent appearance of a new insect, which attacks maple trees, forming on the under side of the leaves a glutinous, sticky mass, while the insects suck the sap from the leaves, causing them to dry up and drop off. Specimens have been sent to Professor John B. Smith, entomologist, at the New Jersey State Experimental Station at New Brunswick. Professor Smith states that the insect is the Psuedo Coccus Aceris, and that it is more disfiguring than permanently injurious to the trees. He states that arsenical and other medicated sprayings are of no value, but that the insects can be easily washed off and destroyed by a solid stream of water from a hose

Stopped the Service to Save His Apples.

Perth Amboy, Aug. 23.—In the middle of the service in the Polish Catholic church here yesterday, the eye of the pastor lighted on a quartette of boys who were rading an apple tree in the manse yard next door, and he stopped the service while he admonished them from the window in stentorian tones. Yesterday morning he secured a warrant for their arrest. The priest is Rev Steven Szyminowski. He was one of the first trustees of the Perth Amboy Savings Institution appointed after the defalcation of Cashier George M. Valentine rendered a reorganization necessary.

MRS EYLER ARRESTED; TRUSTEE COOK IS OUT.

Important Developments In Industrial School Affairs.

CHARGES AGAINST MATRON.

GOVERNOR IN A POSITION TO BRING ABOUT A REFORM.

Arthur Bishop, of Passaic, Made the Complaint Against Mrs. Eyler, and Unless She Produces a Doctor's Certificate She Will be Taken Before a Justice to Plead to the Charge.

Trenton, Aug. 23—A warrant was issued yesterday for the arrest of Matron Myrtle B. Eyler of the State Industrial School for Girls. Shortly afterward Trustee Ephraim Ferrau Cook tendered his resignation to Gov. Voorhees, and the Governor issued commissions to former Senator Judson Rue, Republican, and former Assemblyman Howell C. Stull, Democrat, of this city, as two of the new Board of Trustees of the institution.

Arthur Bishop, president of the Passaic County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, came here yesterday afternoon to make the criminal charges. After consulting a lawyer he went to the office of Justice of the Peace William S. Mills, intending to get a warrant based on the affidavit made by Sadie Wiesmann, of Passaic. He discovered that under the statute of limitations the complaint could not be taken, the alleged offence having been committed over two years ago. Mr. Bishop then went to the City Hospital to take an affidavit of Katie Barlow, who, it is alleged, is confined to the hospital as the result of the treatment received at the hands of the matron. Dr. Witte, the head physician, refused to let Mr. Bishop see the girl, saying that she was still in the custody of the State authorities. Dr. Witte has been a champion of the matron and testified in her favor at the investigation.

Mr. Bishop obtained a warrant on the strength of a previous statement made by the girl. The warrant charges that Mrs. Eyler compelled the girl to climb up and down three flights of stairs twenty-five times, after having previously confined her in a cell twenty-four hours. It charges that the cell was improperly ventilated, that the girl was deprived of proper food and drink, and that she was afterward imprisoned for two days in a room, "the windows and doors of which were secretly closed and fastened so as to exclude air, by reason whereof the physical health of the child was impaired to such an extent that she has since been and now is a patient in the City Hospital in Trenton."

The warrant was handed to Constable Brannin and will be served today. Unless the woman produces a doctor's certificate, she will be taken by the constable before Justice Mills to plead to the charge.

It is generally understood that Governor Voorhees requested the resignation of Trustee Cook, the latter having persistently asserted that he would not resign unless asked to do so.

YOUNG DESPERADOES PLY THEIR TRADE.

Frequent Robberies Reported at and Near Oak Tree.

VISITED HENRY C. MELICK.

RANSACKED HIS HOUSE DURING THE DAYTIME MONDAY.

Many Petty Thefts Reported From That Section—Tires Stolen Off John Osborne's Racing Sulkey—The Chicken Houses Suffered Much—Said to Meet in Woods Near Lehigh Valley Road.

A gang of young desperadoes have caused general alarm at Oak Tree and Avon Park by a series of depredations that have now continued for nearly a month. There have been a number of robberies of houses and hen roosts, and the desperadoes have been exceedingly bold in their operations. Their last act to be reported was the robbery of the home of Henry C. Melick on the "back road," which took place Monday.

Mr. Melick lives all alone, with only a young colored girl to look after the house. He is deaf and somewhat feeble. Sometime Monday the thieves visited the house and ransacked it, taking a shot-gun, some clothes and other articles that were found about the house.

They were evidently looking for money but failed to find any, although Mr. Melick is known as a wealthy man and is having large sums of money hidden away in the house.

One night last week, the pneumatic tires on a racing sulkey belonging to John Osborne, which was kept at the track at Avon Park, disappeared mysteriously, and the theft was charged to the mysterious gang that has been at work.

For a time, hardly a night passed that one of the chicken coops in the vicinity was not visited. Many of the fowls were lost. Now the owners are laying for the midnight vistants with guns.

So far there has been no clue to the identity of the desperadoes who have been operating there. It is supposed that they are young men who live in or near that vicinity. It is understood that they have a meeting place in the heart of the woods just beyond the Lehigh Valley crossing on Park avenue. Last night, wheelmen passing there saw several figures plunge into the underbrush and afterwards heard strange hootings like that of an owl.

WILSON WASN'T TO BLAME.

So Mayor Rockfellow Dismissed the Complaint Against Him.

The cows belonging to William A. Wilson, the West Third street grocer, did trespass on the lawn of Mrs. Green, of Lee place. So the testimony brought out in the city court Tuesday afternoon made it apparent. It was also evident, however, that Wilson wasn't to blame in the matter. He had the cows all penned up safely enough at night but some other cows came along and his cows charged at the fence and broke it down and went forth to seek advanture with the other cows.

Mayor Rockfellow, who acted as local magistrate in the absence of City Judge Runyon, decided that there was nothing the matter with Wilson personally and so discharged him. Mrs. Green will probably bring a civil suit for trespass.

COL. FULLER TO SPEA

Notable Jerseymen Will be at Business Men's Clambake.

Senator Charles A. Reed received a telegram Tuesday from Col. Fuller of Jersey City, a member of the State Sewerage Commission, replying to his invitation to be present at the clambake to be given by the Plainfield Advancement Association next week Wednesday afternoon at the Mt. Park Inn. Mr. Fuller says that he will be present at the bake and make a speech.

The committee in charge of the bake wish that all persons who have received tickets will make some response so that they will know who will be present. They have received word from Somerville that a number from that place will attend.

Bottle Broke and Cut Child.

The little two-year-old daughter of Melville Meeker, 134 East Front street, met with a peculiar accident Wednesday. The youngster was toddling about holding her nursing bottle in her arms. She stumbled and fell. The bottle was broken by the fall, and one of the broken pieces of glass cut a deep gash in the child's right forearm. Dr. Probasco was summoned and dressed the wound.

CORN CROP TO BE BIG.

YIELD IN NEW JERSEY EXPECTED TO BE LARGER THAN IN YEARS.

Growing and Maturing Crops are Reported to be in Excellent Condition in All Sections of This State.

New Brunswick, August 23.—The weekly bulletin of the State Experiment Station gives the following crop and weather report:

The growing and maturing crops are reported to be in excellent condition, although the excessive cloudiness has not been favorable to the latter. Corn has continued to gain in points, so much so, that many correspondents predict that the yield will be larger than for a number of years past.

Pasture and meadow fields are very much improved; in some sections the second crop of clover is now being harvested. Fall plowing is progressing, and in some places nearing completion. A large acreage of grass and clover has been seeded during the week in the Southern section. Orchard fruits are doing better since the rains; the apples will be good in quality; pears very good, peaches fair and generally understood, owing to drought early in the season; grapes are very promising, and the yield will be unusually large. Cranberries are not so promising; in some bogs in Atlantic county, the grasshoppers and crickets have destroyed the entire crop.

Plainfield's report is as follows: Notwithstanding the lack of rain during the week, all crops are in a good condition; peaches now coming into market are small; plenty of plums and apples; pears not so plentiful; rainfall, trace.

PICNIC AND ENTERTAINMENT.

Afternoon Pleasure and Evening Enjoyment of the Germans.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the German Reformed church held a picnic and entertainment Tuesday afternoon and evening for the benefit of the Sunday-school of the church. The picnic was held in the woods back of the church and was largely attended by the young people, all kinds of games were played and a general good time had. In the evening the entertainment was given in the church and there was a very large attendance. The programme opened with a comedy entitled, "Two Beds in One Room," which was given by Mr. Gerhardt, A. Wolf and Mr. Hoffman. This was followed with a tableau entitled "The Guardian Angle," which was given by Miss Augusta Myer and Miss Paulina Schmidt.

The next number was a violin solo by Tony Gaub, followed with a vocal duet by Miss Myer and Miss Claus. The following tableau called forth the greatest enthusiasm. It was entitled "The Army and Navy, or the Crowning of the Victor, Admiral Dewey." Mr. Randolph took the part of Dewey with great credit, and Miss Louisa Caspar represented "Columbia," while Miss Margaret Ainer represented Porto Rico. The other participants were Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Vaugh and Mr. Gerhardt.

The next tableau was entitled "The Departure for Manila," and those who took part in the above tableau were in this one with the addition of Karl Hauser. The last number was a fine recitation by A. Wolf. Everyone present thoroughly enjoyed the entertainment which netted $45 for the Sunday-school.

Miss Amy Cain, of Raritan, who has been visiting Dr. and Mrs. J. Hervey Buchanan, of Duer street, has returned home.

Lindley M. Hillman, of Sherman avenue, is carrying his arm in a sling. He dislocated it Saturday afternoon while playing golf.

The engagement of Miss Laura B. Estappey and Ernest L. Dayton, of Hoboken, is announced. Both are well-known in this city.

John Butler and Norman K. Barnes, of Spooner avenue, are spending a few days on Staten Island, where they are trying their luck at fishing.

William VanEps, of Park avenue, has returned from New York, where he went to have an operation performed on his eyes. The operation was very successful.

Rev. Herbert F. Randolph, of Orange, formerly of the borough, who preached last Sunday at Grace M. E. church, has returned home. He was the guest of Hon. H. K. Carroll, of Westervelt avenue, while here.

M. D. Brown and family, of East Fourth street, will move in a few days to Washington avenue, near Front street.

Mrs. Kate Marsh and Miss Ada Marsh, of Franklin place, have returned home after a sojourn at Mt. Pocono.

LEHIGH VALLEY MAY BUILD A SHORT CUT.

Will Leave Present Line at Bound Brook.

STATION NEAR PLAINFIELD.

WILL REACH JERSEY CITY BY WAY OF THE ORANGES.

Two Routes Proposed—One Goes From Bound Brook to New Orange the Other Nearly to Jersey City—The Company Will Apply to the Legislature for Condemnation Proceedings.

The officials of the Lehigh Valley Railroad have had under consideration for some time two "cut-offs" that will reduce the length of their present line to Jersey City by several miles and will pass through a much better territory than their present line. Surveys have been made for both of the proposed lines. Both have Bound Brook for the starting point and pass quite near Plainfield, although not actually within the city limits.

From an authoritive source comes the statement that the company will ask the next Legislature for right of way over one of these lines.

The first scheme was to provide a route from Bound Brook connecting the present line again near New Orange. The line after leaving Bound Brook was to follow the mountain, passing through North Plainfield, and on past Westfield and Elizabeth to join the main line again. This route was to be used for the fast passenger trains as well as in giving a local service to Plainfield and North Plainfield. The Lehigh Valley was bound by agreement with the Jersey Central not to enter Plainfield. North Plainfield is not Plainfield, however, and is even in a different county.

The second plan which, it is said, the company now has under active consideration, is to run an entire new line from Bound Brook nearly to Jersey City reducing the distance from twenty-eight miles to nineteen miles. It would leave the present line at Bound Brook as the other and cross the first mountain range either by the way of Chimney Rock Notch or Springdale where the mountain is lowest and would only necessitate a short tunnel to reach the Washington valley. The line would then follow that valley through Warrenville and Washingtonville and on past Glenside Park to the end of the range near Springfield. The course of the railroad would then be directed through the Oranges and North Newark, competing with the D. L. and W. there. Just outside of Jersey City the route would connect with the present line of the Lehigh into that city.

At present the suburban traffic of the Lehigh Valley amounts to very little. With a chance at the patronage of Plainfield and the Oranges, it could be greatly increased.

The statement comes from one who ought to know that the railroad company will ask the next Legislature this winter to grant the right of way and enable them to start condemnation proceedings to secure it. Such action would be a very important happening in this part of Jersey.

McKINLEY GOING TO LONG BRANCH.

With the Vice President He Will Review a Military Show.

Long Branch, Aug. 23—P. J. Casey, secretary of the Monmouth County military tournament, which will give a two-days' exhibition at the Monmouth County Horse Show grounds on Friday and Saturday, received a telegram this afternoon from Vice President Hobart, announcing that he and President McKinley will reach Hollywood Friday morning and will review the troops.

Troop C, of Brooklyn, will act as their escort, and will accompany them to Normanhurst, the country home of Mr. Hobart. Two companies of marines from the Brooklyn Navy Yard will arrive tomorrow.

THE JUDGMENT DAY

Scientists and Alleged Wise Folks Figure Out the Date.

Scientists do queer things sometimes. One of them has attempted to calculate in cold mathematics how soon we may expect the Judgment Day; and he has prepared a paper on the subject. Starting with the total amount of energy stored in the sun and the fact that the orb of day is continuously distributing a quantity sufficient for the work of seven men for each area of the earth's surface of the size of the human body, our statistician calculates that it will require 3,375,000,000 years of outpouring before a sensible diminution of the quantity of energy given out can be detected. Up to this distant period mountains will stand, rivers will run, plants will grow and animal life will exist much as it does to-day.

If you realize that solar energy as soon as used reasserts itself in some other form, either as sound, electricity or simple motion, it is easy to see that this estimate is too small rather than too great. At any rate, the world is not liable to stop going for a few years yet, according to his reasoning.

Some idea of the vastness of the force that is meted out to us from the physical source of earthly life may be gained, he says, by considering that if the energy that the sun gives to earth in a single day could be bottled up and directed against Niagara Falls it would cause that great body of water to dash back again up hill for 4,000 years. If turned into a single blast of heat it would cause every living creature instantaneously to blight and wither; the fire around the poles would be melted in one and three-quarter minutes and in another eleven seconds all the oceans would be turned into steam.

If transmuted into electricity a spark would flash from the earth as far as the planet Jupiter. If collected into a single sound the vibration thereof would not only be heard by every ear drum in the world, but would uproot the giant trees of the forest, and even level mountains. If changed into a momentary flash of light its burst would be so blinding as to penetrate the walls of the deep dungeon and destroy the sight of every living creature. In brilliancy this flash would exceed the brightness of the sun itself over a million times.

For one man to expend an amount of energy equivalent to that which the earth receives from the sun in the tenth part of a second it would have to work hard continuously for 87,000,000 years.

This calculation is remarkable in that it differs by more than 3,374,000,000 years from the period which scientists generally believe that the world will come to an end. Such experts as Darwin and Huxley believed that it could not sustain life two million years hence.

A FREAK OF JUSTICE

Trying to Solve a Question of Suicide or Murder.

There was an odd freak if court justice out in Santa Fe, New Mexico, a few days ago. It was in a puzzling case of suicide or murder.

The point to be decided was whether the dead man, Fred Merrill, had committed suicide by shooting himself or had been shot by Walter Locke, his brother-in-law, who had been suspected of murder.

A note was found in the dead man's room purporting to give reasons for committing suicide. This note, the prosecution claims, was a forgery. The friends of Locke, the prisoner, insisted on the suicide theory.

The court and jury went to the cemetery. The pistol which was found in Merrill's hand was placed against the head of a lately-deceased pauper, dug up for the purpose, and pointed in the direction that it is alleged the bullet went through Merrill's head.

The skull was cracked to splinters and torn apart in much the same manner as was Merrill's head. The wounds were, however, different in character, and no clean cuts appeared. The face was powder burned. Immediately around the bullet wound and pieces of skull on the left side were thrown outward, one piece being blown thirty feet against the wind. The recoil of the revolver was such that had it been in the hands of a man committing suicide it would have been thrown thirty-five feet or clutched so tightly that force would have been necessary in removing it from the dead man's hand. It is claimed there were no powder burns on the dead man's face.

A Priceless Treasure.

The National Museum at Washington has just received an almost priceless treasure in the shape of the ensign of the Bon Homme Richard, Paul Jones famous frigate.

The evidence collected seems to prove that this is the first American flag bearing the Stars and Stripes, and is undoubtedly the first National colors ever hoisted over an American warship and the first to be saluted by a foreign naval power.

This flag is the gift of Mrs. Harriet R. F. Stafford, of Cottage City, Mass., who inherited it from her ancestor, James Hayard Stafford. When President McKinley and Secretary Long received the valuable relic, there accompanied it conclusive proof of its authenticity.

Verdict For the Plaintiff.

Heard a couple of good ones on this trip," announced one of Detroit's traveling men. "At a little town in Oklahoma court was in session and I dropped in while waiting for the train. The prosecution had taken the testimony of a stationary engineer and the attorney for the defense took hold. 'Where were you the day this thing happened?' he inquired.

"'Running' a injun.

"What tribe did he belong to?'

"'The day before that he had been tried in which a man had climbed to the top of a freight car, laid up on a siding. He had no business there, but loosened the brake, started the humble down grade, gained speed rapidly for five miles, and then turned a summersault over an embankment. His collar bone was broken and he got a verdict for $500 because a smart lawyer convinced the jury that the railroad was guilty of contributory negligence."

Professional etiquette prevents the French Judges and judicial officials from riding in omnibuses.

UNDERWEAR.

Excessive Elaboration the Order of the Day.

The delicate, elaborately trimmed underwear now in vogue is more tedious than difficult to make, and, provided that a woman is deft with her needle and has ample leisure, she can make a charming outfit at much less cost than it can be obtained readymade, even readymade by machine. Handmade tucks, hemstitching, etc., are much prettier and infinitely more expensive than those made on the sewing machine.

In ornamenting a garment with insertion in the form of squares, lozenges, spirals, vandykes and other decorative shapes, the insertion should be arranged upon the cloth in the desired shape and firmly basted and sewed before the material beneath is cut away to leave the lace transparent. This prevents the garment from pulling out of form. If tucks are to be the decoration, the goods should be tucked before the garment is cut.

In cutting straight ruffles of muslin, it is best to pull out a thread to make sure that the ruffle is really straight, the line left serving as a guide for the scissors.

NEW PARASOLA

In cutting a curved ruffle, the goods should be pinned straight on a large newspaper, and newspaper and all should be cut. The paper will hold the goods and keep it from stretching.

The cut shows a group of new parasols and novel handles. The latter are in the form of animals' or birds' heads, except one, which is an enameled rose. The first parasol is of red taffeta, with a border of white embroidered insertion. The second is also of taffeta, with bands of chiffon design. The third is of mauve silk, entirely covered with white ruffled ribbon, and the fourth has lace butterflies applied on a white ground.

TRIMMINGS.

Tucks and Hemstitching In Fashionable Favor.

Tucks are increasing in favor as a decoration and are used for all sorts of materials. They are commonly run in bias across each other in squares and diamonds. Chemisettes, corsages, flounces and skirts are thus adorned, and all over tucking, by the yard, for silk or nainsook, is employed for entire bodices.

Hemstitching is another mode of decoration which has been borrowed from wash fabrics for the embellishment of silk. There are hemstitched tucks as well as hemstitched borders, and lines of drawn threads hemstitched into openwork are a favorite decoration for silk waists. As for hemstitched cravats, their name is legion.

There are many tailor made gowns of pique and even of taffeta, and a curious revival of the old fashioned nankeen is inaugurated. Entire costumes are made of nankeen, the favorite waistcoat material of our forefathers.

The cut shows a bodice of tucked red taffeta. The tucks are horizontal at the back and oblique in front, and the top of the tight sleeves is also tucked. The front edges are slightly scalloped and finished with cordings, and the plastron and collar are ruffled golden yellow mousseline de soie. The cuffs are finished with corded ruffles. The belt of white grosgrain is fastened with a gold buckle.

Powder Puffs.

The airy powder puff is heavy with the lives of slaughtered swans, and it is stated that as many as 29,000 young swans—cygnets, as they are called—are killed every year for the supply this dainty fluff, to say nothing of the innumerable young birds of the elder duck and wild variety. One cygnet will make nearly a dozen average powder puffs, which shows how many women must be addicted to the use of powder. The puff is highly profitable, as may be judged from the fact that the down of the cygnet costs little more than 25 cents, the poor little creature often being plucked alive so that it may bear another crop, while the puffs are sold from 50 cents upward.

UNIQUE DECORATIONS.

Floral Effects on China Produced With Postage Stamps.

An ingenious young girl of Chicago has produced an exquisitely decorated plate in floral effects by the clever use of postage stamps.

The chief decorations are four clever leaves made of green stamps. The heads are cut out around the first notched edge, allowing the figure two on one stamp to cover the spot where the three heads are joined. The stem is made by clipping the outer edge, which forms the desired curve.

Around the edge of the plate and between the clover leaves are hung rose buds, found by carefully cutting the figure "two" from the red stamps and attaching them to the gracefully curved green stem. Forgetmenots are made with blue 1 cent stamps, and the result is indescribably pretty.

The plate is then covered with Demar varnish, which preserves the colors and makes it available for use. By scraping the superfluous paper from the back of the stamps it gives the finished effect of hand painted work.

THE ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

Miss Amelie Kussner is an American girl who has achieved a high reputation in Europe, as well as in America, as a miniature painter. Not long ago she went to St. Petersburg to paint a miniature of the Grand Duchess Vladimir and had been there only a few days when she was summoned to the Imperial palace to paint a likeness of the czarina. Before she had finished this the czar ordered a miniature of himself.

Miss Eugenie Uhlrichs is an expert microscopist who is employed in New York by the government to inspect meat for the export trade.

Although it isn't long ago that the telephone was introduced into the orient, the taciturn Celestials have already become quite as dependent upon it as the busiest American, and the most noteworthy feature of the whole institution is the employment of women not only at the switchboards, but in almost every other capacity connected with the service.

The Countess of Warwick has established in England an agricultural school for girls, which she personally superintends. It is known as the Lady Warwick Hostel. The girls are taught gardening, fruit growing, dairying, beekeeping, general farming and the supervision of estates. Having learned the theory of plant growing and cultivation, the girls of this novel college don overalls, take pitchfork, hoe or spade and, by toil that is considered man's particular field of exertion, acquire practical knowledge of the science of agriculture.

Unusual honors have come upon Miss Leonora Jackson, a Chicago girl, whose superb violin playing has attracted great attention in Paris, Berlin and London. She recently played before Queen Victoria at Windsor castle, being accompanied by the court orchestra.

Mlle. Mathilde Serao, the distinguished Italian novelist, is just now the literary lioness of Paris. She may be ranked with George Sand and George Eliot, as she possesses precisely those qualities as a writer which distinguished her two great predecessors of the same sex.

Miss Gleeson Bell, a fair haired and blue eyed girl, with artistic ideas and imagination, designs table linens for a big Chicago manufactory.

The woman's international congress, recently held in London, may indirectly have an effect on the ministry of Japan. Diplomatists are expecting to hear of the resignation of Viscount Aoki, the minister of foreign affairs, whose tenure has been made impossible by the progressive women of Japan. Viscount Aoki incurred their hostility by frowning on the attempted organization of a woman's league in Tokyo, which was to have been represented in the London congress.

Mme. Patti (Baroness Cederstrom) now earns about $50,000 a year, but has made as much as $250,000. Melba's income when fully engaged is $150,000, and Sarah Bernhardt has for years averaged $70,000. Rosa Bonheur sold one year's work for $190,000.

Straw hats which have lost their pristine freshness may easily be restored to favor at home without the necessity of a trip to the bleacher. Dissolve 5 cents' worth of oxalic acid in a pint of cold water. Lay the hat upon a flat surface and scrub briskly with an old tooth or nail brush. Rinse well with cold water to remove every bit of the acid, which would otherwise eat the straw, and lay it out in the bright sunlight to dry, taking care to still keep it in a flat position.

FASHION NOTES.

Dainty Trimmings and Fashionable Accessories.

Little chous of black velvet are immensely employed as a trimming. They are used on the front of the bodice, on the collar, belt or hat, to fasten a fichu or to drape a corsage. The velvet is of the narrowest ribbon width.

Costumes of pique, coutil and galatea cloth are made almost exclusively in the tailor fashion. Fancy grasses or embroidery may be used for an elaborate trimming is required, but plain stitching and stitched straps are the usual finish.

The four-in-hand cravat is still a favorite bit of jewelry, whether it is in the form of a brooch, stickpin or pendant, or is a real clover leaf placed under crystal.

Navy blue and white, generally speaking, wide boas of white, black or colored gauze or net are a fashionable accompaniment of light summer costumes.

LEGHORN HAT.

They are often dotted with chenille, and the edge of the frills is finished with the narrowest of satin ribbon.

The hat of which an illustration is given, is of fine, soft leghorn straw. It is lifted at the left side by a large bow of white tulle and lilac clusters. A drapery of white tulle covers the crown, held in by a garland of white lilacs and foliage. The lilacs are not plain white, but have delicate tinges of pink and lavender.

SUMMER GOWNS.

Cool Costumes For Traveling and Every Day Wear.

Dotted materials are always among the summer goods, but this year a variation is introduced by having the dots of unequal size, sprinkled upon the goods at irregular intervals. In percales, silks and challies these effects are seen, the ground being mainly of red, pink or some shade of blue and the dots white. The coloring is also reversed, white grounds being shown with colored dots. The dark blue foulard or china silk costume with white dots is found in almost every woman's summer wardrobe.

Fine mohair is much used for tailor made gowns, especially for traveling, as it is thin, light and sheds dust. An attractive gown of this goods is of a medium gray and has a white pique vest fastened with crystal buttons.

The costume shown in today's illustration is of plain and striped goods combined. The lower skirt is of blue and white striped wool, and over it is a tunic of plain blue cheviot, scalloped and edged with corded ruffles. The little open coat is tight at the back and has a scalloped basque and striped revers and collar, the edges being bordered with white braid. Beneath this is a close vest of striped goods, which shows a white shirt bosom and a black cravat. The sleeves are finished with striped goods at the wrist, and both bodice and sleeves are adorned with stitched straps of blue cheviot. The hat of blue straw is trimmed with white tulle and white feathers.

Salmon.

Salmon, when in perfection, is one of the most delicious and nutritive of fish. The oil is distributed through the flesh, and for this reason it proves rather hard of digestion for some people. The richness, however, can always be corrected by the use of an acid or piquante sauce.

TAILOR FASHIONS.

Traveling Costumes and Ornamental Golf Capes.

Traveling gowns are of mohair, thin cloth, corkscrew or serge and are usually made with a skirt and jacket or bolero, to be worn over a blouse. The decoration consists of stitching and buttons.

Golf capes have become the property of all women and are worn quite irrespective of any connection with the amusement from which they take their name. They may be used for an elaborate trimming is required, but plain stitching and stitched straps are the usual finish.

The four-in-hand cravat is still a favorite bit of jewelry, whether it is in the form of a brooch, stickpin or pendant, or is a real clover leaf placed under crystal.

Navy blue and white, generally speaking, wide boas of white, black or colored gauze or net are a fashionable accompaniment of light summer costumes.

TAILOR MADE GOWN.

ple original, they have become elaborated until the decorations add considerably to the weight of a wrap by no means light in its plainest form. One or more circular ruffles, large or small revers, a quantity of woolen fringe and a capuchon are the usual additions. The cloaking of which the capes are made being reversible and different on the two sides, one side is placed outward for the body of the wrap and the other for the trimming. Sometimes both the sides are of solid color; sometimes one is plain and the other plaided or checked.

The cut depicts a tailor made gown of blue cloth. The skirt is trimmed with straps of beige cloth stitched with the silk. The close bodice has a flat, scalloped basque, a high, flaring collar and slashed revers and is cut in square tabs in front. It is edged everywhere with stitched beige bands, and the sleeves are trimmed to match. Dead gold buttons ornament the front, and a white tulle cravat is worn. The toque of black straw is trimmed with roses and foliage.

JEWELS.

Pearls Are the Reigning Favorites of Fashion.

Pearls have never been so fashionable—or, at any rate, more fashionable—than they are at present. Formerly, one or several rows of pearls resting upon the chest or closely encircling the neck were in request; but now nothing will do but long chains of them, falling below the waist or festooned over the bodice. The demand for them is so great that jewelers are hard pressed to obtain a sufficient supply. The fortunate possessors of one or more than one of these long strings devises all sorts of different ways of displaying them. Sometimes they are worn plainly around the neck and allowed to fall naturally; again, they are caught up at the front or side of the bodice with a jeweled ornament, or they are fastened to the back of the low cut bodice and are draped around the decolletage. The most novel application of them was displayed recently by a fashionable Athenian woman, who fastened the chains to her hair, allowing them to drop at the sides and fall to the shoulders, where they were attached to the gown.

The picture given today illustrates an odd little capote of original form. The foundation is a little arch of almond green straw, upon the top of which is placed a large, irregular bow of wide turquoise ribbon. Three additional loops of ribbon follow the arch down the right side, while at the left are two ends of ribbon drawn through jeweled rings and terminating upon the hair. A high coiffure is necessary with this capote.

COLLARS AND BELTS.

Novelties In Girdles and Buckles. Bicycle Suit.

Collars of velvet are embroidered with gold or steel beads or colored spangles, according to the gown they are accompanying. They are finished with a full of bead fringe.

A novelty in belts is of leather, with a design burned upon it in the same way that furniture, frames and wooden ornaments are decorated. The designs for belts are very finely burned and are usually of a floral character. The fastening for the belts is a plain, tongue buckle covered with leather.

Large, old fashioned brooches which have been laid aside as out of date may now be utilized as belt fasteners, taking the place of a buckle. The belt of ribbon, velvet or other material is provided with a fastening of hooks and eyes, and the buckle is planned on the outside, or a regular buckle arrangement is desired, however, a bar and clasp attachment are easily added by a jeweler to any large brooch which has a metal rim.

A picture is given of a bicycle suit of gray covert cloth. The divided skirt is finished with a band of rows of stitching. The bolero is tight and double breasted, the front being elongated in a rounded tab and fastened with six large horn buttons. The coat collar, revers, cuffs and all the edges are finished with stitching. Under the bolero is a white shirt waist, with pink dots, with a high collar and black cravat. The black straw hat is trimmed with black satin and a gray feather.

BICYCLE COSTUME.

BATHING SUITS.

The American Suits Prettier Than the French.

The French idea of a bathing suit is quite different from that worn and accepted in America. The Frenchwoman, for once, makes a guy of herself, wearing trousers which extend half way down from the knee to the ankle, a scant skirt which falls only a little below the hips, and eschewing stockings altogether. A more awkward-looking arrangement can hardly be imagined. The bodice part, however, is often very prettily cut and trimmed, and for the exercise of swimming it cannot be gainsaid that it is therefore to be gained from the French suits.

The only way to keep even very tight stockings on in the water is to wear circular garters a few clear inches. If a band of wide elastic is run into the edge of the trousers, it will not only serve as a garter, but will keep the drawers and stockings from separating, as they have a habit of doing, during bathing.

The picture illustrates a bathing costume of brown serge. The sailor and the edge of the short sleeves are trimmed with bands of white braid. The bodice is gathered to a pointed yoke, upon which is applied a wide sailor collar, also of thin white flannel. There is no collar. The belt is of wide white braid, tied at the side.

Crocodile Steak.

Some of the old Egyptians were fond of crocodile steak. They thought wheat and barley poor stuff. The Egyptians, moreover, never ate beans or the head of any animal. Honey and raisins they loved and also liked fish, quail and duck.

THE PALMS.

How to Care for the Decorative House Plant.

If there is one thing harder to do than anything else it is to keep palms and ferns green and hardy the year round. They add so much to the loveliness of a dainty flat or a stately home that it is no wonder housewives buy them, and then see them die in spite of tender care and end by throwing them out in despair. Yet their wants are few and simple. In the first place, don't allow the furnace fire to go out and reduce the temperature of the house to freezing point with no warning, only the hardier varieties of palms and ferns should be selected. Cabbage palms, fan palms and date palms are all hardy.

Much of the success some women have in caring for palms lies in the attention given to cleansing the leaves, for the minute pores get clogged with dust the surface of the leaves suffers as does the human skin when unwashed. Once a week is not too often to use a soft sponge, warm water and perhaps a little soap.

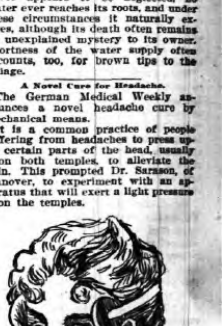
If insects attack a palm a small quantity of kerosene liquid soap sold for the purpose may be added to the warm water. Watering also is responsible for the death of most house plants. No hard and fast rules can be laid down; all depends on the conditions of the plant's life, the warmth of the room and size of the pot. Examine the state of the upper soil, and if dry pour on enough water so that the surplus will run out of the hole in the bottom of the pot. It is a good plan to stand the pots in a basin of water for half an hour so the coil of roots can absorb all the moisture they want.

What may be called the system of "death by driblets" is responsible for the loss of many plants. Water (generally colder than the atmosphere surrounding the plant, which it should never be) is poured on the top soil twice, three times, or perhaps every day in the week in minute quantities, with the result that, although the palm never appears to be neglected, no water ever reaches its roots, and under these circumstances it naturally expires, although its death often remains an unexplained mystery to the owner. Shortness of the water supply often accounts, too, for brown tips to the foliage.

A Novel Cure for Headache.

The German Medical Weekly announces a novel headache cure by mechanical means.

It is a common practice of people suffering from headaches to press upon certain parts of the head, usually upon both temples, to alleviate the pain. This prompted Dr. Sarason, of Hanover, to experiment with an apparatus that will exert a light pressure upon the temples.



NEW HEADACHE CURE.

It appears that the results were surprisingly successful. The pressure upon the sides of the head seemed to work like facial massage, while the impression of the pulsating arteries in the temples caused a wholesome regulation of the circulation of the blood through the head and brain.

Proper Time for a Bath.

Regarding the proper time for a bath, a simple general rule may be given. Take cold baths on rising in the morning and warm ones just before retiring. In taking Turkish baths the hour need not be considered, except as in all baths, none of which should be taken less than an hour or so before or after meals.

Where it is possible, use fresh, clean rain water for the bath. This is the nearest approach to distilled water, which is too expensive for general use. Soft water is next best to rain water, and a little borax or ammonia in hard water will soften it.

Brisk rubbing should always follow a bath; then the bath will do all that is claimed for it in the way of renovating the person, invigorating the system, increasing the fineness and softness of the skin, and making one look and feel younger.

Cleanliness of the skin has a great effect on the general health, and it is well known that if one has been exposed to infection the best thing to do by way of precaution is to take a hot bath immediately.

It is not well to remain too long in a tepid bath. Thirty minutes should be the limit. Throughout the winter and early spring it is best, if one is at all liable to colds, to take one's bath at night, just before going to bed. If taken in the daytime, brisk exercise immediately afterward, with a good, stiff dumb bell practice—is highly beneficial.

Elephants Take Care of Children.

Siamese women entrust their children to the care of elephants, and it is said that they are never betrayed. The babies play about the huge feet of the elephants, who are ever careful never to injure the little ones. If danger threatens the sagacious animal will curl the child gently up in his trunk and swing it up out of harm's way upon his own broad back.

Use for Old Table Cloths.

Another use for the worn out table cloths is to make them into tiny cloths for the table to be used under the plates and vegetable dishes at the end where these things are served. These tiny cloths save a table cloth from soiled spots more than one who has not used them can think.

AGAINST USE OF CORSETS.

Chicago, Saxony and Russia Make a Concerted Attack Upon Steel Ribbed Casing.

THEY WILL HAVE TO GO.

So Say a Great Many Health Specialists—But Women Have the Deciding Vote—What Will They Say?

The Influence of Dress Upon the Physical Structure of Women—Appearance and Fashion's Decrees More Thought of Than Sound Bodies and Good Health—Uncomfortable and Injurious.

The Minister of Education of Saxony has signed a decree forbidding schoolgirls to wear corsets. The consequent official Russian Minister of Public Instruction has published an order that young women attending high schools, universities and music and art schools shall not wear corsets.

The Oakland Health Club of Chicago has indorsed the acts of both these officials and has pledged itself to stop tight lacing.

These three facts show that the war upon the corset and its consequent destruction of the most beautiful thing in the world—a man's mother—is being renewed in very high official places, and that it is being fought as it was never fought before. The Oakland Health Club has given out this emphatic official statement:

"It is a known fact that there is more sickness among women than ever before. One scarcely meets a healthy woman. The corset represents a large measure of the responsibility of the ills to which women is heir.

The Oakland Health Club suggests Grecian costumes for women. The costumes of the ancient Greeks require no "fitting to corsets."

The Saxony Minister of Education prescribes the mode of dress for school girls. The girls are required to wear a loose-fitting jacket or blouse, with a short, full, round skirt, loose at the belt. The Russian Minister of Public Education offers no substitute for the corset nor concealment of the uncorseted outlines. He confines himself to the decree. He only offers the explanation that he has spent much time in visiting girls' schools, and reports that the corset is "distinctly prejudicial to the health and physical development of the wearers."

Dr. J. H. Kellogg is one of the leaders of war against stays. Dr. Kellogg has a formidable trail of titles which add weight to his words. He is a life member of the British Gynecological Society, member of the Societe d'Hygiene of France, of the American Medical Association, the British and American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Climatological Society, the American Social Science Association and others. He is the author of a work on "The Evils of Fashionable Dress," that created a decided stir and a short-lived dress reform among women a few years ago. He has just now published a work on the same question entitled, "The Influence of Dress in Producing the Physical Decadence of American Women."

"It is not necessary to spend any time in demonstrating that women are degenerating physically," says Dr. Kellogg in his treatise, "for there has not been a single conversation dinner with in the last quarter of a century, at which was not heard the toast, 'Woman, God's best gift to man and the chief cause of the doctors.'

"I recently addressed an audience of seven hundred women. I asked how many were present believed they were physically superior to their mothers. A bare half dozen raised their hands, and two or three looked timidly about, apparently to see if any one present was prepared to contest their claim. This was significant of the present attitude and the present strength of women. Counting off in the birth rate amounting to several million within the last ten years is one of the terrible evidences of the decline of stamina in American women."

Dr. Kellogg says that to compression of the waist is due:

"First, downward displacement of the abdominal and pelvic organs, and numerous functional and organic diseases growing out of this disturbance of the static relation of the organs.

"Second, lack of development of the muscles of the trunk, which by long compression and disuse lose their functional activity, resulting in drooping shoulders, flat or hollow chest, sunken abdomen and straight spine.

"Third, an ungraceful and unnatural carriage of the body in sitting, standing and walking.

"Fourth, an abnormal mode of respiration.

"The strong and beautiful curves which are observed in a spirited horse are not only attractive from an aesthetic point of view, but are also of the highest significance from a psychological standpoint, and the healthy, vigorous animal one observes that the head is held high, the neck and back strongly curved, the limbs firmly set, and the whole expression indicates vigor and strength. The same is equally true of the female body.

"An erect head, well-curved back, prominent chest, retracted abdomen and firmly set limbs, are indicative of an energized carriage of the body which is characteristic of health.

"That fine chest, posterior dorsal curve, projecting chin, protruding abdomen, are equally indicative of a relaxed and weak carriage of the body.

"The spiritless and tired horse holds his head down; he lacks the vigor and disposition to hold it up."

WOMEN COMMANDERS

ROYAL LADIES OF HIGH RANK WHO ARE COLONELS OF REGIMENTS.

They Make Efficient Officers and Are Splendid Horsewomen—Compliment Paid to a Grand Duchess by Emperor William—Male Sovereigns Four Riders.

There are several royal ladies in Europe who are Colonels, some of whom are not only proud of their titles, but honor their regiments by giving time and attention to the welfare and advancement. The German Empress commands the "Queen's" Fusiliers, the Eighty-sixth Schleswig-Holsteiners, and she is not infrequently seen riding at their head as Colonel and saluting the Emperor, then reining in beside him to see them pass.

Empress Augusta Victoria, the Kaiser's mother, shows herself a very active commanding officer of the Eightieth Infantry, battalions of which are stationed at Homburg, Soden, Gensdorf and Wiesbaden, stations within a short railroad ride of her summer residence. She frequently invites the Colonel, staff and line officers to dine with her and discuss regimental matters, and at times she attends the field exercises.

Another woman Colonel who considers herself bounden in more than name, to her regiment, is the Grand Duchess of Hesse. She is often noticed on the parade ground, but when the regiment is at work, in undress uniform, consisting of a dark-blue coat, red collar and cuffs edged with blue, and a helmet, blue plume, a gray cap with red band, sword and belt and knotted epaulets. At parades and reviews she heads the 117th Regiment in all the glory of a pretty girl's uniform, the helmet topped with plumes and strapped under her chin, tasselled belt, and her breast covered with decorations, the Grand Order of the Red Eagle being conspicuous. At a recent Kaiser parade at Homburg the Emperor sent his personal Adjutant to escort to him and publicly congratulated her on the magnificent appearance of her command.

The Duchess of Connaught is known as one of the most popular and unpretentious women at the English court. Educated under the eye of her father, the "Red Prince," she was brought up as a soldier's daughter should be, was a fearless rider at an early age, and sits on her horse with grace and dignity. When Prince Arthur, in the natural routine of events, becomes the Commander-in-Chief of the British Army, the Duchess will be one of the most active and foremost of the royal women soldiers.

In Holland, there is the liveliest satisfaction at the apparent interest Queen Wilhelmina shows in her army. Recently, while at one of her country residences, word was brought that a regiment was approaching on a practice march, and would soon pass the residence. She mounted hurriedly, galloped out to meet the dusty, travel-stained troops, saluted the Colonel and putting herself at the head of the column, personally led in front of the Queen Regent Emma, giving the word of command for the salute as it passed her mother.

It is a curious fact that while nearly all the royal women of Europe are superb and picturesque horsewomen, few of the reigning sovereigns are even tolerable riders. Emperor William has not a firm seat and is at a disadvantage because of his crippled arm and always mounts with assistance of some kind. The Czar of Russia is famous for his falls; the Emperor of Russia is not a master of the art, and the Kings of Sweden, Greece and Roumania are poor riders. Even the King of Portugal finds no enjoyment when mounted, because of his stoutness. Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria rides very well for an hour or two, and King Alexander of Servia is afraid of horses. The British royal princes are, however, all expert horsemen. The Queen of Italy is said to boast of two sovereigns who are really at home in the saddle, the Emperor of Austria and the King of the Belgians and President Felix Faure of France.

New Engagement Ring Fad.

We are going to the fashions of our grandmothers in engagement rings as well as gowns, bonnets, bodices and crinolines. Nearly every woman has seen at some time in her life dainty little engagement rings, which have been given by father to mother, or grandfather to grandmother, when the momentous question was "popped," as they used to call it in those days, which spelled for them all these years.

Ruby, emerald, garnet, amethyst, ruby and diamond, and pretty they are, too, in their quaint old fashioned setting. The new fashion hints that the fact that the favorite betrothal ring to-day is a colored stone.

Emeralds, rubies, sapphires are now chosen as the symbol of betrothal, but the diamond still holds its own. The setting must be as inconspicuous as possible, the circlet a mere thread of gold, and with the diamond. It was quite fetching is the fact that it admits of great individuality in the cutting of the stones.

Sugar as a Food.

We are cautioned from childhood against eating too many sweets—that too much sugar is injurious—that it will ruin the teeth and digestive apparatus of any one. How is it, then, that the negroes who work a fortnight on the sugar plantations, sucking all the time for refreshment when weary, should have such handsome teeth? Is it because it is less injurious in that form? How is it that the Swiss, who eat more and more sugar can endure better the long march and other hardships to which he is subjected? Must be somebody has been misled all these years about the injurious properties of sugar, or else it isn't the sugar that does the injury. One writer of the present day epitomizes that "sugar is almost the most valuable thing that enters the mouth of man, woman or child.

A Good Investment.

Good furs and good ostrich tips are a good investment. They are always in style, sometimes more so than others, but they may be laid aside two or three years, or longer, and then brought out and used by the side of new materials, provided they are arranged to conform to the prevailing modes.

THE MURDER OF G. GATES.

Alexander Jester Has Been Arrested for a Crime Committed in 1871.

WAS KNOWN AS W. A. HILL

His Sister Who Caused His Arrest Was the Sweetheart of the Murdered Man.

Jester Is Now an Old Man, of Eighty-one Years Whose Life, Since His Crime Has Been Filled With Doing Good and Helping Others—Object of the Murder.

Fiction presents no stranger story than that which surrounds the life of Alexander Jester, arrested recently for the murder of Gilbert Gates, more than twenty-eight years ago.

Here is an old man, silvered with the frost of eighty-one years, whose declining days have been devoted to kindly deeds and preaching the Gospel, suddenly denounced by his own sister as a murderer and dragged into the shadow of the gallows.

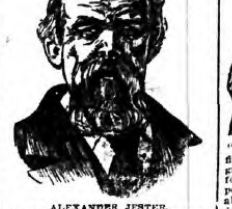
It is the story of a tireless detective chase in which the wealth of a trust magnate, the murdered man's brother, is pursued by thousands of dollars. And underlying all and furnishing the motive which led to the unmasking and arrest of the fugitive, it is the story of the murder of a pretty girl's sweetheart by her brother, the secreting of the body under the ice of the swift-flowing river, where it was lost forever.

Then followed a heart-breaking chase from place to place across rough and wild country and the final capture of the fugitive, with the personal property of his victim to accuse him.

Armed men intent on lynching were foiled at the prison gate and the murderer eluded them. Then he daringly broke jail and, eluding pursuit led by bloodhounds, escaped and baffled further search as much he were an ogre.

And in fact he was dead. Away in a far corner of the Indian Territory Alexander Jester was buried and W. A. Hill came into life.

He began to build by his good works a monument to his kindness of heart and the Christian spirit which permeated actuated all that he did. He was loved and respected.



ALEXANDER JESTER.

In West Chicago there was reared a monument among the dead which marked not the resting of him who held, but was the scene of the ridding the memory of the crime which filled the life of the fugitive with the torture of remorse and bleached his hair and beard as white as the snow on the wintry trails. The inscription on the shaft read:

GILBERT W.,
SON OF A. A. AND MARY GATES.
MURDERED IN MISSOURI BY ALEXANDER JESTER, JAN. 25, '71;
AGED 19 YEARS AND 25 DAYS.

The monument to a crime recalls, too, the vision that came to the mother of the murdered youth on the very night he was slain. She started from troubled dreams to see that it seemed actual and she thought herself, dreaming while yet awake. She was at a funeral and stopping to the coffin found that it was the body of her son Gilbert. No word had been received from him for some time and it was this dream that led to the discovery of the murder.

And while the Providence that hedges in a mother's heart led to the awful mystery, it was the heart of a woman once loved by the slain that, awakened to fire after long years, sacrificed her own brother to the memory of the dead. Cornelia Jester it was, now the widow of another, who said the word which placed her venerable brother in jeopardy of his life.

A Country With One Policeman.

There is one country in the world, and probably only one, which gets along with a single policeman; that is Iceland. The island is peopled by the descendants of Vikings, including many famous warriors and heroes, but they are so law-abiding that there is no need of policemen. The solitary officer, in spite of his great responsibility, has a very easy time. He is maintained more for ornament than for dignity than for use. The Icelanders think it would not do to have a capital without a policeman, and so they keep one. The police force is not a burdensome one. The member is six feet high, broad-shouldered and handsomely uniformed.—The Green Bag.

She Didn't Know.

"Take away woman and what would follow?" asked the vinegar-faced female who was lecturing on the rights of women. Poor thing, had she been a plain, unobstrusive womanly woman she would know without asking that man would follow.—Chicago News.

An Immune.

"Do you think," said he, "that one can live in New York and be absolutely ignorant of the ways of this wicked world?"

"No," answered Miss Cayenne, "not unless he happens to be chief of police or something like that."

MRS. FRANCES S. LEE

THE FIRST WOMAN TO PRESIDE OVER A LEGISLATURE.

Colorado Law Makers Did Not Know How to Address Her, But She Holds Them All With Firm Hand—Her Success in Office.

The Colorado Legislature has bent the knee to the yoke of a woman. The burden was not oppressive, for the happy mallet and mistress of the gavel made her sway felt lightly, and the members kindly avoided raising difficult points of order. The lady in question is Mrs. Frances S. Lee, Representative from Arapahoe county, on the populist ticket. Mrs. Lee is not a speaker of tried strength, but she possesses a fund of tact and nerve that prevented the members from catching her napping, if they intended to trip her up on her rulings in the chair of the Speaker when the Assembly was sitting as committee of the whole. She had no warning of the honor designed for her, but was called to the chair by some one who admired her energy in making a splendid race for office.

Mrs. Lee tried to decline the honor and blushed furiously when her name was mentioned, but was uncertain of her ability to handle the reins of government when fifty odd Representatives were clamoring for pie. But she took the chair and gave with a certain dignity. Then the embarrassment fell upon the members when they came to address the Chair, for, be it known, there is no set rule for the recognition of women in the Legislature, and it is left to the ingenuity of each member how he shall address a lady who occupies the chair.

Some called her "Madam President" and others "Madam Speaker," but these were the men from the city, who possibly had winced in a woman's club, and were better schooled than their colleagues in the femininity of parliamentary law. Representatives from the farming and rural districts came to the front with quite a variety of addresses, including "Mrs. Speaker," "Mrs. President," and one, in the fulness of his misery, blurted out a protest to "Mr. President."

In the general excitement there was ample opportunity for the avoidance of solecisms of a political nature, and everything proceeded nicely for the first five minutes, so that the Speaker grew accustomed to her position before the House could confine her to points of order. Mrs. Lee was capable of holding her own, and quickly demonstrated that fact, to the surprise of those members who knew as much about legislative rules as an elephant knows about gruel. They mainly rushed to their own fate, and plunging into confusion and tangle they were ruled out of order and compelled to sit down and allow others of more intellect to have a say.

It was amazing to see this little woman manfully assume the new role, and imperatively enforce her orders with a smile that was apt to mislead the contrary-minded into presuming on the Speaker's good nature. At the end of a tedious session of three hours the gavel fell for adjournment, and Mrs. Lee proceeded to the cloak room blissfully content, just as though it were part of her daily routine to preside over the deliberations of a legislative body.

Mrs. Lee was elected by the labor vote, owing to the eminent ranking of her husband in labor circles. He is a member of the Executive Committee of the Federation of Labor, and is reputed to be one of the brainiest and most conservative of labor leaders. Mrs. Lee's own office, as she was not eligible for further honors, but with the grace of a true suffragist was proud to allow his wife's name to be before the people. The nomination by the silver vote was equal to election, so there can be no means of learning from the returns how her popularity stood the test of the polls, for it was a walkover for the fusionists, and good and bad fared alike in catching the same vote. She is a member of the committees on Education, Election and Appointments, Temperance, Medical Affairs, Public Health, Labor and the City of Denver, and is a conscientious legislator.

Women's Adaptability.

The adaptability of women is one quality greatly in their favor. Set down in the midst of entirely new surroundings, a woman's first impulse is to improve them. She quietly gives a touch here, straightens out a little there, and in a very short time will be still apparent, yet order has succeeded chaos, and she has imparted to everything within her reach some expression of the home comfort she carries the same instinct into business, and, after a month's apprenticeship, if she succeeds at all is mistress of the situation. Almost everyone can recall instances where women, thrown unexpectedly upon their resources, have developed business qualifications of a very high order which they did not know they possessed, and would not have known but for the need of doing something.

Value of Exercise.

One writer says, if you would keep young take some gymnastic exercises, not to develop your muscles, but to keep your joints limber and free from rheumatism. Keep in mind that these exercises taken scrupulously won't accomplish the results

A MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

Mme. Flamant, a Pretty Parisian Widow Who Had Seen Better Days, Slain.

THIRTY GHASTLY GASHES

Her Arms Tatooed With Promises of Undying Love Vowed to Two Men.

Had Pledged "Love For Life" to Jean Rovet and Maurice and Neither is Known to the Police Who Have Several Theories—Robbery Was Clearly Not the Motive.

A short time ago Mme. Clemence Flamant was found dead in her room in the Rue Moret, Paris.

She had been slain by repeated dagger thrusts—slain by some one who had pleaded and pitied the prone and helpless body until her strength was exhausted. Both arms of the murdered woman were tattooed in strange fashion.

Each bore a promise of undying love each promise was made, apparently, to a different man, and each was founded by the tattooed dagger, emblematic of the death that would come if the vow were broken.

The tattooing was the only clue. From it the police believe that the murderer had been Mme. Flamant's suitor. But which suitor? And whither is he fled?

And who is he?

It is the strangest crime in a city of strange crimes.

Mme. Flamant had lived at No. 107 Rue Moret for some years. She was apparently a widow of refined antecedents and moderate means. Her rooms were cheaply but comfortably furnished and neatly kept.

She had no known relatives and was regarded by her landlord as a model tenant. Her life was regular, even to monotony.

Her taste in the Parisian fashion, in neighboring cafes and restaurants, but spent much of her time in her room.

The night she was killed, Mme. Flamant went out to dinner. The time of her return was not noted.

When the concierge was passing down the stairs next morning Mme. Flamant's door was seen to be partly open, and curiosity prompted the custodian of the house to look inside. The woman was discovered dead, and the police were quickly notified. The body was cold, showing that death had occurred several hours previously.

An examination disclosed the following words tattooed on the right arm: J'aime Maurice Des Canettes Pour La Vie, 1899."

The same message read: "I love Maurice of the faucets for life, 1899."

"Maurice the Tank" would be a fair rendering of the nickname. It is not a pretty nickname, but it is Parisian.

Beneath this strange pledge was a crude design—a heart outlined in red, pierced by a blue dagger.

It was a promise of undying love, backed by a grimly suggestive threat of death if the promise were ever broken.

When the left arm was examined a device equally curious was revealed. The initials, J. R., were there engraved above a rude picture of a dagger and two hearts chained together and signed "Jean Rovet."

Then the Locopis of the Parisian police, the Sherlock Holmes of Gaul, ran a cunning theory, "reconstructed" the crime after their manner.

Jean Rovet, they concluded, had been Mme. Flamant's suitor—perhaps years ago, certainly before Maurice. Because of his presumed partiality for tattooing they concluded that he must have followed the sea, though this is not evident, now that society women have taken to tattooing as a fad, as they have in London and Paris.

Rovet had gone away—this is all conjecture, of course—and Mme. Flamant, who had been greatly reared, had come to want unforeseen by him and had removed to more modest quarters where a new lover had found her. Perhaps the hardships aided in his conquest by her poverty.

The second tattooing is more difficult to explain. It may be merely one of those coincidences which make reality stranger than any tale of the imagination. It may be that some incautious remark of Mme. Flamant revealed the truth to Maurice.

More probably, perhaps, the dead woman herself, urging on her own destruction with self-defeat like zeal, and proof of her affection, and added the date as if to efface the memory of Rovet by a later declaration, even if she concealed the powerful and painful arm the promise she had made him.

At this point the police theory diffuses.

First—Did Jean return to Paris and punish the woman's faithlessness in the manner indicated by the design of the pierced heart?

Second—Had Clemence heard from or communicated with her first lover? Had he returned from the past to renew his claim upon her heart, and did Maurice indict the punishment of death upon her?

Gertrude—Oh, Percy, I'm afraid papa will make me so after we are married.

Percy (shocked)—What! Is he going away?—Judge.

A WOMAN CROESUS.

ALABAMA'S COTTON PLANTER WHOSE ESTATE IS BIG AS A PRINCIPALITY.

Not a Club Woman nor a Female Suffragist, But She Can Make and Unmake Congressmen—Resides Managing 1,600 Acres, She Runs a Bank as Well.

Lelia Seton Wilder is the name of an Alabama woman cotton planter who has always insisted on being called the woman of the South, and seems destined to add still more. She is a wealthy widow of Decatur, and is the largest woman cotton planter in the State, if not below the Mason and Dixon line.

Instead of confiding the direction of her estates to superintendents and overseers, and living a life of ease, Mrs. Wilder is her own superintendent and overseer, and has made such a success of it that the men of the State recognize her as a very shrewd business woman.

Mrs. Wilder is a unique figure. She belongs to one of the oldest families in the country, of which Mgr. Seton, of New Jersey, is a connection, and on the distaff side descends from Roger Williams. She is a descendent of the famous Seton family, several members of which had their heads chopped off and their estates confiscated for their loyalty to Mary Queen of Scots. In the New Leaves branch of this family is now held a painting of herself, given by the unhappy Queen to David Seton, who was Controller of the Revenue in 1586.

Possibly some of Mrs. Wilder's love of politics comes from the old adherents of Queen Mary, for her home on her plantations is a resort for statesmen, and Mrs. Wilder a favorite house party hostess of national and State politicians, and the woman planter is not without that political influence so dear to the soul of the true Southern woman as she wields it in drawing room and across the dinner table.

Mrs. Wilder consistently declines to enter clubdom or champion woman suffrage. "All the political power I want," she often says, "is that which my men friends will exercise for me, and it's a heap more fun than those Western women have who run for office and go to Legislatures. I can always find one or three men to vote my way for me."

Among Mrs. Wilder's possessions is the old bank in Decatur, under which she long ago found the remains of a buried treasure. The bank was built in 1832 for a State bank. During the civil war it was used both as a hospital and a powder house, and one of the five buildings left standing at the close of the struggle. Several years ago an old soldier wrote to Mrs. Wilder saying that he had buried a large amount of money being hidden in the bank, but he was too poor to come to show where it was unless his fare were paid. It was finally paid and he came, but later Mrs. Wilder's brother-in-law, who was in the war, said that while camped at Decatur he heard money was buried in the bank, and was supposed to be the proceeds of the robbery of a government pay car near Decatur. Of course Mrs. Wilder is not tearing down a stone bank for nothing, but any one who can locate the buried treasure will get a hearing from its owner.

Nixon d'Enclos, Duelist.

Woman as a duellist is not a nineteenth century feminine development, as might be inferred from the representation on the stage with foils or from Bayard's celebrated picture, "Une Affaire d'Honneur." In the New Illustrated Magazine Col. Willock tells a story of the famous and beautiful Ninon d' Enclos, who, stung by a slight to her good name, donned manly attire a stormy night, met face to face a young noble who had affronted her. There was not the slightest suspicion that this most deadly insult had been dealt by a woman's hand. So swords were drawn and crossed on the spot, and after a few rapid tac-a-tac passes had been exchanged Ninon, a consummate swordswoman, made a feint boutonniere in the gay satin doublet of her opponent and gave him a sharp wound in the shoulder.

Cradles of Indian Babies.

Babies of civilized nations would open their eyes in wonder if they should see how and in what contrivances the babies of the native tribes of North and South America and Africa have in place of cradles and cribs. Which babies are the happier for having the infant to a board, which is slung over the mother's shoulder or over the bow of a tree when she is busy. In South America and some parts of Africa reeds are woven together in a long strip, and the ends brought together, forming the letter "O." The infant is placed in the reed in position and securely fastened with cords. While in this contrivance the child has free use of its legs, although its arms are securely fastened by the cords.

A Pertinent Question.

When people come to learn that bread kneaded by machinery is just as good as that made by hand, then there will be lots of labor saved and the bread will be cleaner. Nine times out of ten, probably, cook washes her hands before she begins the bread, but how about the tenth time? And then, too, will the fifty seconds she holds them under the faucet remove as much foreign substance from hands that are roughened with wind and work as perhaps nutrients in most dough will? Think it over.

CEMENT GRAIN ELEVATORS

A Honey Comb of 3,600,000 Bushels Capacity to Be Built at Duluth.

AN ENTIRELY NEW PLAN.

Floor Space to Be Occupied By Cells, and as Business Increases More Cells Will Be Added.

The Idea of Concrete Building for Grain Storage Originated In the Provinces Along the Danube—The Elevator May Be of Any Length or Width to Fit Any Plot of Ground.

It is probable that Duluth will soon have the largest grain elevator in the world, with a storage capacity of 3,600,000 bushels under one roof. Not only is this new structure to be notable for its size, but it is also to be on a plan new to America. Many banks of the Danube in Roumania are dotted here and there with grain elevators of small size built of concrete. The Peavey Grain Company, the largest handler of grain in the world, has been investigating the system and has decided to utilize it in its new elevator in this city. The Peavey company now has more grain storage than any other concern in existence and is adding to it every year. It has in operation here elevators of wood that will hold about 7,000,000 bushels, has the same capacity at Minneapolis, and 3,000,000 at Chicago, making some 20,000,000 bushels more at Kansas City, Omaha and other centres of the West. Besides it has in operation about 500 country elevators with an average capacity of 40,000 bushels, making a total capacity, both terminal and country, of about 45,000,000 bushels. All this is the growth of forty years and has been built entirely the individual work of one man, Frank H. Peavey of Minneapolis, who died in a young man.

Mr. Peavey has been investigating the system of Roumania, and has been so much impressed that it is to be adopted here. These structures cost considerable more than wood. Probably in the elevator to be built the difference will be not less than $400,000, but the gain in insurance is so great that there is an actual saving. Insurance in wood houses is about 1½ per cent, and it is impossible to build structures over a certain size, as no insurance concerns in the world will carry the tremendous risks aggregated under one roof when the capacity runs into millions of bushels of wheat. In structures built of concrete and roofed with steel or tiles there need be no insurance, and the owner can carry his own additional profit, or if it is decided to carry policies they can be had in plenty at one-quarter of 1 per cent. Steel elevators, such as that of the Great Northern road at Buffalo, have the same advantage in point of insurance as those of concrete, but they are much more costly, and there is danger that the grain will sweat in the bins and be ruined thereby. The contract was let for the largest grain elevator in the world, with a capacity of 3,000,000 bushels, which is now building, and was $800,000. This is not including foundations, machinery, docks and many other items. Wood houses of the same capacity might be constructed entire for $600,000.

The Peavey elevator's floor plan will be that of a great honeycomb, and additional cells will be added as business bee adds to the capacity of its comb, by putting on more cells. These cells will be built in blocks of some seventy feet, tunnels built under them to transfer the contents, and a roof put over of tile or metal. The concrete is in the form of a liquid at the moment. The slabs are erected to the required height and the house is ready to receive its contents. The cement elevator may be built of any length or width to fit any ground, and can be added to with ease. It cannot burn, and grain can be kept there in with greater safety from heating than in wooden or steel elevators.

"We are aiming to secure the very best plan for handling and storing of grain handling in this house," said Mr. Peavey in speaking of his plan, "and if the cement elevator proves the best, not only will we have it, but we have the most up-to-date and complete storage for grain in the world. My experts have been on the Danube for months looking into the system and have made exhaustive reports thereon. Electrical experts are now being consulted as to plans for our modern power and fire system, at Duluth. 12,000,000 bushels, by electricity derived from some central plant. The most distant of the bins will be but 200 feet apart. The old plan of operating an entire elevator by one steam engine will be thrown aside with us and electric motors where they will be needed. Each leg, each belt, each platform, &c., will be run by an independent motor, and the cost of power will be greatly reduced in consequence."

Adding Insult to Injury.

"Yes, sir, it is adding insult to injury," remarked the young man, warmly. "That's just what it is!"

"What is adding insult to injury?" demanded young Mr. Point Breeze. "Or rather, what is doing this thing?"

"Miss Murray Hill. Only a month ago she refused my offer of marriage, and now she has written an invitation to see her wed to another. I shall be compelled to spend good hard cash for a wedding present too. If that isn't adding insult to injury, I'd like to know what it is."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

An Exhuberant Youth.

"But what will your people say," she murmured with downcast eyes, "I am not only a poor boy, my family is unknown. I haven't even," she added, pensively, "a coat-of-arms, you know."

"But I have stacks of coats," whispered the darling young man. "And as for arms—well!"

And he proceeded to use them.—Chicago Tribune.

New Jersey and the Ramapo Job.

The Ramapo water contract jobbery, which has been a fruitful topic for New York for the past week, is not without its interest in New Jersey. Part of the Ramapo district, from which it is calculated to get the immense water supply for sale in New York, is located in New Jersey, and to divert the waters of this section into another State would be a controversion of proper rights that should not be allowed to pass unnoticed by New Jersey. Several New Jersey streams also find their source in the Ramapo district and the diversion of the source of these streams into aqueducts, from where the water would be pumped into New York, would necessarily mean a reduction in the volume of water flowing in the water-ways of New Jersey. From principles of riparian laws already settled upon by the courts it would seem that this condition of affairs would not be tolerated.

It is stated that the East Jersey Water Company and those identified with it were at one time the owners of practically all the important riparian rights in the Ramapo in New Jersey and it is now stated positively that the East Jersey Water Company and the men identified with it have been made a part of the Ramapo project.

A prominent New York man, in a position to know, says that the stock of the Ramapo Water Company, was freely distributed in the New York Legislature at the time the law establishing the rights and powers of the company was enacted a few years ago, and he said the influence at work through the corporation were so far-reaching and so influential that he believed the city could only escape the clutches of this concern through the determined action of its citizens and taxpayers.

Since our esteemed friend Runyon, of the News, has been discharged as local correspondent for the New York World, Journal, Press, Sun and Herald, his services in that capacity having been of an inferior quality, he seems possessed of the idea that the suburban news of the metropolitan papers is going to the dogs. We suppose that as long as Runyon's name is not associated with the New York papers as correspondent the halo of success will not hover around these journals. Probably if the New York editors regarded Runyon with some assurance of ability as a newspaper worker that he does himself he would be engaged at a salary of immense proportions, which, however, would be reduced to a normal size by the constant expenditure for iron bands needed to circle his head to prevent it exploding from unnatural expansion.

The recent epidemic of assaults by negroes upon white women at Little Rock calls forth from the Memphis Commercial Appeal the following: "If the guilty party or parties should be caught short shrift will be given. To give such a wretch a formal trial and execution would be to make a farce of law and to desecrate the sacred infancy of the gallows. As well try and execute a mad dog, a cobra, a tiger or any other savage animal." "Benovolent assimilation" is evidently one of the needs of the south.

Many Roselle people who are anxious to have the street railway matter settled, and the road in operation, are criticising the Borough Council for submitting the ordinance offered by the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway to Frank Bergen for criticism and approval. Mr. Bergen is the Borough Counsel, but he is also the projector of the county boulevard trolley scheme. While no one questions Mr. Bergen's fairness, they think it is placing too much on him to ask him to pass on a franchise for his opponents.

Summit's secret is out. The Record declares this week that the Republican leaders of that city are going to de*mand an Assembly* nomination for their City Solicitor, Corra N. Williams. With every municipality in Union county asserting its right to a nomination of some kind it looks as though there was going to be fun in the G. O. P. convention this fall.

Oranges to Become Cities.

The spirit of municipal consolidation having departed from the *Plain*fields, it seems to have alighted in the Oranges, where, because of the revised township law adopted by the last Legislature, which goes into effect Feb. 25th next, it is probable that two of the Oranges will change their form of government.

East Orange has the proposition to incorporate as a third-class city well under way, and there is little doubt that the scheme will be carried out, as the township, with its 22,000 population, feels too large for the limited municipal powers allowed by the revised law, which provides the same form of government for every township in the State, reduces the number of members of the Township Committee to three and otherwise restricts local legislation and also improvements.

West Orange citizens and officials are unwilling to accept the provisions of the new law, and it is probable that the question of either incorporating as a third-class city or consolidating with the city of Orange will be submitted to a vote at the fall election.

Jersey is Watching.

What at first seemed to be only New York's concern in respect to the proposed Ramapo water contract jobbery is already forcing itself upon New Jersey as of considerable significance and importance to this State. The names of many prominent Jerseymen have been connected with the Ramapo job—not, however, as being directly associated with the present gang who are trying to get the best of the metropolis, but who were identified with the scheme in its embryo state.

The fact that there is an evident close bond of sympathy and mutual interest between the Ramapo jobbers and the East Jersey Water Company is now generally accepted by many as the truth. Identified with the East Jersey Water Company are a handful of powerful Jersey politicians. They will be carefully watched, and if there is any attempt to sacrifice New Jersey's interests to complete the piece of jobbery, and put several millions of undeserved dollars into the pockets of the promoters, something will probably be heard to drop in the proximity of the involved ones; and it will not be a pleasant thud, either.

Who Would Buy It Anyhow?

Concerning the possibility of the old Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield being sold for delinquent taxes by the borough collector in accordance with what may be a strict construction of the law, the Newark News says:

The announcement that the collector of North Plainfield has given notice that he intends to sell the Presbyterian cemetery for unpaid assessments has provoked numerous editorial—legal experts to inform the collector that cemeteries are exempt from taxation, and that he had better go slow or he will get into trouble. This advice would be pertinent if the money due had been assessed under the general taxation laws, but it happens in this case that the assessment is for street improvements, and the general law as to exemptions does not apply. Unless the trustees want to see their cemetery sold they had better pay up.

One of the essentials of sale of any sort is to find a customer. As it will be a long time before anyone cares to buy a cemetery, there is not much need of serious apprehension about the threatened sale of the property in question.

The Governor Not Convinced.

It is evident that Governor Voorhees does not intend to take the severe steps that many are urging him to take in respect to the disclosures in the management of the State Industrial School for Girls. Sunday the Governor declared that some of those who have told scandalous stories of the school management and methods are totally incapable of telling the truth, and the only thing that he is going to do towards bring about a re*formation is to appoint* a new board of trustees and leave it to them to say whether or not Mrs. Eyler, the superintendent, should be removed. The Governor says that so far as he is able to learn the same methods are used in the Industrial Schools of other States as in the one at Trenton.

Woman, as a rule, holds the household together, and this is strangely exemplified by an elderly maiden lady who died a few weeks ago in Athlone, Ireland. She left a fortune of $130,000, to be spent in the erection of a church, provided that her body should be converted into ashes and used in making the mortar for building the edifice.

A Michigan correspondent who wakes worth because of the forced retirement of his fellow citizen, the Hon. Russell A. Alger, from the War Department, indulges in this bit of sarcasm:

It General Alger was President of the United States, he would be the President and not Mark Hanna and the Attorney General would not hail from New Jersey, but from some one of the United States.

Whew! The gentleman must be a political "come-on" who doesn't know how to take his bunco in a graceful spirit.

The people of New York refuse to have the Ramapo job rammed.

A CENTURY GOLF GIRL.

Golf, the Great Outdoor Fad of the Season.

Golfing is the outdoor fad of the season. The American girl says so, and her word is law nowadays. The craze for golf is widespread, and is not limited to the girls of any one grade of society.

The golfing girl expert who plays with a "St. Andrew swing," and owns more clubs than her caddy can carry, is wild with enthusiasm over the sport.

And the girl with two "bargain" clubs, who plays on a free course, is an equally loyal golfer.

The golfing girl's vocabulary is full of mysterious golfing lore, and her clothes are full of golfing "duds."

If she is a fashionable young person her golf clothes are so varied that they form in themselves an entire wardrobe and cost hundreds of dollars, and her golfing implements are countless.

But the golfing fad goes far beyond the limits of wealthy golf clubs. The truly unfashionable golfing girl this year is a golfer in every phase of her social life.

She gives golf luncheons with her club colors and with golfing souvenirs.

She designs the prettiest and daintiest golf favors for dances and card parties.

She has all the toilette articles which adorn her dressing table either fashioned after golfing implements or decorated with golfing designs.

And her jewelry, her hat pins, studs, belt buckles, pins and cuff links all tell a tale of the golfing fad.

The golfing girl's strictly golfing wardrobe shows much that is odd and new this year. Here are the novelties: A sprint and duty suit-sunbonnet "it for a fluffy picture girl.

Fanciful silk jackets embroidered in thistles and golf clubs.

Gay colored satin knee breeches with jeweled buckles at the knees.

Impracticable all white costumes.

Brilliant green box-coat suits with severe, plain and mannish cuffs.

Soft warm golf caps in the lightest and grightest of plaids.

And silk and loosely woven fine wool stockings with Scotch plaid tops in place of those of heavy wool.

The golfing girl wears her skirts a good two inches longer this year than last. Now they are four inches from the ground. And whether of stout tweed or cool linen they are all made to fit with prevailing fashionable smoothness at the back and over the hips, though the yard sufficiently wide at the bottom to make trampling over the links easy. Golf jackets she owns an interesting collection, and her hats, shirt waists, belts and neckties specially designed for golf almost require a cataloguing so great is their variety.

Hints For Comfort of Baby.

Baths, sleep and meals should be at certain hours and a form of regularity followed. However, there are times when rules fail and the general regulations cannot be carried out. When a baby is teething and fretful and really ailing he must be tended carefully and tenderly ,whatever happens.

Milk is the principal diet for all small children, and fruit is equally necessary. Ripe ,sweet fruits are perfectly safe. Unripe acid fruits will disturb the digestion. Also beware of milk! Not milk, but with milk, of course, the trouble is worse. The best time to give a child fruit is before breakfast and the midday meal.

There is no prettier way of making little frocks for a girl baby of two years than than the simple Mother Hubbard, or some form of its variation. The main thing is to avoid overtrimming. The wide frills that we shoulders are no longer worn. Everything like tucks, dainty lace and the smallest of ruffles.

It is not wisdom to keep a child awake in the hope that after once going to sleep he will sleep sounder for several hours. Just as soon as a child is really tired he begins to fret. It takes time then for the nervous system to quiet down.

Housewives, Read These.

It ruins a piano to keep it standing in a draught.

Bruised cloves kept among fur frightens moths away.

Sponge black silk with spirits to revive it.

The busy housewife should get an hour's sleep in the afternoon.

A hot bath taken at night affords refreshing sleep.

When you want to cut whalebone warm it by the fire.

An egg beaten in milk is a good pick-me-up.

Lemons stowed separately in dry sand keep fresh.

Choosing a Flower Queen.

A pretty flower figure for the cotillon is the "Choosing of Proserpine." Sealed envelopes, containing cards, on one of which is inscribed "Queen of Flowers," are distributed to the women. The one who secures the queen card takes her seat in the centre of the room and all the couples dance around her. Throwing the flowers which they carry into her lap as they dance past. At the end she has gathered into a bouquet and carries them off, having chosen her partner.

Miniatures On Sleeve Links.

One of the newest lovers' fads is to have miniatures on sleeve-links. So long as he and she are bound by betrothal's chain and the figurative binding by golden links is an attractive idea.

Clothing of "Cast Off Ladies."

"Cast-off ladies' clothes bought and sold" reads the sign of a New York shop. This is not intended as a slur on the women who patronize the shop, but is merely the proprietor's peculiar method of expressing his specialty. So far from meaning any offense, he will assure you that his patrons are the best dressed in town.

THEY SUPPRESSED A RIOT.

General Wood and a Sentry Quelled an Incipient Disturbance at Santiago.

A GOOD GENTLE LESSON

The Cubans Were Greatly Incensed that Gen. Wood Had Kept Several Spaniards in Office.

Leisurely Folding His Papers the General Accompanied by a Sentry Strolled to the Scene of Disturbance—Crowd Subdued by Two Men, One Rifle and a Riding Whip.

While the Americans were cleaning the streets and public houses and jails of Santiago, and were taking care of the sick and wounded and starving, and were administering all the affairs of the city—working 18 hours each day—the Cuban residents held aloof, neglecting even to call and pay their respects to the occupants of the palace. There were no public meetings, no *contributions, no private offers of as*sistance, no movement for the aid of Cubans by Cubans, save by a few members of the Cuban Chamber of Commerce. The church, represented by an archbishop, whose salary under the old regime had been $18,000 a year, and by a number of Spanish priests and different orders, did not turn a hand for the relief of the city or of the province. There was some activity, however, but of a different character. In the Cubans the fact that certain Spanish officials had been retained in office by the Americans—very wisely retained, too, as subsequent events have proved—had created a feeling of positive discontent and antagonism. This came to a climax on the evening of Supt. 22, the day on which Gen. Shafter and Garcia paid his memorable visit to Santiago.

Surrounding the Plaza de Armas are four prominent buildings, the cathedral, the palace, next to it the San Carlos, which was the Cuban stronghold, and the Spanish Club. The two latter occupy corners triangularly opposite, with the plaza between them. On the night in question, about 8 o'clock, General Wood was writing in his office in the palace. At the outer door stood a solitary sentinel, armed with a rifle. Suddenly there burst across the plaza, from the San Carlos Club, a mob of Cubans—probably 500. Born of a few minutes a shower of stones, bricks, bottles and other missiles struck the Spanish club, smashing windows and doors. The mob, hats and coats out of breath, rushed up to the sentry at the palace entrance and shouted: "Where's the general? Quick! The Cubans are trying to take the town!"

General Wood was leisurely folding up his papers when the sentry reached him. "I know it," he said, before the man had time to speak. "I have heard the row. We will go over and stop it."

He picked up his riding-whip, the only weapon he ever carries, and, accompanied by his aid, an American soldier, strolled across to the scene of the trouble. The people in the Spanish club had put pretty well closed up, but the excited Cubans were still before it, throwing things and shouting imprecations, and even trying to force a way in by the main entrance.

"Just stand back, sentry," said General Wood quietly.

Around swung the rifle, and in much less time than is taken in the telling a way was made for the general to the door.

"Now shoot the first man who places his foot upon that step," added the general in his usual deliberate manner. Then he turned and strolled back to the palace and his writing. Within an hour the mob had dispersed, subdued by two men, one rifle and a riding-whip. And the lesson is still kept in good memory.

Wounded Nineteen Times.

Frank Kennedy was wounded nineteen times in the battle of Santiago de Cuba, 1st inst.

"I was sergeant in Troop F of the First volunteer cavalry, commanded by Col. Wood. On July 3, the second day of the battle, I was serving as mounted orderly for Gen. Lawton. Early in the afternoon, while carrying a dispatch for him to Gen. Wheeler's headquarters, ran into a Spanish skirmish line and before I knew it there were Spaniards all around me yelling like Comanches. It was too late to turn back. I struck spurs to my horse and, drawing my revolver, proceeded to empty it into the Don's faces.

"Well, I felt the conventional 'stinging sensation' several times preceding the first one, but I kept straight ahead, loading my revolver as I went, and incidentally taking an inventory of the wounds I found I had been shot four times and cut twice with machetes.

"A quarter of a mile further on I ran into another bunch and again I had to empty my revolver. The succeeding six or three minutes before was repeated. I emptied my revolver and put my horse to his highest speed. This time I was shot three times and received four cuts from machetes, which brought the total number of wounds up to thirteen.

"After the second adventure I had ridden about a mile, I guess, when a shell burst near by, killing my horse and breaking my right leg below the knee in six places. I fell to the ground, where I lay until the middle of the next afternoon. It was 2 o'clock when I fell.

"Shortly afterward I was placed on board a hospital ship and taken to New York. While I was still on the ship in New York harbor Major Armstrong, formerly regimental major of the Second Kansas National Guard, of which I had been a member, came on board and recognized me, and by his orders I was transferred to the hospital at Fort Thomas, Ky. Here I was given the very best of medical and surgical attention. I believe the surgeon took special care to bring me out whole, as I was so badly cut up."

Mrs. Secondtrip—You are just the meanest man alive.

Mr. Secondtrip—Well, there is one consolation. I may infer that the late lamented was meaner than I am. —Indianapolis Journal.

RURAL JERSEY TOWNS SEE THE AUTOMOBILE.

It Attracts Great Attention in Country Districts.

BY WESTFIELD MAN.

HENRY C. SERGEANT FINDS MUCH QUIET SPORT IN HIS TRIPS.

Runs the Horseless Vehicle at Fifteen Miles an Hour on the Average, but Sometimes Lets It Speed Along at Twenty Miles, Causing Open-Mouthed Astonishment Among the Natives.

Henry C. Sergeant, of the Ingersoll-Sergeant Drill Company, of Easton, Pa., who while former Mayor Sandbers is connected, and a resident of Westfield, is the first and only man who travels through this section in an automobile, and he has naturally been the object of much curiosity. When the automobile first made its appearance on the streets of Westfield it was considered a marvel. Nearly every one in Westfield who saw the vehicle wanted a ride, and its owner delighted to afford them the pleasure. Mr. Sergeant has traveled all over the country in the horseless carriage, and his wife frequently accompanies him.

Henry C. Sergeant is one of the wealthiest men of Westfield. He is the owner of the Westfield Club house and its furnishings and enjoys all kinds of sport. He purchased the clubhouse two years ago for the benefit of the young men of Westfield and is one of the club's most active members. The automobile is his last diversion.

A few days ago the horseless carriage and its owner whizzed through Washington on its way to Easton. It was the first horseless carriage seen in that section, and the excitement it created amounted to more than a circus.

Mr. Serreant said: "On Tuesday I thought I would go to Easton. I went over the following route: To Sprinfield, Morristown, Rockaway, Dover, Lake Hopatcong, Hackettstown, Phillipsburg, to Easton, a distance of eighty-one miles, in six hours. Mrs. Sergeant met at Easton, and we returned by way of Glen Garden and Clinton. We were back in Westfield in four hours and eighteen minutes, a distance of sixty-five miles.

"Yes, my horseless carriage created considerable excitement along the routes I took on Tuesday. The officials at Hackettstown wanted to arrest me for going through town at the rate of twenty miles an hour, but I was ten miles away before they recovered from their astonishment. At that place everybody ran from the houses, stores and offices bareheaded to see what many claimed "was just like the new management of the Lackawanna system, to use the public highway to run their switch engines over." The excitement at the St. Cloud Hotel was something great, but I do not anticipate the people will break their necks to see my carriage the next time as they did on Tuesday.

"I have had lots of fun with the carriage, but even more fun watching the people's amusement at the sight of one in the rural districts."

LAWYER WANTS HIS PAY

STARTED DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS, WHICH WERE FINALLY DROPPED.

Lawyer John F O'Donnell Wants Mrs. Frank Huff to Pay Him $173 for Legal Services in Suit She Started.

What promises to be a very interesting result of a discontinued suit for divorce will come up for trial next Monday morning in Justice Moffett's court.

It appears that several months ago Mrs. Huff, wife of Frank Huff, of this city, sought the legal advice of Attorney John F. O'Donnell, of 309 Broad way, New York, for the purpose of suing for a divorce from her husband. The fees for the preliminary proceedings amounted, according to Mr. O'Donnell, to $175. After the suit had been started, Mrs. Huff notified Mr. O'Donnell that she had decided to remain with her husband and not sue for a divorce, as she was well satisfied.

Mr. O'Donnell claims that Mrs. Huff did not pay him his fees and he now brings suit for the money. He is represented in this city by Lawyer Isaac P. Runyon, who has instituted the suit.

Mr. O'Donnell was in Plainfield yesterday for the purpose of pushing his case, but Mrs. Huff's lawyer, S. H. Swackhamer, was not ready and it was adjourned for one week. The case will be tried before Justice Moffett and a jury.

CLAMBAKE AT THE INN.

FINE ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT ASSOCIATION.

Use of the Hotel Secured for the Afternoon of August 30th—Details of the Event Have All Been Completed.

Mayor Smalley, president of the Plainfield Advancement Association, who took the initative action towards having a clambake to push the interests of the organization to a greater extent among the business men, has secured the use of the Mountain Park Inn for the event of August 30th. As originally arranged by the Mayor and the clambake committee it was the intention to have the bake in the vicinity of the hotel, but on Sunday Mr. Smalley completed arrangements for practically the use of the house for the afternoon of the 30th.

The dinner will be served on the broad piazza of the hotel, the dishes, table ware, etc., of the inn being used. The hotel waiters will be reinforced by a sufficient number of others to serve all promptly and thoroughly with the delicacies that will form the menu. After the dinner the guests of the Association will be at liberty to stroll about the inn and the grounds as though they were registered guests there.

Two hundred invitations to the clam bake will be issued to a selected list of gentlemen, a portion of which will be sent to out-of-town people whom it will be advantageous to have meet Plainfield's leading citizens in a social way. The tickers for the dinner will cost $1 a piece and are not transferable, as it is the intention of the committee in charge to avoid entertaining any persons whose presence is not agreeable.

There will be an orchestra present to furnish music during the dinner, after which there will be songs by a glee club and probably a few brief speeches by some of the guests whose ability in this line is well-known.

TROLLEY'S HUM MAY BE HEARD IN THE NOTCH

Board of Trade Talk of a Line to Washington Valley.

RESIDENTS SHOULD AGREE.

THEN THE EXTENSION OF TROLLEY WOULD BE ASSURED.

Difference of Opinion Between Some of the Residents and Mountain Park Inn Management Has Prevented Its Proposition for Safe Manufactory in Flainfield Dropped Owing to Demands.

Despite the elements Monday seven members of the Board of Trade assembled in the rooms in the Babcock building and transacted some business of more or less importance. Secretary Harry C. Runyon read a communication from the Hazard-Porter Safe Company, who desire to locate in this city. They specified certain conditions that would lead them to come here—a donation of a two-acre lot, a two-story brick building, a one-story brick building and a boiler room. They agreed to put in machinery and shafting. As the Board could not well afford to offer such inducements, the communication was filed

The resignations of G. O. Stevens, Charles L. Moffett and Crane & Clark were received and accepted, and the action of dropping other members for non-payment of dues was deferred until the next meeting.

Charles W. Runyon, of the committee on trolley matters, reported that a system of transfers had been secured between this city and Dunellen, and that such system was due to the efforts of the Board. A report was made concerning the Washingtonville trolley. It was stated that such a line could be secured if the residents in that locality and the Mountain Park Inn management would come to some agreement. Their differences of opinion make action impossible, for some want one thing and others want something else. The Washingtonville people also desire telephone connection, which they no doubt can have by paying for it.

Mr. Runyon stated that at one time there was only $280 standing in the way of the trolley to the Valley, but certain difficulties arose which blocked the matter. He also said that the Plainfield Street Railway Company was not inclined to do many things that most companies would be glad to do. He cited the expense that the Brunswick Traction Company was burdened with in comparison, such as building bridges, etc.

A report was also made concerning Arlington avenue and it was stated that there is no doubt but what the extension will be a fact. Over one thousand feet of consents, more than needed, has been secured. The owners of the property opposite the schools on Arlington avenue have agreed to give nine feet of the land to widen the avenue as I have deposited $200 as an evidence of good faith. The trolley company is to do the work. The President spoke concerning the right of the Board of Education to sign for the trolley. It was stated that Corporation Counsel Marsh's opinion was that it would be all right if the members signed as a Board.

There was reference made to the macadamizing of Watchung avenue where the trolley made an extension of their switch. Mr. Runyon said that the trolley company was going to do the work, but the Council held back and said they would do it, and thus the matter rests. It was reported that Superintendent Adleman refuses to remove the side rails from the trolley cars.

WASHINGTONVILLE WANTS POSTOFFICE.

Will Petition Postmaster-General For One.

NOW TWO MILES FROM ONE.

MOST OF THE PEOPLE HAVE TO COME TO PLAINFIELD.

Warrensville and Gillis Have Distinct Offices at Present—Washingtonville Says It is More Entitled to Office Than They Are—Petition is Signed By All Prominent Citizens—Gives the Reasons

Washingtonville wants a postoffice of its own It has long wanted one, but now steps are being taken to bring these hopes to a successful realization. A petition has been drawn up and signed by all the prominent residents of that district. It sets forth the reasons why Washingtonville is entitled to an office. The petition will be presented to the Postmaster General at Washington next week.

Most of the residents of Washingtonville and vicinity now have to drive to Plainfield, a distance of two and a half miles, to secure their mail. Others go to Warrenville which is two miles in the other direction. At Warrenville there are twenty-nine families that have the benefit of the office located there. Two miles further away is Gallia, commonly called Mt. Bethel, where thirty-two families benefit from a postoffice located there.

The mail intended for these offices is carried by a wagon that goes from the Plainfield postoffice through the Gap and the Washington Valley, passing right through Washingtonville. The expense to the Government, the residents of Washingtonville claim, would be but slightly more to drop off the mail in Washingtonville.

Washingtonville has, they say, a greater right to a distinct service than these other places mentioned. In Washingtonville there are forty families that would be benefited by a distinct service there. Then Washingtonville has a grocery, a feed store, a hotel, a restaurant, an ice company, a stock and a poultry farm, a glove manufactory and two stone quarries.

All these industries in and near Washingtonville would give the post office, should one be established there a fair revenue from the sale of stamps The new settlement at Somerset Park where a number of new houses are in the course of erection or are soon to be started is advanced as another argument in favor of the office.

The people of that neighborhood are in one accord regarding the pos, office. They all want it and there wa, no trouble at all in securing the signatures of the leading township officials and property owners for the petition There are seventy names attached to the petition.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

DEVICE TO PREVENT REFILLING A BOTTLE.

It Is the Invention of Chas. Overbaugh, of This City.

SAID TO WORK PERFECTLY.

$125,000 STOCK COMPANY TO MANUFACTURE IT.

Mr. Overbaugh Has Solved the Question That Has Been Puzzling Inventors for Years—The Device is a Simple One Which Will Act Effectively—The Incorporators of the Proposed Company.

Charles Overbaugh, of this city, has, after four years of hard work and study, succeeded in inventing a non-refilling bottle. To all appearances Mr. Overbaugh has solved a question that has been puzzling inventors for years. It is claimed that there are no less than three thousand inventions along the same line, but Mr. Overbaugh says he has successfully outwitted his competitors. In view of what he has accomplished a company was organized Monday with a capital of $125,000. The incorporators are Chas. Overbaugh, who is president and inventor; N. B. Smalley, secretary; Geo Voehl, treasurer; David Smalley and John E. Beerbower. Reed & Coding ton have drawn up the papers necessary and the company will begin work at once.

The purpose of the invention is to prevent any person from filling a bottle again after it has been filled and emptied, and in the sale of whiskies, liquors, etc., it will prove especially desirable, for probably in no other business is such deception practiced. A certain kind of liquor is sold to a dealer and after the contents are sold he is apt to fill the bottle with an inferior article. With this invention such practices are impossible. The arrangement is all in the neck of the bottle and resembles an ordinary filter. Inside there are two small balls, one that will float and another of hard substance that will not. Liquid is easily poured from the bottle, but the small balls inside prevent it being poured back or refilled. The neck of the bottle is a little longer than the ordinary, but does not detract from the appearance of it. Mr. Overbaugh has demonstrated beyond doubt the success of his patent and there seems to be no question as to it.

On Monday next Mr. Overbaugh will have the patent on exhibition when all persons interested can see it.

AMONG THE STEPPERS.

The performance last Saturday on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving *Park Associationby A C Vail's remark*able trotter, "Kenelm," has attracted widespread attention from all lovers of good horse racing in this vicinity When it is known that this horse trotted a mile with a road wagon weighing 125 pounds in 2:26¼. It will also be known that Mr. Vail has a horse that has his equal in only a very few cases Mr Vail drove his horse in the exhibition mile race and handled him in a masterly fashion. Not once did he break, his action being superb. This horse has done even better than 2:26¼ In 1897 Mr. Vail purchased "Kenelm" from W. F. French, of North Anson, Me. He has given exhibition miles over a half-mile track in time all the way from 2:24½ to 2:30. Mr. Vail purchased the horse when he was six years old, with a record of 2:24¼,which he got in a seven-heat race at the Lewiston, Me., State fair. That same time the horse made a mile in 2:31 and a fraction. On the statement of the Vail Farm and Home, a sporting paper, "Kenelm" is one of the best horses ever raised in the section from which he came. He is now in the pink of condition and can trot a very fast mile. Mr. Vail prizes him highly and takes great pride in his perform ances

John Schoop, of Jackson avenue, has bought Silas C. Munday's well known trotter "Timer," record 2:20.

Next Saturday there will again be some fine racing on the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association track, and some speedy horses will be entered.

It is expected that there will at least a half dozen speedy Plainfield horses entered the two days' race meet to be held at New Brunswick August 30th and 31st. Their owners are now getting them in condition for the meet.

George Proctor Smith, of Putnam avenue, is home after a pleasant vacation spent at Warwick, N. Y.

WHEELING FOR MEDALS AT SCOTCH PLAINS

LeMathy, of Westfield, Wins the 16-Mile Road Race.

HARRY WRIGHT IS SECOND.

EXCITING CONTEST BETWEEN THE TWO SCRATCH MEN.

Colored Rider from Plainfield Defeats Westfield's Crack Rider in a Close Finish—Protest Made by Ransom Not Entertained—Spirited Contest and a Large Crowd of Spectators Present.

Scotch Plains, August 21—The sixteen mile road race, held under the auspices of William S. Emery, on Saturday afternoon, was the most interesting event of the kind that has been held in this borough in some months. The heat was very oppresive, but this did not interfere with a large attendance from Plainfield, Netherwood, Westfield, Cranford and other near by places, many ladies being present.

The races were not run under any rules, save those made by the proprietor of the Scotch Plains hotel. The provisions of the race were that the contestants should start from the hotel and ride four miles to a point opposite Miller's farm, and return and repeat the trip, making a distance of sixteen miles.

The prizes were gold, silver and bronze medals, with a silver cup to the man who shall win the first prize three times.

The start and finish were at the hotel. Landlord Emery was master of ceremonies and saw that each contestant had a fair chance.

Frank Shuck was clerk of the course, William Walters, scorer; Harry Lister, starter and time keeper, while Walter Hetfield filled the position of checker at the four mile turn.

Following are the names of the contestants and the handicap placed against them:

Charles E. LeMathy, Westfield, 4-minute handicap.
Harry G. Wright, Springfield, 4-minute handicap.
Arthur Chapin, Scotch Plains, 3-minute handicap.
Joseph Hamilton, Berkley Heights, 3-minute handicap.
A. N. Ransom, Netherwood, 2-minute handicap.
John Townsend Cranford, 2-minute handicap.
William Christian, Westfield, 2-minute handicap.
Joseph Burke, Plainfield, 2-minute handicap.
William K. Embleton, Westfield, 1-minute handicap.
Fred L. Walters, Berkley Heights, 1-minute handicap.
Peter J. Simmons, (colored,) Plainfield, scratch.
Charles Embleton, Westfield, scratch.

The race was started at exactly 4:11 o'clock in the order named above. The fact that one of the contestants was [a colored man from Plainfield served to bring out a large number of that race, and there was much interest taken in the match between Simmons and Charles Embleton, the scratch men.

The race was won by Charles E LeMathy in 45 minutes. He covered the first four miles in 21 minutes, being closely followed by Wright. Ransom, of Netherwood, was third.

Walters, of Berkley Heights, found the pace too fast and he dropped after covering the first four miles. Hamilton, of the same place, did not finish, although he made the first twelve miles.

The most exciting part of the race was the struggle between the scratch men. Embleton got the lead at the start and held it for the first half of the contest but was overtaken on the home stretch and the colored rider from Plainfield crossed the tape by nearly three lengths to the good, amidst great enthusiasm, both white and colored spectators cheering and applauding the winner generously. The colored contingent gathered around their champion at the close of the race and nearly smothered him with congratulations.

The race was finished in this order: LeMathy, Wright, Ransom, Chapin, Christine, Burke, Townsend, Simmons, Charles Embleton, W. K. Embleton, Walters and Hamilton.

Simmons' time was given out as 45 minutes and that of Charles Embleton 45 minutes and 25 seconds. A protest was made by Ransom and some of his friends over awarding LeMathy the first prize on the ground that he had been paced when on the upper part of the course. This was denied by the winner and his friends. As the race was not run under the rules of the L. A. W., Mr. Emery and the judges decided not to entertain any protests, and the prizes were awarded in the order in which the men finished. The medals, which were very handsome, were presented to the winners in the dining room of the hotel by Mr. Emery in the presence of the judges and newspaper men.

When the bronze medal was presented to Ransom, whom the judges decided was entitled to the third prize, that gentleman put up a vigorous kick and said that he wanted the first prize or none. He was told by the judges that they had made their decision and did not intend to reverse it. Then Ransom reached for the medal which he deliberately threw in a vicious manner upon the floor two or three times. When Landland Emery suggested to him that he was not compelled to accept the medal, Ransom tore it from the handsome case and throwing that upon the floor left the room.

The silver cup was presented to LeMathy later in the evening. He will be compelled to win it twice more to have it become his property. The next race will be held Saturday, September 2d. Entries will close the 31st.

A feature of Saturday's races was the absence of any rowdy element or disturbance of any moment.

TO HEAD OFF ITS RIVALS.

PENNSYLVANIA PLANS ELECTRIC LINE TO PARALLEL MAIN ROUTE.

The Lines Will be Local, But Will Eventually Form a Complete System Between New York and Washington.

There are evidences that the Pennsylvania Railroad is going to construct trolley lines to run parallel with its main line. The lines will be local, but eventually will form a complete system between New York and Washington. It is impossible to get any definite information as to the details of the scheme.

This much is known that the company had filed with the Secretary of State the maps and description of the road that is to go through Trenton. The reason why it is known that the Pennsylvania Railroad is interested, is because the route takes in the lower bridge across the Delaware river, which is now used as the railroad bridge.

The outlet is across the Brunswick pike, now opened by the Pennsylvania Railroad, which it offers to the city for the right of way through the several city streets.

The Brunswick pike leads toward Princeton and New Brunswick. The crossing of the Delaware indicates that the line will go down the Bristol pike toward Philadelphia. The plans are being developed by a special agent of the railroad, and the officers are in the Broad Street Station. The information obtainable is very meagre.

The purpose is supposed to be to head off rival schemes.

EXCURSIONISTS BELATED

HOPE CHAPEL PEOPLE DID NOT GET HOME UNTIL MORNING.

Stalled by a Wreck Near Elizabethport—Overseer of the Poor Hansen Bought Milk for the Little Babies.

The attendance at the Hope chapel services yesterday morning and afternoon was smaller than usual, which can be accounted for by the fact that Saturday the members went to Asbury Park for the day and did not reach home until nearly 1 o'clock yefterday morning. The excursionists occupied twelve cars and left Asbury Park at 8 o'clock to come home. Everything was all right until Elizabethport was reached.

Just previous to their arrival there was a wreck of two freight trains by a rear end collision. Two oil tank cars and a freight car on the eastbound track were overturned and they completely blockaded all traffic for nearly three hours.

The Plainfielders were stalled and great anxiety was felt concerning the babies and young children on the train. Overseer of the Poor Hansen, of this city, was on board, and he thoughtfully secured a large quantity of milk for the babies. Everyone on board realized the situation and made the best of things. The older people gave up their seats for the little ones who were given a chance to sleep.

Houston's Lad's Health Not Good.

Victor L. Houston, the little lad recently shot by Halstead Compton, has been taken to Asbury Park by his mother for a few weeks, hoping the change of air will improve his general health, which seems to have been seriously impaired from the shock to his system. He has grown quick. Dr. Fritts now thinks it will be necessary to remove one of the shot imbedded in knee joint.

A Public Hearing.

At the next meeting of the Common Council Tuesday evening, September 5th, the franchise for the Arlington avenue trolley will be considered. A public hearing will be given to all persons desiring to speak for or against the introduction of the trolley on that avenue.

Overhead Cables Down.

The employes of the telephone company have completed the work of taking down the overhead cables in the city. Some of them will be used elsewhere, where underground conduits have not been laid.

Mr and Mrs. Henry VanName, of Elmwood place, are expected to return from New York state next week. They have been absent for nearly a month.

Mr and Mrs. Luther Morris and their young daughter, of West Front street, who are ill with diphtheria, are reported to be improving.

AWOKE AND FOUND ROOM ALL ABLAZE.

Frightened Italians Fled From Burning Shanty.

LAMP WAS CAUSE OF FIRE.

PATSY CHRISTMAS' STORE AND LODGING HOUSE DESTROYED.

Shanty Is Located By Old Railway Embankment Near "Count" VanNess' Farm —Lamp Is Supposed To Have Exploded—Four Italians Were Asleep There, Rest Of Boarders Spent the Night Outdoors.

The explosion of a lamp in Patsy Christmas' shanty near East Second street, early Saturday a. m., wrought general destruction to the establishment and the four Italians sleeping there had to hustle to get out alive. As it was one of their number was badly burned.

The shanty serves the double purpose of store and lodging house for the Italian employes of Contractor Christmas. There also Christmas sells the necessities of life to the occupants of the Italian colony in that vicinity. The shanty is located close to the old railway embankment, just west of "Count" Van Ness' farm.

A lamp was left burning in the store Friday night. Most of the tenants preferred to sleep in the open air on account of the heat, but four remained inside. At 4:30 Saturday a. m. something happened to the lamp. As nobody was awake at the time they do not know exactly what occurred. One of the Italians dreamed that the end of the world had come and that he had descended to unknown depths where it was extremely hot. He woke up to find the room all ablaze. With a yell he departed without taking time to collect his thoughts or his wearing apparel.

The other occupants heard the yell and there was no delay in their departure into outer darkness. John Micco was somewhat slow in leaving and the flames enveloped him for a moment. His face, side and arms were badly burned.

There was no attempt to extinguish the flames which soon reduced the shanty to a heap of smouldering embers. Patsy Christmas had just laid in a new stock for his store. Friday he purchased $150 worth of goods from J. A. Smith & Brother.

Patsy did not hear of the fire until this morning. He places his total loss at $800. The building and contents was insured for $600 through the agency of W. V. Mundy.

MORE DELAY AT ROSELLE.

Another Hitch in the Trolley Right of Way Through the Borough.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Roselle, Aug. 20.—The Council committee in charge of widening Second avenue, through this borough, for the Elizabeth and Westfield street railway, reported to the Council that all of the property owners except three were willing to consent to widening the avenue.

In the cases where consents will not be given the committee thought it advisable to ask for a commission, and go through condemnation proceedings.

Colonel Hine, representing the railway company, was present, and asked that the proceedings be taken without delay, as his company was anxious to get the road in operation.

Amusement at the Hunterston.

Saturday afternoon was spent in a most pleasureable manner at the Hotel Hunterston when the "putting" game and lawn tennis were the features of amusement. The winners in the first named sport, Miss Woodward and F. L. Kane, Jr. At lawn tennis Miss Snyder and T.H. Fair won the honors. In the evening the benefit dance for the orchestra was held and liberally patronized.

A New Feed Store.

A. Kane, the contractor, is about to open a new store at 409 East Third street, where he will conduct a feed business, and he expects to keep everything in that line in large quantities. He will remove his present office from 103 East Fourth street, to the above address, and he asks for a continuance of the patronage of the public.

Mrs. Thomas. E. Currin, of the borough, has been visiting relatives at Princeton for a time.

Mrs. George Bullman, of the borough, is visiting her brother, Rev. Mr. Miles, of Hyde Park, N. Y.

L. W. Randolph and wife, of Washington Park, are entertaining Mrs. Randolph and her daughter, of Newark.

Miss Ethel Wyckoff, of Somerville, is spending the remainder of her vacation with Miss Tyrrell, of Manning avenue.

The condition of Moses Brown, of East Fourth street, is exceedingly critical, and hopes of his recovery have been given up.

PRESS CENSOR? NEVER!

THE LITTLE JUSTICE'S EFFORTS TO SUPPRESS A CASE.

Refused to Exhibit the Court Records Until Threatened With Legal Proceedings—An Arrest Was to be Kept Quiet.

George Huff, who has been a collector for the Metropolitan Savings and Loan Association of Newark, has been held by Justice Mosher to await the action of the Grand Jury on a charge of embezzlement. The complaint was made by Fred, W. Snover, superintendent of agents, who charges that Huff between Sept. 1st, 1897, and April 1st, 1898, had embezzled $64 from the above company.

The accused lives in Dunellen. The complaint was made Wednesday, August 9th and the warrant for Huff's arrest was issued by Justice Mosher the following day. The arrest, however, was not made until Tuesday, August 16th, when Huff was arranged at 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

The reason the arrest of Huff was not made public before is because Justice Mosher had attempted to suppress the facts. He told a reporter of the Press that he had "promised not to made the case public and he didn't propose to give it out." By accident a reporter learned that Huff had been arrested. When a Press reporter asked Justice Mosher regarding it the latter declined to make a statement. The reporter than requested the justice to show him the deposition and complaint. This also was refused.

The reporter sought legal advice and was told that the court records were open to public inspection and that the reporter could compel the magistrate to allow an inspection of his books. The demand was made, but the little justice flatly refused to hand out the books or to show the papers in the case.

Justice Mosher did not relent until he learned that steps were being taken by the publishers of The Daily Press and News to institute legal proceedings to compel the justice to exhibit records of his court.

It has not developed why Justice Mosher wished to suppress the facts in the above arrest. The position he assumed is certainly strange, and contrary to precedent. The records of the court are open to the public. Any attempt on the part of a magistrate to keep from the public the business of the court subjects that official to open criticism. Justice Mosher's efforts to act as a censor of the press will miscarry.

A CONCRETE PLATFORM.

Splendid Improvement to be Made at North Avenue Station.

The Central Railroad Company is about to make an improvement that will be appreciated by every patron of the road. At the North Avenue station the wooden platform now doing service in front of the station will be removed and in its place will be put down a solid concrete platform extending from the stone pavement to the tracks. The cement and sand have arrived and the work will be started within a very short time. The company finds it to their advantage to replace wood with concrete whenever they can, and the improvement in this city will be welcomed by all.

BRILLIANT PAGEANT ON CRANFORD RIVER

Annual Carnival of the Cranford Boating Association.

WAS HELD SATURDAY NIGHT

THREE THOUSAND VISITORS CAME FROM ALL PARTS OF COUNTY.

Carnival Was a Great Success—Great Crowds Came By Train, Awheel And Every Sort of Vehicle—Sixty-three Craft In Line—Handsome Decorations On Lawn and River—Prize Winners In The Parade.

Cranford, August 21—Cranford was the Mecca Saturday evening for more than three thousand people who journeyed to this place by train, awheel and in every imaginable kind of vehicle to witness the annual river carnival of the Cranford Boating Association. These pilgrims thronged the banks of the Cranford river for nearly a mile and joined with the good folk of Cranford in watching the brilliant water pageant and admiring the handsome decoration of the river crafts and bodering lawns.

The carnival is an annual affair, and the one of Saturday evening was the thirteenth of its kind. There was nothing unlucky about it, however. It was declared a great success by all who saw it. The decoration and illumination of the town was by far the most elaborate of any year. The streets leading to the river and the river bank were strung with thousands of Chinese lanterns. On the lawns along the river, lanterns and other means of decoration were built into artistic structures. Colored fire and fireworks were used at intervals.

The trains from both directions came into Cranford literally running over with expectant sightseers. The threatening clouds undoubtedly influenced many to come in that manner. There was no lack of cyclists and carriage parties, however. They were so numerous that it was very difficult to navigate the streets of the town.

The scene on the river was a beautiful one, with its border of lights and the fleet of small craft, all decorated with many colored lights, moving up and down the river. The procession was a little slow in starting. It was preceded by a band concert by Bartow's Band, which occupied a stand close to the river at a central point. Near by was the judges' stand at the boat house of Santiago Porcella. The judges were J. Austin Dennis, chairman of the Westfield Township Committee; E. C. Webb, of Brooklyn, and Sergeant C. Lawrence Barry, of the U. S. Marines, whose home is in Cranford.

The procession started at 9 o'clock and was led by Commodore George Harvey Miller and Vice-Commodore D. P. Smock. The band followed on a large float. Then came 63 canoes, rowboats and floats, all variously decorated.

The prize for the best decorated canoe, a silver loving cup, was awarded to Howard Cox, whose canoe represented a huge crown, all hung with lanterns. Honorable mention was given to W. W. Buckley, whose canoe was surmounted by a bower of white. Wright Newcomb had two canoes in line which were both decorated with electric lights. One was propelled by himself. The other, which represented three white pond lilies, was in charge of Miss Edith Newcomb. Many thought these were the best and most artistic of the canoes.

J. P. M. Joseph received the first prize for the best decorated row boat, a silk club pennant. He had a charming little tea party in his boat. A clever idea was a canoe, propelled by two young Indians, entered by E. A. Hopkins. H. C. Hopkins had a very unstable float in line, the only one to compete. Consequently he received first prize.

All five bridges in Cranford were gaily bedecked for the occasion. The most elaborate was that of the Springfield avenue bridge which represented a huge diamond of colored lanterns. The decorations were in charge of D. P. Smock and B. D. Chandler. James M. Moore had a great firey "Dewey" on his lawn.

Commodore Miller had a general supervision over the whole affair and to his energetic efforts are due most of the success of the carnival. He was given splendid support by his club members and townsfolk who all aided in the success of the affair.

Miss Richards, of New York, who has been visiting her brother, Edward Richards, of this city, has returned home.

Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Taylor, of Park avenue, have gone to Pocono Mountain to join their son who is spending his vacation there.

Willard Force, of Brooklyn, has been spending a few days with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Force, of Carlton avenue.

Chief Marshal Campbell, of the borough, returned to duty today after being confined to the house for several days by illness.

FAST TROTTING ENJOYED

EVENTS AT GENTLEMEN'S DRIVING PARK SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Match Race Between "Myrtle F." and "Viola F." Won by the Latter—Several Other Match Races and an Exhibition.

A fair-sized crowd assembled Saturday afternoon at the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association to witness some good racing by local horses. Owing to the very warm weather there was not as many present as on the preceding Saturday, but there was just as much interest. An exhibition mile trot was given by A. C. Vail's speedy mare, and she made the circuit in 2:27 without a break. It was one of the best races of the day.

A match race between Thomas Brantingham's "Myrtle Twig" and Robert Fairbairn's "Viola F." The first heat was the fastest, the time being 2:21, and was won by Viola F.," who also won the second heat in 2:24.

Another exciting race was trotted by D. Darby's "Sunday" and J. W. Johnson's "Barney Williams." "Sunday" captured the heat in 2:32½, and his opponent the second heat in 2:28.

A race arranged between N. B. Smalley's "Kittie Rue;" A.I. Smalley's "Belle," and Wm. Baldwin's "Jeanes," was interesting. "Belle" won in 2:34, while "Jeanes" scored 2:26 and and "Kittie Rue," 2:27½.

Another race was between N. B. Smalley's "Frank F.;" J. M. Smalley's "Prince," and F. S. Emmons' "Sam H." "Frank F." won the race in 2:41.

The last event was an exhibition mile by Harry Gwynett's "Sable Wilkes." The time was 2:46.

The three pacers, "Jeaness," "Belle" and "Kittie Rue" will race again next Saturday, when it is to be hoped that A. B. Giddis, of Bound Brook, will enter his pacer, who defeated "Sunday" and "Fairmount Maid" some time ago."

HE RULED TROLLEY CAR

ANDY BENFORD'S STAFF OF OFFICE WAS HUGE BOULDER.

Passengers Fled From Car Fearing Trouble -- Exciting Trip From Scotch Plains Saturday Night.

When car No. 20 of the Plainfield Street Railway Company made its last trip to Plainfield Saturday night from Scotch Plains Andrew Benford assumed temporary command. His staff of office was a huge boulder with which he promised to break the head of anybody who interfered with him. Many of the passengers left the car, fearing trouble.

Wm. Brown was motorman and Philip Maguire conductor. They used all peaceable means to persuade the obnoxious passenger to leave the car. But contamination with Scotch Plains air had hardened Andrew against all moral suasion and he remained.

At Fourth street Superintendent Adelmann boarded the car. Something in his broad shoulder decided Benford to leave the car, but Adelmann said he had stayed so long that he had better remain longer. He did so and was turned over to an officer, who locked him up.

This morning Andy was arraigned before City Judge Runyon and fined $10 for his temporary reign. Andy is the son of Mrs. Maggie Benford, of Paradise alley.

COLLISION OF BICYCLISTS.

Alfred Adams Ran Into a Tandem and Severely Bruised.

Alfred Adams, of 135 North avenue, was severely injured about 2 o'clock Friday morning while riding his wheel through Fanwood on his way home. It was very dark along the road he was traveling and he failed to notice in time a tandem coming toward him. Before he could prevent a collision the two wheels came together with sufficient force to completely wreck the wheel which Adams was riding, and injured the rider to such an extent that he had to be assisted to the railroad station and sent home on the train reaching this city about 9 o'clock. At the North Avenue station Patrolman Myers had to assist the man to his home.

The riders of the tandem, whose names could not be learned, escaped without injury, although their wheel was slightly twisted. Adams' injuries consists of bruises, lacerations, and his arm and leg were injured so that he will be unable to use either for several days.

A Newsboys' Union.

Some time during this week the newsboys of the city will form a union for themselves and will make an effort to secure agents on time and pay monthly or weekly. Dues will be charged and every boy will have protection against other boys who only sell papers when some exciting features are published, such as yacht races, etc. It is expected that about twenty-five boys will join the union. At the meeting to be held this week officers will be elected and by-laws will be adopted.

Dudley S. Miller and family, of Orchard place, who have been spending a week of their vacation with friends at Whippany, will spend this week at Seabright.

TROPHY HONORS GO TO CRACK GOLFERS.

Weekly Competition at Park Golf Club Links.

ANDERSON'S LOW SCORE.

ANDERSON AND DRYDEN ARE NOW TIED FOR THIRD PLACE.

Gifford W. Cooley Still Leads in the Competition for McCutchen Cup by Half a Point—Low Scores Made Saturday Afternoon—Most of the Crack Players Were on Hand—Course in Good Shape.

Gifford W. Cooley still leads in the competition for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen Cup on the links of the Park Golf Club although, as a result of the play Saturday afternoon, his lead was greatly deminished and he only retains it by half a point. The honors of the afternoon's play were carried off by the crack golfers of the club, W. de la R. Anderson without any handicap making the lowest net score.

The less expert element was absent Saturday afternoon, while the leaders were with a few exceptions on hand and made low scores in comparison with those of the last few weeks. There was not many out during the afternoon, but most of those who went round took part in the tournament. The course was in good condition and no high grass to bother. The threatening clouds and the humid atmosphere kept many away, particularly the ladies, who were few and far between on the course during the afternoon.

Anderson was back again and took part in the competition for the trophy. He made the rounds with W. J. B. Thiers, who was playing a better game than usual. At the start neither of them did anything brilliant, but they warmed up to the game and did some very clever work at driving and on the fair green. Anderson completed the eighteen holes in 95, three more than the lowest tournament score made by himself and Fred P. Taylor.

Gifford W. Cooley and Charles E. Faber played together in the tournament round and made fair scores. Both were evidently a little out of their usual good form and failed to score for the trophy. Meredith Dryden, the club secretary, came to the top with a rush again that gave him third honor for the afternoon. Steady playing and a fair handicap won him a net score of 98. Volney F. Green, who distinguished himself a week ago by winning second honor, was not at his best and failed to do better than 136 for the eighteen holes.

The afternoon's play made several changes in the order of the competitors for the McCutchen Cup. Colley still leads with eight points. Anderson, who was fifth, and Dryden, who was third, have both stepped up to second place and are tried for it with seven and a half points. C. E. Faber is now fourth and G. W. Faber fifth. Thiers scored for the first time since the competition was begun.

The scores handed in during the afternoon in the cup competition were as follows:

	Gross.	Handica.	Net.
W. de la R. Anderson	95	0	95
W. J. B. Thiers	136	40	96
Meredith Dryden	115	17	98
Gifford W. Cooley	109	9	100
Charles E. Faber	120	18	102
Volney F. Green	136	34	102

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

Gifford W. Cooley	8
Charles E. Faber	7½
Meredith Dryden	7½
W. de la R. Anderson	6
G. W. Faber	5
W. J. B. Thiers	4
R. T. Douglass	3
Geo. T. Rogers	3
Geo. T. Rogers	3
Fred P. Taylor	2½
E. S. Squires	1½
W. J. Townsend	1½
A. B. Laine	1
W. J. B. Thiers	1
Fred S. Overton	1
Clarence S. Boone	½
Augustus Van Deventer	½
C. W. McCutchen	½

Miss Daisy Elsberg competed for the Battfield Cup and handed in her score for the nine holes. Her gross score was 80, and after deducting her handicap of 18, gave her a net score of 62. Miss Elsberg has been a regular competitor for the cup almost every week. Miss Saidee Mae Howell has also taken part in the contest occasionally. There is little doubt, however, but that Miss Elsberg will win the cup.

AFTER FORTY YEARS HE GETS A FORTUNE.

Good Luck of Gus Frazee, the Old Expressman.

BREAD CAST UPON WATER.

LOAN OF $3,500 REMEMBERED BY BEQUEST OF $15 000.

The Bequest Comes From an Old Friend Who Died in the West and Who Had Received a Great Favor From Frazee While Living and Doing a Manufacturing Business in Newark.

Henry August Frazee, of South avenue, who for twenty-five years was a "pony" expressman running between Plainfield and New York on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, Thursday received a letter from W. E. Robinson, of Toledo, O., which stated that as soon as the final details could be settled Mr. Frazee would receive $15,000 under the terms of the will of the late William P. Hedden, who died in the west some time ago. Mr. Frazee's good fortune comes to him as the result of a favor he did for his benefactor forty years ago.

In 1859 Mr. Frazee was engaged in business in Newark, and at that time had succeeded in saving a few thousand dollars. Among his most intimate friends in Newark was Hedden, who had engaged in the manufacture of novelties. Hedden met with ill luck for a time and Frazee loaned him $3,500 with which to continue his business. The venture was a profitless one, however, and the money was lost. Discouraged and disheartened Hedden decided to leave the east and go west and try his luck. Before bidding Frazee good-bye he promised that if he ever met with good fortune again he would return the loan which had been given by the latter.

Year after year passed, however, and as Frazee lost track of Hedden he concluded that he would never be reimbursed for the money he had lent. Frazee did not prosper either as he had when he had made the loan, and after a few years he engaged in the "pony" express business on the Central, being among the pioneers in this work. For a quarter of a century he went back and forth to New York, and eventually forgot his transaction with Hedden. Seven years ago he found that his years were telling on him—he having passed the three score point—and he decided to retire, his son, Whitney Frazee, taking up the business where he had left off. Since that time Frazee has resided modestly in this city. Four years ago he fractured his leg in a runaway team, and had to have the member amputated.

A few weeks the old man was visited by Robinson, from whom he received the letter yesterday. The latter told him that after leaving Newark Hedden had drifted into the far west where he had engaged in mining ventures and had succeeded in making a fortune. In the intervening years between his departure from Frazee and the time of his death, which occurred a few months ago, Hedden had not forgotten his old friend, even though they had drifted apart in the world. In the will that he had made Hedden had bequeathed his friend of forty years ago $15,000 in return for the favor shown him in his earlier days.

Robinson secured the necessary evidence of identification of Frazee while here and when he left he said he would soon hear from the executors of the estate. Yesterday the good news came.

The money will come as a great blessing to the old man, who is nearing seventy years of life in this world, but he says that until he receives the return of "the bread cast upon the waters" years ago he does not propose to say what he will do with it.

UNDER THE TREE A SKELETON.

Workmen Were Lifting a Fallen Tree in the Old Cemetery.

Workmen clearing up in the First Presbyterian church cemetery, Elizabeth, recently devastated by a tornado, attempted recently to raise a maple tree that was blown down. Past among the roots of the tree they found the skeleton of a man, the upper part of which was in an excellent state of preservation. How the skeleton escaped being seen by the thousands of people who have roamed about the graveyard hunting for relics is a surprise to the church officials.

The body was clothed in a black coat. The remains were carefully put back in the hole caused by the uprooting of the tree, which was planted in its original position. It is hoped the tree will grow as the roots did not appear to be injured.

Cosgrove Still Lives.

Wm. Cosgrove, of California, who is detained at the hospital with a broken back, remains about the same. There is scarcely any change in his condition from the day he entered the hospital. He suffers very little pain and seems to be getting along very well.

BISHOP WIGGER TO BORROW $1,500,000.

Head of the Catholic Diocese of Newark Will Effect a Loan.

A BIG SAVING IN INTEREST.

PARISHES WHICH PAY FIVE AND SIX PER CENT. WILL BE RELIEVED.

Under the New Arrangement Only Three and a Half Per Cent. Will Be Exacted From the Church—English Syndicate Made the Offer, and Will Save Money for the Churches.

Bishop W. M. Wigger, of the Roman Catholic diocese of Newark, will complete within a few days arrangements for a loan of $1,500,000. The loan will be used by the rectors whose churches now carry mortgages upon which five or six per cent. interest is paid.

Under the new arrangement only 3½ per cent. will be exacted for the church mortgages, and it is said the result will be a net saving to the churches of the Newark diocese of many thousands of dollars.

The big loan is being secured by the Bishop from an English syndicate, and it is said if he finds the amount specified not sufficient to take up all the mortgages in the diocese he is in a position to get $1,000,000 more from the same syndicate.

Bishop Wigger was not at Seton Hall College yesterday. Rev. George Doane O'Neill, chancellor of the diocese, said he was not in a position to discuss the details of the loan. However, the loan has practically been made, and in a few days the Bishop will be in a position to enter into negotiations with any of the parish priests who desire to cancel the mortgages they now have on their churches and upon which they are paying five per cent interest or more.

The Bishop, it is said, did not experience much trouble in negotiating the loan, the foreign syndicate having implicit confidence in the Catholic church property in Newark diocese. It is regarded as gilt edge security. It is approximated that the church property in the diocese is worth $6,000,000 or $7,000,000.

Several Jersey City priests have already signified their willingness to make their loans from the fund to be raised by Bishop Wigger.

By this loan the Bishop, it is said, will save for many parishes an amount equal, if not more, than the sum they are taxed on account of the new cathedral. He does not propose to have this edifice mortgaged at all. The idea is to have it completed in ten years and to pay for it as the work progresses.

STRICTLY BOROUGH AFFAIR.

Why City Fire Departments are Not Invited by Warren Engine Co.

The members of Warren Engine Company, of the borough, do not wish it to be understood that they in any way slighted the Plainfield firemen in their invitations for the parade to be held October 12th. The city department is a paid one, and is not in a position to engage in a firemen's parade, especially in another county. Besides they are not all provided with uniforms. The borough firemen's parade will probably not come to the city, it being their desire to make the affair strictly a borough affair. They do not propose to ask Plainfield for any support in arranging or giving the parade, and they want to keep the celebration in the borough. There are no hard feelings among the borough and city firemen for each understand one another and that is sufficient.

To Destroy 2,500 Coal "Jimmies."

The Central Railroad Company has recently purchased a large number of new coal cars of the gondola size, which they are now using quite extensively. The cars were furnished by the American Car and Foundry Company, with which B. A. Hegeman, Jr., of Washington Park, is associated. The company has bought up about twenty-five hundred coal cars of the jimmy style from the Central Company and they will destroy them, there being no further use for them.

Funeral of F. W. Martin.

The funeral services of the late F. W. Martin were held yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the house on Duer street, in the borough. Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman, of Grace P. E. church, officiated. The members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., of which the departed was a member, attended the funeral in a body and took part in the services at the grave. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives, and the floral display was very pretty.

Jolly Time at Columbia Lodge.

There was a jolly time at Columbia Lodge Friday. The oppressive weather did not prevent the usual weekly game of quoits. Messrs. Lounsbury and Nischwitz were pitted against Messrs. Forrestel and Bauersachs. The latter team won two games out of three. The prize was a box of cigars. After the game refreshments, consisting of cake and ice cream, were served.

SIX-YEAR-OLD BOY WAS A TRUE HERO.

Gave Up His Life to Save Brother and Sister.

RUNAWAY TEAM KILLED HIM

BENT ON RESCUING THE OTHERS HE WAS FATALLY INJURED.

The Children Were Playing in Street Down Which a Runaway Team Was Coming—Little Rudolph Becker Saw the Danger and Acted With Heroism Quite Remarkable for One of His Years.

Rudolph Becker, six years old, was killed at Metuchen Friday afternoon while making a brave and successful effort to save the lives of his younger brother and sister. A team of horses attached to the delivery wagon of Mrs. H. B. Zimmerman, of New Brunswick, had been left tied in front of a hotel in Menlo Park, while the driver, Martin Zimmerman, a son of the owner, was inside. The horses, bothered by flies, broke loose and bolted down the road to Metuchen. Several men tried to stop them, but they turned into New street at full gallop.

The three children of Rudolph H. Becker, Jr., proprietor of the New Brunswick Hotel, were playing in the street. They were Rudolph, 6 years; Nathan, 4 years, and Elizabeth, 3 years. The older boy heard the clatter of hoofs. He was near the curb and out of danger. He might have saved himself, but instead he ran out, caught his sister and drew her to one side. Then he darted directly in front of the horses in a brave effort to get his younger brother.

The horses struck him and knocked him down, both wheels of the heavily-loaded wagon passing over his body. His legs were broken and his abdomen was crushed. Nathan was struck on the forehead and knocked down, too, but caught the pole of the wagon and saved himself. He lost his grip after being dragged about fifty feet, but the hoofs of the horses missed him, and he was not struck by the wheels. Rudolph was conscious when picked up.

"Did baby and Nathan get hurt?" he asked, and fainted. He died in two hours from his injuries. Nathan was badly hurt about the head, but it is hoped that he will recover. The little girl is unhurt, thanks to her brave little brother's sacrifice.

TO MY OLD FISH ROD.

With what pleasure I behold you
Hanging on my bedroom wall.
What fond memories it surrounds me.
Always ready at my call.

You are made of wood, Bamboo
Stripped ad glued and modeled right.
Rattan wound, with reel band too.
Silver tips and ferules bright.

Your companion is a reel of rubber,
Silver bound, with drag and click.
With silk and cuffiff any lunker
Should gather fishes mighty quick.

Your age is now about one score
Since first I tried your strength.
And many times, both o'er and o'er
Proved strong in every length.

And your journies have been lengthy
From sunny clime to frigid zone,
With your tackle, strong and plenty.
Many victories you have shone.

In "Red Rivers" flowing waters,
Where "Dacotas" Prairies lye,
On "Lake Superior" where the Squatters
Lived and died in days gone bye.

In the lakes of old Nebraska,
Where the "Silver" Champion dwells.
There your prowess, should they ask you,
Gained victories you can tell.

Down at "Tampa," "Bowers eternal,"
Where the "Pelican" his net does scoup.
Where the "Sheeps Head" and shark, informal
Put all your efforts "in the soup."

In Lakeland waters you had success,
A starring scene you there afford.
Your owner scored a pretty mess,
Lost his balance, fell overboard.

In New Jersey, some things recall,
For want of time can't mention here.
Your photo at Black River Falls,
For peculiar "catch" you need not fear.

And now old "Beauty" you rest content.
As your master 'bout over his fad.
Your memory is dear, time well spent.
So rest in your case and be glad.

Ran Into The Curb.

Last Thursday evening while going to the fire on South avenue, William Thorn, of East Second street, met with an accident which nearly cost him his life. He was riding his wheel and almost ran into one of the apparatus. To avoid a collision he ran into the curb and completely wrecked his wheel, injuring his knee also.

Mrs. Howe at Oak Glen.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, mother of Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of Madison avenue, is reported at her Newport home, Oak Glen, where she will remain until November. Mrs. Howe is occupied in revising her "Reminiscences" published in the Atlantic monthly, which will be issued in book form this summer.

THATCHER'S MINSTRELS OPENED MUSIC HALL

Local Theatrical Season Has Auspicious Beginning.

WAS STANDING ROOM ONLY.

THE VETERAN MINSTREL DREW A BIG CROWD TO PERFORMANCE.

His Company Gave a Very Creditable Entertainment Friday Night—Hall Was in Good Order For Season—Manager Edwards Expects a Successful Year For Music Hall—Will Announce Details Later

It was the same George Thatcher that Plainfield knew of old who appeared before the footlights in the Stillman Music Hall last Friday and marked the opening of the theatrical season in Plainfield. Although the night was uncomfortably warm, the theatre-going public of this city gave the veteran minstrel a rousing welcome. Every seat was filled and the sign of "standing room only" was hung out at the box office early in the evening. It was one of the largest audiences that ever assembled in Music Hall.

It was the intention of Manager Maze Edwards to open with some popular attraction. At his expressed solicitation Mr. Thatcher arranged to have "Thatcher's Greatest Minstrels" start the theatrical ball rolling in Plainfield. A better selection could have hardly been made. The minstrel show has been on the road a short time and was just in good running order. Just the fact, however, that George Thatcher was to appear was sufficient for the Plainfield public. They thronged to the hall and filled it from the orchestra chairs to the back row in the gallery.

The performance was a very creditable one. The first part was lively and full of fun and good music. The jokes were comfortably new and the singing by excellent talent. Thatcher and Dan Waldron made a very clever and amusing pair. In the olio there was plenty of diversity of entertainment. Thatcher appeared in a monologue and had some new stories to tell in his inimitable manner. The vocal part of the programme was particularly creditable. The performance closed with the pantomime, "The Haunted Mill at Darktown," in which the fun was fast and furious. The company had its own orchestra, which was a good one.

"Yes sir," said Manager Maze Edwards as he stood at the little window in the box office previous to the performance, "Plainfield is going to have the best theatrical season this year that she has ever enjoyed. I will be able to announce in a few days some of the many attractions that have been booked to appear here during the year. I liked the people of Plainfield when I came here two years ago and I like them better every day. I believe that they will stand by me in my attempt to give them good legitimate performances.

"George Thatcher is a strong card to open with. The hall clean as a whistle and all ready for a successful season. And that's just what we're going to have, I believe."

All Manager Edwards claims for the neat and clean appearance of the hall were more than fulfilled. At the entrance the glint of new paint and varnish told that the painters had been at work there. Soap and water had been used freely on the floors and woodwork. The auditorium had a bright new look, while everywhere there were signs of the thorough renovating and cleaning that Music Hall had received.

Some of the best companies on the American stage today will appear in the hall during the season. There will be a round of everything from the musical farce comedy to the classical tragedy. Manager Edwards is working hard for the success of the local theatrical season, and intends to give the people of Plainfield plenty of opportunity to see the best performances and still patronize home institutions. A fuller announcement of the performances booked for this season will be made in a few days.

MONOPOLY OF WATER SUPPLY WILL END.

New Factor Appears in the Feltville Water Company.

HAS FAVORABLE LOCATION.

CAPITAL HAS JUST BEEN INCREASED TO HALF A MILLION.

The Company is Controlled by the Ackermans, of This City—Increase of Capital Marks the Beginning of Active Campaign—Controls Source of the Great Water Supply of This Section.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company is to have a rival. Frank Bergen's pet corporation, which has heretofore had a monopoly in supplying water to Plainfield, will have a competitor which will tend to reduce the water rates for city and private consumers. A despatch from the Trenton correspondent of The Daily Press tells of the increase of the capitalization of the Feltville Water Company from $10,000 to $500,000. While the news is apparently simple enough, it is really the first move on the part of that corporation to enter upon an active campaign.

That little settlement back of the mountains above Scotch Plains, known as Glenside Park, is a quiet resort where a few New York families find rest during the summer months. It was formerly known as Feltville. Only a short distance beyond the gathering of cottages is the top of the watershed, which, on one side, stretches down to Summit, and on the other towards Plainfield. A multitude of little springs of pure water bubble out of the ground and form the source of Plainfield's wonderful supply. Some drain eventually into the Passaic, others unite to form the stream that winds through the Notch at Scotch Plains and the other little streams that flow back of the first range of the Watchung Mountains.

There is a solidly-built dam that can back up, when needed, a huge body of water coming direct from these springs that will be nearly a mile in length and several hundred feet wide. The topography of the country has provided a natural reservoir there. This reservoir and the land in which the many springs appear is the property of the Feltville Water Company. It is no high above the rest of the surrounding country that no pumping station is necessary. The natural fall gives all the force needed to convey the water and give the required pressure.

The company was organized some years ago and its stock is almost entirely controlled by the Ackermans and their allies. The president of the corporation is Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city; the secretary, Marion S. Ackerman, of Plainfield, and the treasurer, Dr. J. Ackermac Coles, of Scotch Plains.

The Feltville Water Company has already a system of pipes and supplies many households in the immediate vicinity and near Scotch Plains. No extensive system has yet been attempted, however. The water supplied rivals that of Plainfield for its purity.

The move on the part of the Feltville Water Company to enlarge its capital is without doubt the first step to enter the field as a supplying water to the neighboring cities and towns. On one side lies Summit where there has been considerable trouble over the water supply. On the other is Plainfield, where the time is now approaching when the present contracts with the Plainfield Water Supply Company will expire. The Feltville Company has undoubtedly one advantage over its rival in that it taps the source of the water supply at a higher point.

Of course it is impossible to tell as yet what the owners of the Feltville Company expect to do next. The mere fact, however, that the monopoly of the Frank Bergen Company is over and that there is to be a rival in the field is of great importance to Plainfield and may be the means of putting an entire new light on the future plans of the City Fathers for supplying Plainfield with its water.

Eli Watching for Thieves.

Eli Odam, of Arlington avenue, has secured a position with the Central Railroad Company as a watchman. At present he is stationed at or near Jersey City, and is detailed to keep an eye open for people who misappropriate pr operty belonging to the road and make wholesale raids on loaded coal cars. The company is bothered very much with coal thieves and they are of the daring sort who refuse to give up their job, hence the hiring of additional men to look after this class of men.

A Lawn Festival.

There was a lawn party at the Coontown Congregational church Friday night. A large crowd attended despite the threatening weather and all the crowd declared it a great success. The church lawn was prettily decorated for the affair.

RUIN IN THE TRACK OF THE HURRICANE.

Commissioner Carroll Receives Details From Porto Rico.

HIS INTERPRETER THERE.

REPORTS THAT THE ENTIRE CROPS OF THE ISLAND DESTROYED.

People are Absolutely Without Food, and Houses are Down by the Hundred—Seriousness of the Situation, is That No One Has Money to Begin Over Again—Taxes are to be Condoned.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, United States Commissioner to Porto Rico, has just received from his interpreter, Mr. Alfred Solomon, who is still in San Juan transacting business for the Commissioner, a letter giving details of the hurricane and of the destruction it wrought. He writes under date of the 10th of August as follows:

"Hon. H. K. Carroll, Special Commissioner, Plainfield.

"Dear Sir: I have only the most unfortunate news to communicate. As I suppose you already have seen by the cable on the 8th instant the Island was visited and devastated by the most severe cyclone ever yet experienced here. It lasted about ten hours, beginning about 3 o'clock in the morning. The temporary ruin of Porto Rico is complete and the blackest outlook for the future is the only possible one. Even after two days we have no direct communication with the greater part of the island.

"So far we have heard from Humacao, Ponce Playa, Rio Piedras, Carolinas, Caguas, Cayey, Comerio and a few other towns. Every telegraph wire is down. Every river in the districts heard from has inundated the surrounding country, carrying away houses, drowing stock and people and uprooting crops. The entire crops of the island are destroyed, people are absolutely without food, and houses are down by the hundred. In Aibonito two houses are left. In Caguas more than half are down. Round the coast there is not a sugar mill undamaged. Many are a heap of ruins. Mr. Roig's, n Humacao is a rubbish pile.

"The least damage was in San Juan, where, as the houses are of stone, comparatively little harm was done. My house (formerly the headquarters of the Commissioner) had a few doors twisted from the hinges and filled with rainwater.

"All over the country the people are taking refuge in churches. In Humacao sixty deaths are reported. From Ponce City nothing is yet known, the bridges being destroyed and the River Portugues a roaring torrent, preventing all communication.

"The seriousness of the question lies in the fact that no one has money to begin afresh. The planting cannot be undertaken nor mills rebuilt. General Davis has cabled the President and realized the seriousness of the situation, but I see no real remedy except a large loan to be immediately employed in public works, and the free entry of food stuffs. As for cabotage (free coastwise trade) there is nothing left to export. I understand that all taxes on agriculture will at once be condoned. This is gratuitous, as it would be impossible to collect anything where there is nothing, and it in fact prevents action being taken against holdings for the non-payment of taxes.

"Couriers have been sent in all directions to ascertain details. Each one returning brings in a fresh budget of calamities. Hardly a personal friend of mine or yours but is lamenting the loss of his possessions.

"The papers hardly say anything as they have no means of getting information. The market is bare, nothing comes in for sale. A little milk that arrived was sold for 25c. a bottle. The day after the storm I offered a dollar for some in the Mallorquina Cafe, but was refused.

"The city lamps are nearly all broken, leaving the streets in comparative darkness. The electric plant was injured as was the ice factory. About twenty casualties in all took place in San Juan. Every vessel in Ponce Harbor is ashore, and the warehouses and custom house are wrecked partially. Very respectfully,

A. Solomon,
Interpreter."

Hard Place to Get Out Of.

A new combination lock is being placed on several doors of cells in the Union county jail. Each lock is double, and is arranged to do away with a key in closing a door. At night the warden will use a key to double lock each cell door, and so have reason to know that he will find his prisoner safe in his cell in the morning.

Regimental Reunion.

The annual reunion of the Thirteeth New Jersey Veteran Volunteer Association will be held at Bound Brook Wednesday, October 4th. A number of members of that regiment who live in Plainfield will attend.

MANY NEW HOUSES TELL OF PROSPERITY.

Homes Springing up in All Parts of City.

MOST OF THEM COTTAGES.

A. C. STEBBINS IS BUILDING HANDSOME NEW RESIDENCE.

Last Month Eighteen Building Permits Were Granted, Principally for New Structures—Nine Have Been Granted Already This Month of Which Six are for New Houses—Building in West End.

July and August have been lively months for the local builders. Eleven new houses were started last month and ground was broken for six more this month. These evidences of the prosperity of the city are springing up at every hand but particularly in the western part of Plainfield. Two of these are quite portentious residences while the others are convenient little homes, suited to fill the wants of the family of moderate means. During July Building Inspector T. O. Doane granted eighteen permits for new buildings and alterations. This month nine have already been granted.

Last month saw work started on two handsome residences, one in either end of the city. The more elaborate is that of Albert C. Stebbins, superintendent of the Pond Tool Works, which is now in the course of erection on West Seventh street, just west of Grant avenue. It is to be a two-story and attic frame house of modern design. E. V. French was the architect. The other house is on South avenue, between Woodland and Belvidere avenues, and is owned by Mrs. Annie B. Mills. It will probably be rented or sold on its completion. It is a two-story and attic frame dwelling of comfortable size.

John Owens is having a cottage built on Lee place. It is rather similar in general style to a number of others that are being erected. George Hummer has one on Centre street. Mrs. Lila Rupert is the owner of a new cottage on Belvidere avenue, near South avenue.

Manning and Runyon are adding to their settlement on Woodland avenue and LaGrande avenue with another two story and a half frame dwelling. Mrs. Emma E. Naylor started one cottage on Rock avenue, near West Front street, last month, and now has begun another on West Front street near Rock avenue.

Mrs. Frank Linke is building on Plainfield avenue near West Third street. Mrs. Ethel R. Lloyd is the owner of a cottage on the lot, 730 West Sixth street. At 923 Arlington avenue, is building a neat little home.

Mrs. E. R. Pray, of Rahway Road, is rebuilding her barn in the rear of her home. Mrs. E. Cox, of Lyman place, has built a small barn on her property.

The permits for new houses granted this month are all small but cosy little dwellings of from six to eight rooms. William H. Abbott is building on West Fifth street, near Prescott place. William Lunger has started one at 920 West Fifth street. Mrs. A. N. Broaard is the owner of a new house started at the corner of Monroe avenue and West Seventh street. Albert Brooks is building a tiny little home for himself on Clinton avenue, near West Third street.

A permit was granted to Caspar Stalele, of Stony Hill, to erect a small cottage at 139 Jackson street.

Mrs. Mary Fairfax has established a large greenhouse at 24 Clinton avenue and removed the old Denton buildings from Prospect aven ue to that place.

SWIFT JUSTICE FOR DOGGIE.

Pet Canine Shot Down in Sight of Mistress.

A pathetic scene was witnessed a few days ago on Jackson avenue, in the borough, when a pet dog, owned by Miss Charlotte Messersmith, was running about in front of the yard. The owner of the dog was close by and watching her favorite animal, who was doing no harm to anyone. Presently a police officer of the borough happened along and in the presence of Miss Messersmith deliberately shot the little dog. The owner was terribly frightened as well as incensed at the action of the official, and though that he was too swift in carrying out the law. Miss Messersmith is deeply grieved at the loss of her dog which she had for many years and was a family pet, but there seems to be no redress, for in the strict sense of the law the dog did not wear a cage, although he was on the property of the owner.

BAPTIZED IN THE BROOK

ANDREW COX AND WIFE WERE THE CANDIDATES IMMERSED.

Pastor Foster of the Second Church of Christ Performed the Ceremony Yesterday Afternoon From the Borough Bid.

Baptism by immersion was administered by Rev. James Foster, pastor of the Second Church of Christ, Sunday afternoon. The place selected for the ceremony was east of the Elm place bridge in Green brook. The pastor was assisted by David Blow, a colored lay preacher. The candidates for the holy rites of the church were Andrew and Mrs. Lizzie Cox, husband and wife, of 431 Watchung avenue.

Long before the services began men, women and children began to gather along the banks of the sluggish stream, whose waters are rollly and in some places covered with a green slime. Suggestive of anything but purity. It was nearly 3 o clock before a suitable place had been selected by Pastor Foster.

The exercises began by the members of the church uniting in singing, followed by a short prayer by the pastor. Rev. David Blow then made a short address, at the close of which a collection was taken up. The baptismal rite was then performed. Rev. Mr. Foster, provided with a long pole, which he used to feel his way, entered the brook from the borough side. After satisfying himself that a safe place had been found, he signaled to Mr. Blow that he was ready to perform the solemn rites of his church.

While the congregation sang "Shall We Gather at the River." Pastor Foster read the charge to the candidates for baptism.

The first to receive the rite was Mrs. Cox, who appeared attired in a light colored wrapper. She was assisted to the water's edge by Mr. Blow and her husband. As Mrs. Cox entered the water Pastor Foster clasped her hand and drew her toward him. Walking a short distance into the middle of the stream the minister faced the audience on the embankment, and in a clear voice said: "Lizzie, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, I baptize thee. Amen." The candidate was then immersed in the stream. Mrs. Cox's husband was then given the same sanctification.

The ceremony was very impressive. During the services the small crowd that had gathered to witness the baptism stood silent and reverent spectators to a scene which some years ago was quite common, but which long since became obsolete.

Two weeks from yesterday, weather permitting, Rev. Mr. Foster will again administer the rite of baptism in Green brook at the same place.

Death of Samuel Parks.

Garwood, Aug. 22.—Samuel Parks, aged 74 years, a resident of this place for fifteen years, died yesterday afternoon as a result of a bilious attack. He was for many years associated with the Equitable Gas Light Company, of New York, and was highly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and four sons. The sons are Robert Parks, of St. Louis; Edward Parks, of Roselle; William and S. C. Parks, of Garwood. The funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock and Revi Joseph Greaves, of Westfield, will officiate.

TEN DAYS IN BOROUGH LOCKUP.

Punishment Meted Out to Five Men Who Were Drunk and Disorderly.

There was a little excitement in the borough Sunday afternoon when five persons, drunk and disorderly, were arrested and landed in the jail. One was Patrick Coleen, who was arrested on Brook avenue by Marshal Campbell. The others were Italians, two of whom held the names of Michael and two were Johns. Their last names are beyond pronunciation. They were arrested by Marshal Kielser on Somerset street. They were celebrating, and the officials thought it was time to call a halt. This morning they were arraigned before Mayor Smalley, who is acting Recorder. Patrick Coleen was given his choice of $5 or five days, while the Italians were given preference of $10 or ten days. All decided that they would prefer to go to Somerville, but the Mayor thought differently, and he consigned them to the borough lockup.

THE CADI ON HIS VACATION.

Judge Runyon to Rusticate in the Catskill Mountains

Plainfield is to be without a City Judge for a week while that official recuperates in the wilds of the Catskill Mountains with a party of friends. Meanwhile His Honor, Mayor Rockfellow, will try his hand at passing judgment on such offenders of the city ordinances as happen to fall into the hands of the police.

Judge William N. Runyon left Sunday afternoon for the Catskills where he will be a guest at the summer home of Howard Hazshurst, an old college friend at Yale. He will return to his duties in Plainfield next Monday.

Trolley Car Lost Its Wheel

Bound Brook, Aug. 22.—One of the cars of the Brunswick Traction Company, running between Somerville and New Brunswick, met with a very peculiar accident Sunday afternoon near this place that delayed the service for some time. A south bound car was speeding along near Centennial avenue when the wheel at the end of the trolley poll that runs on the wire suddenly became loose and flew into the neighboring lot. The crew and passengers turned out and hunted for the wheel but it was only after half an hour's seach that the whee was finally found. It was then re placed and the car went on.

CASE WITHDRAWN.

Police Have Not Enough Evidence to Prosecute Reeder.

The police authorities have withdrawn the case against Moses Bender, charged with receiving stolen goods. Willie Mullen, the small boy who stole the brass, was cited before Justice Small yesterday afternoon and given a severe reprimand. Chief Grant gave Bender to understand that the police would keep an eye upon his place and if in the future complaints were made extreme measures will be resorted to. Bender promised that he would be more careful in future what property he bought from boys.

GRIM REAPER BUSY IN THE KLONDIKE.

Hundreds Lose Their Lives Hunting For Gold.

A RARITAN MAN RETURNS.

HE WENT TO THE KLONDIKE WITH TWO PLAINFIELDERS.

Underwent Many Trilling Adventures in Getting to the Land of the Gold, and After Staking Out a Claim He Came Back to His Old Home—Those in the Klondike Used to Death Now.

John F. MacGregor, formerly superintendent of the Raritan woolen mills, has returned to his home in Raritan, after spending over a year in the Klondyke region, where he went in April, 1898, in company with Messrs. Gaston and Underhill, of Plainfield. To a reporter Mr. MacGregor related an interesting experience in the land of gold.

Mr. MacGregor entered the Klondyke by way of Chilkoot Pass, and had some thrilling adventures at this part of his journey. He saw the dead bodies of many unfortunates on the pass who had fallen by the way during the previous winter. After a severe illness at Lake Bennett, Mr. MacGregor continued to Dawson City. Near there he staked out two claims, and dug or rather "burned" for gold. He met with considerable success and left his claims in good hands.

After a year's experience Mr. MacGregor left Dawson City as the ice broke in the Yukon river last spring and started on a perilous journey of 1,900 miles down the river in an open boat to St. Michael's.

In passing through the rapids and canyons Mr. MacGregor saw several men perched on the rocks crying or praying for deliverance. He was powerless to help them, as his own boat was dashing along at a terrific rate, and it required a sharp eye and a steady nerve to keep it from striking on the rocks.

After spending thirty-two days in his open boat, which had drifted with the current at the rate of seven miles an hour, Mr. MacGregor arrived at St. Michael's, where, after a brief rest, he boarded a steamer for San Francisco. When he arrived in the latter city his gray hair reached far below shoulders, and his beard covered his breast. Here he once more donned the garb of civilization and started east.

Mr. MacGregor states that the death rate in the Klondyke is enormous. Many deaths result from scurvy, caused by the absence of vegetable food. There are a great many suicides. The disappointment of many miners, after digging thirty feet to the bed rock and finding no gold, is so great that a bullet through the brain often ends the search for gold. Death is so frequent and common, Mr. MacGregor says, that the inhabitants are hardened and indifferent to it, and they scarcely take time to bury the dead. The postoffice at Dawson City contains bushels of letters from inquiring ones at home, who seek information of friends who may have been lost on the trail, drowned in the rapids, or buried in the mountain gulches.

"PENNSY'S" TROLLEY LINE.

A Small Road Which Gave Rise to Big Reports.

The filing by the Pennsylvania Railroad with the Secretary of State of New Jersey of a map showing the location of a minor trolley line which it is proposed to build in Trenton gave rise to a story of an electric line to be constructed by the company from Jersey City to Washington, D. C. The proposed short line will be built under the charter of the Burlington and Mt. Holly Traction Railroad Company, which permits the company to establish a traction line in any city in New Jersey, but it will in no way connect with the present line of that company from Mt. Holly to Burlington. The officials of the company say there is no intention to build any connected system of trolley lines.

EAT RAILROAD MEN

Lions Lunch Off Laborers Constructing Railroads in Africa.

Man-eating lions are delaying the progress of an important railway being built by the British in East Africa to connect Mombasa with Uganda. The voracious kings of the forest have developed a keen appetite for the Indian laborers and have succeeded in decimating the working force from time to time since the enterprise got well under way. The lions did most of their foraging at night.

Now, it is learned, the quarters and houses of the laborers are protected by iron proof structures, which are fifteen feet high and from six to eight feet thick. Surrounded by these, the men sleep in safety. One of the man-eaters who had dined on seventeen coolies on as many occasions came to grief finally when he attacked the men on a baggage car. They killed him and his skin is preserved as a souvenir to be sent to the British Museum.

Apples as Medicine.

Chemically, the apple is composed of vegetable fiber, albumin, sugar, gum, chlorophyll, malic acid, gallic acid, lime and much water. Furthermore, the apple contains a larger percentage of phosphorus than any other fruit or vegetable. This phosphorus is admirably adapted for renewing the essential nervous matter, lecithin, of the brain and spinal cord. It is perhaps for the same reason, rudely understood, that old Scandinavian traditions represent the apple as the food of the gods, who, when they felt themselves to be growing feeble and infirm, resorted to this fruit for renewing their powers of mind and body. Also the acids of the apple are of great use for men of sedentary habits, whose livers are sluggish in action, these acids serving to eliminate from the body noxious matters, which if retained would make the brain heavy and dull, or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions and other allied troubles. Some such experience must have led to our custom of taking apple sauce with roast pork, rich goose, and like dishes. The malic acid of ripe apples, either raw or cooked, will neutralize any excess of chalky matter engendered by eating too much meat. It is also a fact that such fresh fruits as the apple, the pear and the plum, when taken ripe, and without sugar, diminish acidity in the stomach rather than provoke it. Their vegetable salts and juices are converted into alkaline carbonates, which tend to counteract acidity. A ripe, raw apple is one of the easiest vegetable substances for the stomach to deal with, the whole process of the digestion being completed in eighty-five minutes. Gerard found that the "pulpe of roasted apples mixed in a wine quart of faire water, and labored in their mouth it comes to be as apples and ale—which we call lambswool—never faileth in certain diseases of the raines, which myself hath often proved, and gained benefit of both fewnes and credit." "The paring of an apple, eut somewhat thick, and the inside wherof is laid to boil burning, or running eyes at night, when the party goes to bed, and is tired or bound to the same, doth help the trouble very speedily. Be sure to try it."—Indianapolis Journal.

A Giant Clock.

An Illinois jeweler has partially solved the "perpetual motion" problem by inventing a clock that will run a year without any attention. The clock is run with a wheel five feet in circumference. From the outside of the wheel hang 120 cups one-third of an inch deep and half an inch in diameter. Each forty of cups hold steel balls three-eighths of an inch in diameter. As the wheel turns by the balls' weight a ball falls from its cup every minute to a half, rolls down a 20-inch inclined plane, reunites by its weight a broken electric circuit, and is lifted back to its cup by a little car which runs on a steeper inclined plane to the wheel's top. The electric storage battery needs but good replenishing for a year. The clock has been running since Aug. 26, 1898.

A Fair Cannibal.

My love attended at the cooking school
Learned to make bread and cakes and pies;
Studied the science of the stew and roast,
And solved the mysteries of quail on toast.

I found her when I went to call that
Cook-book in hand, absorbed in "Consommez."
And, jesting, I much doubted if she knew
What was required to make a first-class stew.

A week had passed; another call I paid;
"I've learned since then," she said,
"how soups is made."
And when my questions took a tender beat,
I found that I was an ingredient.

"How did you enjoy the banquet?"
"Great," answered the young man with the red tie and yellow vest. "I got away with three spoons, a salt shaker and a sugar bowl."—Indianapolis Journal.

LAST STAND OF TROOP M

A Thrilling Story of a Fatal Fight With the Chirichua Apaches.

A VERY TRAGICAL TALE.

Three Types of the Gallant Soldiers Which Go to Make Up the Army of the United States.

Apaches Waited For Dawn to Make the Attack and Man After Man Went Down on a Murderous Leaden Rain—Another Instance of Bureaucratic Ignorance and Indian Treachery.

The little creek, rudely dammed for bathing below camp, was gurgling on just the same as ever. The tall pines and their tops as Aeolian instruments to the warm night wind. The two horses at the long stretch of picket line took rest from the labors of the "easy herd," but the knowledge of hovering ghastly death was in the heart of every trooper of M of the —th.

The dread war chant of the Chirichua Apaches rose higher and higher, the death chant of the gallant handful of white men camped under the hills should be their destruction—a monotonous horror of sound.

Just another instance of bureaucratic ignorance and blindness and of Indian treachery, that is all, says a writer in the Sketch. "Farm camp" and escort —the one made for savages whose last intention it was to farm, the latter thought to be their protection. Out outbreak. And so Troop M of the —th, armed and silent, was awaiting the oncome of Geronimo's malcontents, the last chance of retreat gone, and the chance of any rider making his way out and to Fort Apache for reinforcements precluded.

Sanford W. Calhoun, first lieutenant and troop commander—tall, lithe, the handsomest man in the regiment, the leader of ball and of social wherever he might be quartered—had been deeply thinking, and had sought relief in low converse with his cosmopolitan first sergeant, a man of infinite possibilities and—I guess.

"It's all up with M of the —th this time, Majendie," Calhoun said, and Majendie answered with a short laugh, "Yes."

Calhoun shuddered. The man's blase recklessness had jarred him before. "And you're nothing to regret, nothing to hold you to the life we shall quit—no fear?"

Majendie laughed again, with a sneer on his pale face. "No, lieutenant, neither regret nor fear. I've drained life's cup of nectar, and also her cup of gall, to the dregs. I've had my good time and my bad time, and, if the end is here, I'm ready."

Calhoun sighed. "I wish I was, sergeant, but I am not. Life's sweet, sergeant. It's never seemed so sweet as now, when it's going. You see, I've only tasted the cup as yet. And it's good, sergeant, very, very good—you understand?"

The sergeant smiled inscrutably. He knew why life held so much for his commander, pictured to himself the girl—for with her first-born back there at Fort Grant, and pitied the brave, selfish man at his side more than her.

"I understand, lieutenant," he said; then he pointed to the riderless horse by—a fair, boyish recruit on his first "field" duty.

"You see young Wilson there, lieutenant? He never can. Well, you and he and I represent three distinct types of manhood. Wilson is one of the most innocent, pure-minded, kindly lads I've ever come in contact with, a mother's boy. Will he fight for the life that was never yet his, but her's? According to all that has been written in fiction, yes. He says his prayers regularly, and he reads his Bible, and, in his own belief, he is ready to stay or go, at the latter's will. Lieutenant, that boy will die with horror and fear in his eyes. A coward!"

Calhoun shuddered again, but asked the question, "And I?"

Majendie smiled, looking at the fine, clear-cut features of the American aristocrat. "The lieutenant," he said, "will die like the man I know him to be, bravely, but the bitterness of it will seize him and hold him. There will be resentment in his eyes—a grudge against fate."

"And you?"

"And I—Hark! By God, sir, they're opening the ball."

It was true. The Apaches had been waiting for it. A bullet clipped Majendie's ear, another spattered dirt in Calhoun's face. The sergeant laughed.

Cynical and sneering, a man whose only popularity lay in his acknowledged smartness. The moment transformed him. One leap landed him at the side of the boy recruit behind a huge pine tree, and then, through it all, through the crashing and yelling, the horror and despair of the last fight, as man after man went down, the long-legged "citizen of the world" cheered the remnant by word and deed.

He saw the lieutenant leap and fall, saw the boy recruit, with the horror of it in his despair-stricken eyes, sink at his feet, and then—

When the squaw of Geronimo's band swooped down on the dead of martyred "M" they came across three men whom they left untouched of mutilating hands. First, the boy farm instructor, because she was a woman, him loved him; the second, because through some strange cause, none desired to touch the young white chief; the third and last, because he, of them to the end, was in their sight the bravest of the dead. And in the eyes of the first lurked a light, in those of the second bitterness, but in the eyes of the third there dwelt a wondrous—peace.

And lo! when men came to search the fallen—Indian and white—in after time, over the heart of him in command they found the stained photographs of his one comrade's mother and of his other comrade's wife.

The mean age of a maiden on marriage was, in 1886, 21.9 years, while in 1897 it had risen to 23.8, or nearly two years older. Among the bachelors who married a corresponding dates the advance in mean age was still more pronounced

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constantly increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. Taking them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I was ill, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules so commended so highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what I had long demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call, to say nothing of the power of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them for twice if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two dangerous ones specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should bear her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other girls who need it, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the selfishness of my child has deprived some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing full well how sorely she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

A new style booklet containing the RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper carton, which can be closed in any pocket, and the whole put in the vest pocket, can now be had of druggists for five cents. This low-priced sort is intended for the benefit of the poor, who cannot afford the high-priced bottle, but it is just as good as the more costly kind. Ripans Tabules may be had of druggists, or the five-cent cartons may be had by sending to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce street, New York—or a single carton will be sent for four cents. Ten cartons, forty tabules, will be sent for forty cents. Both kinds are handy things. Don't forget it.

WAR TO BE MADE ON THE SLOT MACHINES.

Many of Them Said to Run in Union County.

THE GRAND JURY WILL ACT.

PROSECUTOR ENGLISH EAGER TO SEIZE AND DESTROY THEM.

A Complaint Has Been Made That the Gambling Devices Are Operated in Cranford—Scotch Plains Has Been Rid of Them By the Complaint of Rev. Mr. Shott's Citizens' League.

The October Grand Jury is likely to be asked to investigate the charges that gambling devices of the slot machine order are being used in saloons in various sections of the county, and if all reports be true the violations are quite numerous and flagrant.

Prosecutor English, whenever his attention has been called to these alleged violations, has immediately taken steps to suppress the evil practice. The State law gives to the prosecuting attorneys authority to capture and destroy all gambling paraphernalia, and the slot machines are gaming devices which come under this statute.

In Camden county Sheriff Sell, with forty deputies, raided fifty saloons in Gloucester and captured 400 gambling machines. The raids were planned and directed by D. C. Gibbonev, secretary of the Law and Order Society, who had been collecting evidence for some time past. In nearly every case the officer met with resistance, and as a result more than a dozen men were badly injured. Knives, pistols and blackjacks were freely used, the patrons of the various saloons being under the impression that the police were there to arrest them.

In this county the war against the slot machines has been carried on without trouble, and no resistance was made to the officers, who visited the places complained against and warned the proprietors.

Prosecutor English has already received a complaint against slot machines said to be maintained in Cranford.

Some time ago he received a notification from a representative of the Fanwood Law and Order Society, headed by Rev. G. M. Shott, that these gambling devices were being used there. He at once referred the complaint to County Detective Keron with instructions to have the gambling practice suppressed. Detective Keron and other officers from the prosecutor's office visited fourteen saloons and places where the machines were alleged to be in operation, and warned them that the gambling must cease. That warning was apparently effective, for Mr. English received a letter from the law and order people thanking him for his prompt action, and stating that the evil had been eradicated.

Mr. English said he would proceed against any offenders at once when informed of the violations. He had been told that there were slot machines in Elizabeth, and he had instructed Chief Tenney to capture and destroy them.

The Central railroad is still making changes in the heads of its departments and yesterday it was announced that Robert Stewart, superintendent telegraph, and William F. An official of the great Northwestern road named Adams will succeed Mr. Stewart and it is said Mr. Husbands' successor will come from the same direction.

Pipe is Stopped Up.

Of late the sewer pipe leading to the building on West Front street, occupied by T. J. Carey, has been stopped up causing great inconvenience. Several examinations have been made, but the trouble cannot be located. On one occasion the street was opened and an examination of the pipe failed to disclose the stoppage. If the difficulty continues Mr. Carey will compel a thorough examination. A few nights ago water was found running in his cellar and if it had continued great damage would have resulted.

BURNED CAT IN A BAG.

INHUMAN ACTION OF A MAN IRRITATED BY A FELINE.

Cat Was a Depredator on Chickens and a Howler Under Bedroom Windows—Its Assassin May be Prosecuted.

A severe case of cruelty to animals has just been reported, wherein a Plainfield man, thoroughly exasperated with troubles brought to him by a well-known feline owned by Mrs. Firstbrook, of West Fifth street, is responsible for the inhuman act.

The cat in question was a type that wandered from place to place and made a practice of eating small chickens, and otherwise making a nuisance of herself. She had given neighbors plenty of trouble and on more than one occasion her life was threatened with a shotgun. When there was nothing left to do she would find a convenient place beneath a window and cause the inmates of the house to suffer nightmares in its worst form. This sort of things continued until a certain man could not bear it any longer. He avowed that he would have that cat's life if it took all summer and part of the winter, and his determination was followed with a successful effort.

A few nights ago he caught the cat, placed her in a small cloth bag, carried her to a point near Plainfield avenue and Eighth street. There he erected a stout stick in the ground, after which he fastened the bag and contents to the stick. He then saturated the same with kerosene, after which he set fire to it. It only required a few minutes for the fire to accomplish its purpose, and the man then destroyed every evidence that might lead to the detection of the deed, and felt satisfied that the cat would not come back.

It is reported that Mrs. Firstbrook was perfectly willing that the cat should disappear, but when she heard of the horrible treatment used she was highly indignant and threatened to make trouble for the man who dared to practice such cruelties. Thus far nothing further has been heard regarding the case.

DEMOCRATS NOT TALKING

BUT LITTLE GOSSIP ABOUT NOMINEES FOR COUNTY OFFICES.

The One Thing That is Regarded With Somewhat Envious Eyes is the Shrievalty—Several Mentioned for That Office.

The Elizabeth Journal says that there is not very much open talk among the Democrats as to probable candidates for the county ticket. For some reason there are more Democrats who have their eyes on the shrievalty plum than for anything else the voters in the county could give. Some of these have hopes that the taste advantage of early start, and if they are not vigorous booms it is not because of any neglect in the nursing. Jacob Glaser for several years has shown an aspiration along this line, and Wickliffe B. Sayre, the former president of the Board of Education in Elizabeth, is another whose name is mentioned always in the same breath with any reference to the shrievalty nomination. Oliver Conlin, the constable-at-large and district court sergeant-at-arms, is another who seems to be very close to the goal, and Edward B. Kelly, the Summit pooh-bah and detective, is said to be on the trail of delegates, and is expecting to capture enough to give him the convention's vote.

This announcement of Kelly's candidacy was a surprise, but it is admitted that it is a matter to be taken seriously, and it causes the other aspirants to be less serene than they were. Summit will go into the convention this fall with an added enthusiasm of its importance as a city, and will demand that its dignity be recognized by the bestowal of higher convention honors than were ever before given to it.

Trouble in Getting the Stripes.

Warden Dodd of the county jail is meeting with considerable difficulty in securing cloth with which to make clothing for the prisoners. He has received samples from southern states, which he finds are not suited for this climate, while other samples, which were made in Sing Sing prison, he finds are just the thing, but they cannot be used outside of New York State. The cloth required is of a peculiar kind, and he has yet to find a firm that makes it

A Summer Night's Festival.

POWER FOR THE TROLLEY

HUGE CABLES GOING UP FOR FEEDERS TO TROLLEY LINE.

Big Cable Being Strung to Westfield—Three Other Cables Will Carry the Power to Other Points on the Line.

The power needed to run the through trolley line that is to connect Elizabeth and Plainfield in the near future will be furnished from power houses at the two terminals. Arrangements are now being made here to supply the power for the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company's line as far as Westfield. Four huge cables have been strung from the power house of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company on Madison avenue for that object.

Three of the cables are already up. They consist of forty No. 12 wires wrapped together and covered with insulation. They will act as feeders at Richmond street, a point west of Scotch Plains and another point west of that village.

They go from the power house to West Second street, to East Second street, to Watchung avenue, to East Front street, to Richmond street, to East Second street and thence along line of the trolley. The four cable, the largest of all is now being put in position. It consists of sixty wires of the same size as the others and weighs three pounds for every foot in length. This cable will follow the line of the trolley through to Westfield and feed the trolley line at that point.

The current that will pass through these cables will have a voltage of 500 volts.

SILAS ON DECK AGAIN.

HE ABSOLUTELY REFUSES TO TAKE A BACK SEAT.

Now That the Federation of Trade Unions Has Declined His Proposition He Comes to the Front With One for Printers.

Not to be discouraged because the Federation of Trades at its recent session did not accept his proposition, Silas D. Drake has another move on foot, and is hopeful of success. He has secured a large tract of land on the south side of the Central Railroad at Lincoln, and proposes offering a large part of it for the location of a home for unemployed and disabled printers.

Near Bound Brook is a farm known as the Herbert estate. On it are about fifty New York printers, who are out of work, and who, during the last season, raised several carloads of vegetables of almost all kinds for the New York markets.

Mr. Drake paid a visit to the men recently, and when he told them that he left a printing office and shouldered a musket in defense of his country, coming home with an honorable scar, the men gave him a hearty welcome.

Mr. Drake is to lay his plans before the advisory board this week, and it is meets with a favorable response, it will result in the establishing of the home near Lincoln, where there is plenty of land, pure water, church privileges, etc. The farm will also be near the railroad, so that the products of the farm can readily be shipped to New York and elsewhere.

The matter may be decided upon this week, and then Mr. Drake will immediately proceed to stake out "the farm" and have the necessary buildings erected.

THE JUDGE DIDN'T MELT.

AN OLD, OLD STORY HEARD IN POLICE COURT THIS MORNING.

Two Tramps Tried to Work Upon the Good Nature of the Cadi, But Failed—Will Take a Vacation in the County Jail.

They told the same old story. "Just a drop too much and had never been arrested before, so please, Your Honor, let us go this once and we'll never trouble you again." Charles Tulley, a weazened little umbrella mender from Bergen Point, fought with Patrolman McCue when he was arrested. John Mitchell, his companion from Newark, made trouble for Patrolman Flanagan. They were gathered in Tuesday afternoon, charged with being drunk and disorderly.

City Judge Runyon was not inclined to believe their innocent little tale. Such faces as they possessed, he declared, were seldom seen out of State prison. Tulley, who tried to lick McCue, received forty days in the county jail. Mitchell wasn't quite so bad so the Judge limited his enforced vacation to twenty days. The prisoners bowed their heads to the judgment and shuffled back to their cells.

HORSE FELL IN THE POND.

EXCITING ADVENTURE OF HARRY ROBERTS AT NEW MARKET.

Driver Thrown Out of the Buggy and Then Horse, Rig and All Went Into Deep Water—The Breed Was Rescued.

Monday evening Harry Roberts and a friend furnished a great deal of excitement for the residents of New Market. They drove through the main street about 10:30 o'clock at night, and when passing the Baptist church the top of the buggy came off, taking the two occupants with it. This occurrence frightened the horse and he started off at a lively rate of speed with the wagon, leaving the two young men lying in the roadway.

The horse ran across the railroad track and instead of continuing on the road to New Brunswick made a sharp turn and followed the road along the pond. He continued his journey to the white bridge and after passing it his fear became entangled in the reins. This threw him, wagon and all, into the pond where the animal floundered around in an excited fashion. The assistance of Wm. Boantree and Chas. Ward were secured and with the aid of a lantern an effort was made to get the horse, who by this time had broken loose from the wagon and was swimming in the middle of the pond. Mr. Boantree, more venturesome than the others, jumped into the pond and after a great deal of trouble caught the horse and brought him to shore. The wagon was then rescued.

The rig was placed in the stable at the hotel and another rig was fixed up for the young men to go home with. Tuesday morning Mr. Roberts went to New Market with the borrowed rig and took his own home.

LEHIGH TO ESTABLISH LOCAL OFFICE.

An Effort Will be Made to Secure Plainfield Patronage.

Now that it seems probable that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company will be unable to get into Plainfield direct, the officers of the company are arranging to establish a city ticket office here.

The office will probably be established within a month, and in connection with it buses of an up-to-date pattern will run between here and South Plainfield to meet all through and many of the local trains both night and day.

The company will make a special effort to secure passenger traffic for the west, and all who purchase tickets from South Plainfield at the office in this city to Easton or points west will be transferred in the buses free of charge. To points this side of Easton a small fee will be charged for riding in the buses from this city to South Plainfield.

Where Justice May Hold Forth.

Westfield, August 30.—Owing to the controversy between Justice of the Peace Collins, of Westfield, and the Township Committee, over the use of the town courtroom, the trial in the series of Linden cockfight cases will probably be held at Etta Hall. In view of the action of the Committee in refusing the use of the rooms for out-of-town cases, Alfred E. Pearsall has offered the Justice a hall in The Standard building. William Ward offered Westfield Hotel Hall, and Charles E. Burtis offered the dining room at the Park House.

Bills Against the City.

All bills against the city must be in the hands of City Clerk MacMurray by this evening to insure their being paid at the regular September meeting.

Harry Bush, of the fire department is now enjoying his annual vacation.

SAY HE IS A DISTURBER.

BUT THEY WERE UNABLE TO PROVE THEIR CASE IN COURT.

James Barlow Made a Complaint Against Dennis Sheehin, But His Testimony Proved Weak When Heard by the Judge.

Several of the residents of Richmond street declare that Dennis Sheehin is a disturbing factor in that neighborhood. Yesterday he appeared before the City Judge to answer to a complaint made by one of his neighbors. In the first encounter in the courts Sheehin was victorious.

James Barlow lives next door to Sheehin. Mr. and Mrs. Barlow say that the Sheehins make life miserable for them. Last Sunday they allege that a stone was thrown and struck a small child playing in their yard. They also allege that Barlow called Sheehin to account for making certain alleged remarks about the Barlow lad. Some of the names were decidedly improper and Barlow thought it a good idea to settle the trouble by having Sheehin arrested for using profane and indecent language.

In court yesterday a.m. Barlow admitted that none of the names were applied to himself or any of his family. The Judge then explained that according to the city ordinance the case would not hold So he discharged the prisoner. The Barlows received an explanation of the law and promised to go about any future charge in the right and proper way.

A WAREHOUSE FOR BEER

BALLENTINE'S WILL PROBABLY BUILD IN PLAINFIELD.

A Lot Purchased at West Second Street and Central Avenue Where a Distributing Station Will Be Located.

It is rumored on excellent authority that Plainfield is soon to have a new industry and that Ballentine & Co., the Newark brewers, are to locate a large distributing depot in town. It is understood that they have purchased the property next to the railroad on the south side of West Second street. Two properties at that corner have been purchased and it is the intention of erecting a large and handsome building to cost about $10,000. It will be of brick and stone and will be an ornament to that part of the city.

A railroad siding is to be run in the rear of the building making it possible to run in carloads of goods, which will be distributed to the various towns and places within a reasonable distance of Plainfield. Teams and trucks will be kept at the depot for this purpose, and the company will make this the central point in this section in the hope of regaining some of their lost patronage which is due to opposition that has been spirited.

BOUND BROOK WILL ACT.

N. Y. & N. J. TELEPHONE COMPANY WAITS THE RESULT.

General Opinion That Franchise Will be Granted at a Meeting of the Bound Brook Council Tuesday Night.

Bound Brook, Aug. 30.—It is still a question whether the Borough Council will grant the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company the asked-for permission to run the company's lines through this place and establish an exchange here. The ordinance granting the franchise will come before the Council at the meeting Tuesday evening for final action.

So far the Councilmen have had little to say. It has been hard to get an expression of opinion from them. The general sentiment seems to prevail, however, that their best course of action for the interests of the borough is to grant the franchise on the most liberal terms they can secure from the telephone company as, in the end, the company seems bound to gain a foothold in Bound Brook.

Manager Charles W. Runyon, whose office is in Plainfield, says that the company wishes to enter Bound Brook with the full consent of the Council, and is willing to make certain concessions to gain that end. But the company is going to enter the town anyhow, for recent Court decisions in Jersey give the corporation the right to enter by a private right of way or go through process of law to condemn a right of way on a public thoroughfare and fix the damages.

The local press has had little to say on the subject, either for or against the big company. It is the general opinion in town that the Somerset Telephone Company, the local concern, is doomed, and that the Councilmen will see the wisdom of getting the best terms possible from the invading company for the right to enter.

An Unlucky Shanty.

John Dayton, of this city, the flagman at Whitehouse, who was present at the railroad wreck on Sunday morning, has a badly discolored eye, received while being tumbled down the embankment. It does not, however, interfere with his duties. The shanty occupied by him, and which was demolished, was struck twice by lightning and seems to have been ill-fated.

REFUSE FROM A PIG FARM WAS TO BLAME.

Cause of Pollution of Rahway River Thought to be Fixed.

THE OFFENDER WARNED.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH CALLED UPON TO ACT.

Rahway Residents Were Loud in Their Complaints of the Bad Condition of the Water—Nicholas Wolfe's Practices are Said to be the Principal Cause for the Present Condition of Affairs.

Nicholas Wolfe, who resides along the banks of the Rahway river, near Meeker's Mills, at Milltown, has been ordered by the State Board of Health to abate a nuisance on his premises before the 1st of November, or the Board will take immediate action to have the nuisance abated.

Some time ago the citizens of Rahway complained to the local Board of Health at that place regarding the city water, the supply being furnished by the Rahway river, which also passes through that place.

The citizens at Rahway made such a time about the water that the local Board of Health at that place determined to ascertain just what was the matter with the water supply. Game Warden C. M. Hawkins, of Roselle, undertook the job to find out. After looking along the river banks for miles he finally ventured upon the property of Nicholas Wolfe, whose place is located at Milltown, about half way between Irvington and Cranford. Game Warden Hawkins discovered what he thought was causing the trouble, and spoke to Wolfe about it, ordering him to quit the practice. Wolfe became indignant and ordered the game warden off his property. Warden Hawkins went after he had made the discovery he set out to find.

Wolfe has from 200 to 300 pigs on his property, which he raises for New York markets. He also has contracts with the restaurant and hotel keepers of Newark, Irvington and Short Hills to remove all the garbage from their premises. Wolfe's wagons made their daily rounds, and the decayed vegetables and kitchen refuse were carted to his place at Milltown, where it was placed in a vat, and, after being boiled down, was fed to the hogs. The liquid from the vats was allowed to run into the Rahway river.

The State Board of Health looked into the matter Thursday last, at which time Dr. A. Clark Hunt of the Board and Game Warden Hawkins visited Wolfe's premises. After an examination Dr. Hunt ordered Wolfe to quit the nuisance, to clean the place up and stop running the filth into the river at once, or the State Board would take a hand and have it done. Wolfe was given till the first of the month to obey the order. It is understood Wolfe will quit selling pigs and go out of business.

The board Friday will receive from the county committees the names of men who are recommended for appointment on the local election boards. The county board has ten days before it need confirm any appointments.

VARIOUS NOTES.

Pretty Costume Accessories of Diverse Kinds.

A charming little cape is composed of black taffeta or of colored mousseline de soie. It is a sort of stole, with long accordion plaited cords falling in front, while about the shoulders it forms a capuchon, shirred all around the neck. Little ruches of mousseline de soie compose the decoration.

Incrustations of black lace are the favorite ornamentation of parasols of colored taffeta. Little ruches of mousseline de soie, embroidered garlands and the narrowest of ribbons drawn through the open passages of lace are also employed, and a large, fluffy chou is often placed on the stem of the parasol above the handle.

Scotch plaid parasols are new for seaside and country, and also parasols of stamped foulard of odd designs.

The toilet illustrated is of mauve cashmere. The redingote skirt is bordered with white galloon and soutache and opens over a front similarly trimmed and also enriched with incrustations of guipure de venise. The bodice shows a sort of bolero effect, the upper part, bordered with white galloon and fastened at the left side with gold buttons, being cut away to show an inverted corselet of guipure. The edge of the front is cut in tabs, beneath which appears a frill of lace. The sleeves are adorned with galloon and guipure applications, and the belt is of green velvet, fastened by an old silver buckle. The hat of moss green tulle is trimmed with brown speckled feathers.

Old Fashioned Lace Shawls Again Coming to the Front.

There was a time, in years now long past, when everybody had a black chantilly lace shawl. These were packed away when they dropped out of fashion, but now they are being disinterred and used for long pointed tunic draperies upon skirts covered with deep plaited flounces of mousseline de soie, liberty satin or even moire, for silk moire is now mingled with all sorts of thin, sheer fabrics, a part of its heavy, stiff effect being thus lost.

Reed green is extremely fashionable and assumes the lead among those light tints which are employed under lace. It is a subdued green.

Guipure coats are in high favor. They have a basque long at the back, but rounded in front, the form which prevails with jackets of all sorts. An attempt is being again made to introduce the loose sack, but it will probably fail, as it did last time.

The costume shown in the sketch is of pastel blue cloth. The skirt closes at the side and is adorned with rows of stitching and applications of Irish guipure. The crossed bodice is gathered at the waist and has a wide collar and revers incrusted with guipure. The plaited plastron has a yoke and high collar of guipure. The sleeves are encircled by corded plaits and are adorned with guipure motifs. The belt of pansy velvet is fastened by a gold buckle. The hat is of sky blue straw, trimmed with fans of blue tulle and white feathers.

How Not to Spoil an Attractive Mouth.

A pleasing mouth is an important possession to the woman who values her personal appearance, and the attractiveness of that feature is often made or marred by the treatment it receives. Any habitual twisting or distortion of the lips will damage the beauty of a mouth naturally pretty, and the unsightly effect of cracked lips or blistered lips is well known. The custom of biting the lips and of moistening them with the tongue is responsible for the majority of disfigurements of their surface, and persons who have contracted the habit should spare no effort to break themselves of it. If all other methods fail, the use of a little quanin water on the lips will serve as a bitter reminder when the tongue touches them. To let the mouth rest is the first condition of beauty—that is, not to draw it out of shape nor injure the skin—and another condition is to keep it closed when not entirely employing it in eating, speaking or singing. A third requisite is to keep a healing lotion always within reach, in order to apply it when the lips show any indications of roughness or feverishness. Glycerin and rosewater, for example, will answer admirably.

The picture illustrates a tea gown of pale green crepon. It has a close fitting back and a loose front. The revers, collar and sleeves are covered with appliques of ecru embroidery. A fichu of white mousseline de soie passes under the collar and ties in front with long, floating ends. The high collar is of green velvet, and there are frills of lace at the neck and wrists.

ACCESSORIES.

Attractive Additions to the Fashionable Toilet.

Black velvet ribbons, in various widths, are immensely used for trimming. They are employed in all sorts of ways—to edge ruffles and flounces, border insertions, for belts with long floating ends; for chous, bands and loops. On light gowns these black ornaments are particularly liked.

Jackets of black taffeta are the latest and most esteemed finish for the fashionable costume. They do not follow the tailor made style, being usually rather elaborate. Taffeta, which is entirely tucked, either vertically, horizontally or obliquely, or else ornamented with rows of stitching, is generally chosen, and the jacket may be long or in the form of a bolero. The revers and collar are much adorned.

Hat pins have become expensive pieces of jewelry, forming an important item in the general effect of the headgear. The large head, composed of an irregular pearl, a cabochon or a ball of cut rock crystal, is placed in a wrought metal setting which often partly incloses it or is set with small jewels, or even forms an additional large ornament in itself, assuming the form of an insect or an animal's head.

The cut shows an attractive gown for a young girl. The lawn skirt is of plain red foulard, while the pointed tunic is of red foulard with white dots, and is bordered with white band of guipure. The stretched bodice of dotted foulard is gathered at the waist and has a large collar of plain foulard trimmed with a band and edge of guipure. The plain red plastron also has guipure bands. The dotted sleeves are finished at the elbow by a lace frill. The belt is of white faille, the hat of dotted foulard trimmed with red foulard and white quills.

HAVE WOMEN HUMOR?

Junius Henri Browne Makes Characteristic Answer to the Question.

Although the Americans as a people are noted for their keen sense of humor, the women of the nation have been declared, in common with women generally, to be destitute of it.

It has been for many generations a pet opinion of men, especially of the critical class, that humor belongs to physiology; that it depends entirely on organs and their functions. In other words, that a woman, however intellectual and cultured, whatever advantages she may have enjoyed, cannot be humorous—not even an American woman, who is apt to have acute observation, quickness of mind, playfulness of fancy, geniality of feeling, kindness of heart, each and all of which enter into the subtle thing called humor.

The body of self constituted critics, as stubborn as they are incompetent, having once pronounced against woman, still maintain their position and would no doubt if they should meet scores of women

THE INCARNATION OF HUMOR.

No one can be more prejudiced, more intolerant, than a man who has misjudged on instinct all womankind.

Sweeping generalizations are always foolish and never carry weight. "A woman never has and never can have humor" is a most conspicuous example of this kind of assertion.

The man who maintains it is inclined, when confronted seriously, to take refuge in quibbles, definitions, technicalities, in order to conceal his defeat. He will deny that anything quoted as coming from woman's tongue or pen is really humor, to which he assigns a peculiar, stupid, unprofitable meaning.

We all know what humor is, can tell it when we read or hear it, are not to be deceived or hoodwinked by any sort of sham or sophistry. A woman who is humorous, orally or graphically, is very much the same as a man who is humorous. Any assumption that humor in one sex is altogether different from humor in the other is transparently absurd, loudly and earnestly as may make the claim. There may be, there probably is, a certain difference in degree between woman's humor and woman's. Hers is often finer, sweeter, more genial, less coarse, less bitter, as is natural and characteristic, but that one is humor and the other is not is utterly preposterous.

If great many women are lacking in humor, have not a particle; a great many men are too. But who has ever denied that man is incapable of humor?

It may be granted that a large number of women are too intense, too personal, too earnest, too narrow, too serious, to give encouragement to humor to yield scope for it. But even such disposition does not deprive them of humor for all time. A complete change of circumstances, a new education, learning to look at things from a fresh point of view, might qualify them for humor.

While humor is frequently, perhaps generally, inherent, it may be cultivated and not seldom is. Pouts themselves, despite the old, familiar dictum, may be cultivated, though only those of a second class. Why, then, may not humorists be?

Humorists are far more common now than they were a century or so since, when life was harder, conditions more forbidding. They were much fewer in the early republic than at present.

FEMININE HUMORISTS WERE SO SCARCE

here then as to be unrecognized as a class and were therefore wholly unrecognized.

The purblind critics may have deduced their theory from that period. But they hold the same ground at the close of the century. How can they, having eyes to read and ears to hear?

Feminine humorists are everywhere today—in the smallest village, in every company. In novels, in essays, in stories, in newspapers, which and for which women write so commonly, humor abounds, and small discrimination is needed to perceive that a good deal of it is woman's humor.

Woman's conversation nowadays is full of humor, fuller often than man's. She is often a closer observer than he; slight differences in persons, mere trifles, impress her more; her sense of the incongruous is keener than his, and acuteness of any sort augments and stimulates humor.

A delicate vein of humor runs through most

CLEVER WOMEN'S LETTERS.

It is far more apparent, more marked, than in educated men's social private letters, from which business and routine matters are excluded.

As woman has, as universally admitted, made such rapid strides in a generation or two, gained so much on man, may she not have surpassed him in humor, which was once conceded to him alone? No man of 30 would, I should think, gallantry apart, believe that man had any advantage over woman in humor, particularly in spontaneous kind. His opinion would be more likely to favor woman, who in the present day shows more humor than he does in anything like ordinary intercourse.

It will be observed, I opine, that most of those who share the ancient prejudice about woman and her want of humor are distinctly fossiliferous.

JANE ADDAMS' SUMMER SCHOOL.

Affords City Working Girls an Outing and Combines Recreation and Study.

By Annette Crawford.

One of the many activities of Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, in behalf of womankind and humanity in general is a summer school for girls at Rockford, Ills. Through the courtesy of the trustees of Rockford college the chapel and dormitories of that institution are used free of charge, and here are gathered something more than 100 happy girls—mostly Chicago girls—who work in one way or another and are all the more appreciative of the advantages of the school during the outing season.

Not for one minute is it to be imagined this school, like the thousand and one summer schools over the country, is not for intellectual labor. It is unique, on the other hand, in that it combines a small amount of mental exercise, mostly along the lines of informal nature study, with a maximum of outdoor recreation.

At the same time the two requisites of a really ideal outing—pleasure and profit—are so interwoven that it is delightfully difficult to discover where the play ends and the study begins. It is a happy medium, what is more, between the intense intellectuality of the summer student and the "unalloyed laziness" of the summer resorter.

Not only does it combine pleasure and improvement, but adds the comforting fact that the cost of the outing is merely nominal, that the free instruction on a little of everything under the shining summer sun is by as clever a lot of college girls as could be found the country over.

The social part of Miss Addams' summer school also flourishes. About every other day some special scheme is successfully carried out. One day it is a "white ball" in the gymnasium, when every one on the floor is required to dress in a white costume, and another day it is a picnic up the river, where the coffee is made over a campfire. Once in awhile the small steamer is chartered for a trip up the river or a trolley car is secured for a trip through the town. These summer pleasures are interspersed with hay rides, bicycle spins and whatever entereth into the head of the summer girl.

Not the least interesting of this summer scheme is the plan of co-operative housekeeping. As the summer school is in no sense charitable, each one pays either $3 or $3.50 a week for board and a room in the dormitory. The ones who only pay $3 are required to do housework for one hour each day. This one hour may be spent in drying dishes, setting the table, shining the silver or the like.

The cooking is done by a set of servants, but each member of the summer school is expected to attend to her own room. The ones who pay the additional 50 cents are exempt only from the one hour's work. There is one part of the work, however, each girl is required to do. That is to wait on the table three days. As eight sit at each table, two wait on each table.

This housekeeping scheme seems all the more attractive when it is understood that not only are all the bills—including food, gas, laundry and servants—paid out of these small weekly sums, but usually has a surplus. Last season, for instance, there was $245 left in the exchequer, which was used to buy a new set of library furniture for the college.

Miss Addams' idea in starting the school was to have a pleasant place where the Hull House winter classes could pursue their studies.

The boarders at the summer school, therefore, are for the most part people who take advantage of social settlement courses of study. Though many are breadwinners, including shop girls and school teachers, a considerable part are social settlement residents or persons who are particularly interested in its aims.

As Rockford college is the first institution thus to open its doors it deserves great credit, particularly as it is not heavily endowed and might consistently guard its buildings from unnecessary use. Some other colleges conduct summer schools, but it is either for pecuniary profit or to further the interests of their particular line of students. So it may be said that Rockford college stands unique in having taken the initiative in making possible such a pleasant and instructive vacation for those not connected with it.

Rockford's initiative furnishes a good example to hundreds of other women's colleges, located conveniently near large cities, which, by adopting this "open door" policy, could aid thousands of girls in having pleasant and inexpensive vacations, while giving them opportunities for study and self improvement.

ACCESSORIES.

Pretty Trifles to Enhance the Beauty of the Costume.

Boleros of the newest fashion are not trimmed, with the exception of the revers and collars, which may be elaborately ornamented. Black satin skirts of good quality are also left untrimmed and are much worn with boleros and fancy waists.

Medici collars are still in great favor, little adapted as they are to warm weather wear. The discomfort they cause has been largely diminished, however, by making them of lace and tulle, embroidered with jet and spangles and kept in form by wire. Being of open material, they do not make the neck so warm as do those of the usual kind.

Bows of gauze, tulle and lace are made just long enough to pass around the neck and reach the waist line in front. At the back they are very large, but they taper toward the ends, which are secured at the belt.

A picture is given of a tailor made gown of thin red cloth. The skirt is adorned with stitched straps which outline the tablier and yoke, passing downward again at the back. The double breasted coat has a short round basque and is trimmed with stitched straps which design a sort of plastron and border the edges, the pocket flaps, collar and revers. Crystal buttons appear in groups of three on the plastron. The straw hat is encircled with a puffing of tulle and has a trimming of foliage and a bow of ribbon edged with velvet.

Duck and Pique Suits For Seaside and Country Wear.

The favor in which piques, galates cloth, duck, canvas and similar fabrics are held by fashion is a blessing to mothers, for no materials could be better suited for the summer attire of small boys and girls. Cool and serviceable, such goods may be washed over and over without receiving injury, especially when they are white. There is another useful material for children, less often seen in America, although it may be obtained at first class shops, and that is English holland in tan and linen shades. When it is washed, it comes out as good as new, and it will wear for an indefinite time.

Children's clothing of finer goods, such as muslin and flowered lawn, is trimmed chiefly with valenciennes lace, which is arranged in lengthwise or horizontal bands, in squares, lozenges and other decorative forms. In all such cases the insertion is first sewed on the smooth material in the desired design, and then the goods beneath it are cut away.

The illustration shows an attractive little costume of navy blue pique. The skirt is plain. The short, loose sacque is open and is bordered with stitching, as are the wrists of the plain sleeves. The revers and collar are of white pique with navy blue dots, and under the sacque is worn a shirt waist of the dotted pique, with a white cravat. The hat of navy blue straw is trimmed with white ribbon and white lace.

FASHION NOTES.

Little Girls' Bonnets—Thin Summer Petticoats.

The large directoire bonnets are still used for little girls up to 7 or 8 years old. The bonnets are of soft straw and are trimmed with mousseline de soie and ribbon.

Beige is a fashionable color, and jackets of this shade are well worn.

Petticoats are long, but not too long, for nothing is more untidy looking than a petticoat dragging below the gown skirt, or one which is so long as to collect the twigs, dust and bits of paper upon the ground and store them up among the frills and furbelows. The petticoat should be short enough to escape the ground when the wearer is walking, unless it is a petticoat specially intended to accompany a ceremonious trained gown, and even then it should not drag. Cambric, lawn and nainsook petticoats, enriched with many ruffles and with quantities of lace insertion and edging, are provided for use with light summer gowns and are charming, but expensive in the matter of laundering, since they must be kept immaculate. For ordinary wear silk seems to be the most practical material, as it wears much longer than silk, is light and has a great deal of body. It is to be had in all the fashionable colors, light and dark, in black and even in fancy weaves.

The new jacket illustrated is of cloth and is tight at the back and perfectly straight in front, closing at the side with large fancy buttons. Around the lower edge are two circular ruffles. The revers, of white moire, are embroidered with gold, the same decoration appearing upon the collar and the cuffs. The cravat is of lace. The green silk toque is trimmed with mottled plumes and parma violets.

OUTING SUITS.

Costumes For Traveling, Yachting and Golfing.

The usual materials for outing suits are employed this year—serge, cheviot and covert cloths—and in addition there are one or two new fabrics—granite weaves in two tones and a goods which is between cheviot and poplin, having the cheviot rib and the poplin luster and crispness. Gray, gray blue, brown, beige and mastic are the favorite colors, being serviceable and not easily defaced.

The plain skirt and bolero or short jacket is the accepted style for these gowns, being very convenient and simple. A shirt waist is worn under the jacket, so that the latter may be removed if the wearer becomes too warm. The shirt waist is of silk, wash flannel or cotton material, but for seaside or mountain use thin wash flannel is best and keeps its attractive appearance longest.

Yachting costumes adhere to the nautical ides, and blue and white are, of course, most appropriate. The shore skirt and regulation blouse are the conventional attire, but less rigid consistency admits the flaring skirt and the bolero, marine appearances being preserved by embroidered anchors and a yachting cap. For actual use a "sweater" or guernsey, such as real sailors wear, is most satisfactory, as it is warm and does not impede movement.

A picture is given of a new traveling wrap. It is of thin, plum colored cloth lined with straw silk. A circular pelerine is sewed around the shoulders under a circular ruffle, both being finished with rows of stitching. The valois collar is also stitched, and the wrap is fastened by three stitched tabs of cloth buttoned at each end and by a metal button. The hat, of plum colored straw, is trimmed with velvet to match and gray feathers.

WRAPS.

Boleros and Jackets of the Prevailing Style.

A novelty in boleros is very short, extending downward only as far as the middle of the back, like an empire bodice. From the edge falls a deep flounce of sun plaited mousseline de soie or lace.

Another novelty is a long cape of white or very light cloth of a soft weave. It is draped like a burnoose at the left side, where it is held in place at the shoulder by an ornamental clasp. Woolen fringe borders the cape, which is lined with white silk. When intended for evening wear, capes of this kind are of crepe de chine, all the fullness being mounted on a richly embroidered square yoke. Deep fringe of knotted silk forms the decoration, and the lining consists of puffings or ruffles of mousseline de soie.

Little capes of a frivolous character, cut so short as to seem merely like wide collars, are used as wraps with thin gowns.

The picture given today shows an attractive bolero of cloth. It reaches the waist to the neck, while in front it is loose and extends downward in two rounded tabs. The revers, edges and seams are finished with stitching, and the bolero fastens by a link across the chest. There is no seam in the middle of the back. The sailor hat of Italian straw has a border and band of black grosgrain and is draped with tulle, making a chou at the side, where black feathers are also placed.

LACE.

It Leads Among Fashionable Trimmings and Accessories.

Lace is the reigning favorite of fashion. Never has it been more worn in all styles and qualities. From the most delicate antique handiwork to the cheapest of modern machine lace there is a place for every variety. Ancestral laces which have been laid away in lavender are now brought forth to enjoy new triumphs not less striking than those of former years.

The products of Brussels, Alencon, Bruges, Valenciennes, the renaissance and other guipures, darkened by age, lend their glories to both simple and luxurious fabrics. They are draped around the shoulders, arranged in cascades or in watteau plaits or form tabliers, panels or flounces. There are also collars, pla-trons and epaulets made in shape and detached lace motifs which may be applied according to the requirements of the garment they are to adorn.

Guipure stoles are another variation. Sometimes they are in the form of a wide panel, covering the front of the bodice and skirt; sometimes they consist of two long bands.

The butterfly hat illustrated is an attractive novelty. It is a round shape, made of mixed braid of straw and horsehair, and is pink. Around the crown is a turban drapery of white tulle, which forms a sort of ruffle at the back. On the left side is a gigantic black butterfly, speckled with white, the wings being lined with pink. The body and head are of black chenille, the eyes of crystal. Under the brim at the back are arranged shaded pink carnations.

DUMMY LOVERS FOR HIRE.

The Chronik der Zeit of Berlin Says That Americans Have Them.

WAS JUST DISCOVERED.

Chance for a Young and Good Looking College Student to Make Money in His Vacation.

Papa Would Take Dummy as Traveling Companion and Keep Him Until the Girl Becomes Interested in Him, Then He Goes and the Right Man Appears.

The Chronik der Zeit, of Berlin, has made a most remarkable discovery concerning the ways of Americans. We are accused of harboring a school for turning out "dummy lovers."

There is a new occupation for young men of pleasant appearance and manner and educated for the purpose in the land of the dollar," says the Berlin Journal. "The daughters of American millionaires, being of eccentric and often of a romantic turn of mind, in many instances show a tendency to favor the suit of some college-bred but impecunious young man.

"This, of course, gives any amount of worry to papa,' who, if he does not succeed in turning his daughter's mind by sensible and thankful views expressed, resorts to the novel scheme of taking her for a tour on the continent 'for the sake of her health.' And it is here where the services of the 'dummy are enlisted.

"A bright nd handsome young man is selected from the school that prepares them, and he accompanies the family party in the capacity of traveling companion. He plays the part of the 'man of the world,' and by his society the young woman soon forgets her poor Jack or Jim.

"Just as soon as the foxy parent sees that the cure works the young man receives his pay and is suddenly asked to disappear, and then the rightful choice of 'papa' appears on the scene. This may be a nobleman or a wealthy financier, or any one in whom the old gentle man has perfect confidence that his reputation will not be injured financially."

His Iron Grip.

Frederick R. Farrow, a young drug clerk of Philadelphia, has added himself into $25,000 worth of trouble because of an "iron grip." He tried his grip on Miss Edith Boone, a dainty young

Quaker miss of eighteen, and as a result she has lost one hand and it may be necessary, says the surgeons, to amputate the other.

Farrow is an exhuberant chap. When he called one evening on Miss Boone he was so delighted at seeing her that he took both her hands in his and gave them what Mr. Farrow thought was a "warm squeeze." The young woman yelled with pain. Mr. Farrow was slightly embarrassed. He tried to apologize, telling the young woman he would not intentionally injure such pretty little hands.

Since then the strong young drug clerk has not had the visiting privilege of the Boone house.

He didn't feel so strong when Miss Boone's lawyer served him with the papers in a suit for $25,000 damages as the result of the squeeze he gave her hands.

A Pathetic Story.

Another more pathetic example was that of an old woman whose buband was incapacitated from further work He belonged to a friendly society, but for six months of the year was only entitled to draw from it two shillings a week, says the London Spectator. As it was impossible for the aged pair to live out his sum the wife asked for outdoor relief. Her application was refused, because in the opinion of the guardians, though a dwarf, deformed and the victim of a painful internal malady, she was not yet absolutely worn out. Day after day she dragged herself to field work as long as she could manage to crawl, earning from sevenpense to ninepense per day by tying barley under the harvest sun. Out of this miserable pittance she retiously set side the payments that she had begun in more prosperous times for her funeral. She died a pauper, after terrible suffering borne with marvelous patience; she was buried at her own expense, as she had earned by the sweat of her brow amid sharp bodily anguish.

HOUSE NOVELTIES.

INVENTIONS THAT LIGHTEN LABORS OF MISTRESS AND SERVANT.

Busy Brains at Work All the Time Studying Out Some New Household Contrivance—Remarkable Appliances That Make Cooking a Pleasure.

It really seems as if the domestic help, the handmaid and the handman of the present day household, had the fates against it. For evolved the saleman. "Cake or any cooked viand they are more careful about; but bread, with a thick crust to it, they appear to leave to its own protection. Various customers have spoken of this from time to time, so an inventor has taken the hint and made this cylindrical bin, that closes the moment the loaves are put into it."

A self-acting knife washer is another invention, designed to prevent the overburdened hired girl from having to remember that the handles of knives ought not to be put into hot water. It is a double-decked affair with places for the big, overgrown knives and places for the small knives. The knife washer does everything but eat its own hot water and wipe the knives dry when it is finished. That is much is still left to the domestic. A new egg breaker has just taken precedence over all previous egg breakers. It not only cracks the shell, but holds the hot egg as well, thus saving Katie's fingers from the least possible hurt. This invention looks something like a pair of curved-edged scissors, with sharp little teeth to hold by. There is a new contrivance for shaving ice and new appliances for rounding it into balls for use about the butter and other delicate dishes. The convenciences for peeling and paring vegetables, slicing them, and chopping them up, and for measuring out seasonings and condiments are a revelation to people who have not kept up with the van of improvements. Every year a new raisin seeder comes out, and the latest device for this purpose would be interesting to the old-time housewives who spent hours seeding raisins for a birthday or a wedding cake, armed only with a hairpin and patience that resisted stickiness.

There have been divers bottle lockers put on the market from time to time, but 1898 sees a new one possessed of an actual key which can be borne away in the pocket of the bottle owner, and so afford tangible evidence of the security of the much prized vintage.

"We have sold no end of these," says the saleman. "They take much better than the self-fasteners, that depended on the cork's swelling as a precaution. There seems to be a feeling among owners of wine cellars that it is perfectly natural for their butler to give way to temptation in this regard, or for the cook or the child's nurse, on off afternoons and evenings, to take a clandestine swig at any tipple she may prefer. When the choicest wines that the house affords are locked, each in its own bottle, and the separate keys are in their turn locked away in cabinet or desk drawer, the master and mistress may enjoy a freedom from responsibility."

A contrivance not made especially for servant's use, but that might be adopted by them with convenience, is an implement for reaching out and getting things without rising from one's chair. It is probable that the designer had the comfort of invalids and helpless folk in mind when he planned it, but able-bodied folk, both above and below stairs, have been quick to see its merits when shut up it looks like a pair of tweezers or scissors, but it is light and pliant, and at the slightest touch jumps out and lengthens into a half-yard long utensil, with two little claws at the end for hooking up the desired object. A pamphlet or handkerchief, the skirt of a creeping infant, a skein of yarn, or any light thing that one's comfort requires, can be grabbed and brought within range by this contrivance. It is called a "Lazy Tom." The sybarite, either in kitchen or in the sitting room, when armed with it can go a fishing among surroundings without moving an inch from the special place he has found comfortable.

Wore the National Costume.

The Princess of Montenegro, while on a visit to her daughter, the Princess of Naples, at Rome, drove out every day in the national Montenegrin dress —a red cloth cloak—and wearing a long black veil over her head. The Romans seemed to like the costume, and cheered it lustily whenever it appeared. In the evening the Princess rivalled Solomon, her costume being simply covered with gems.

Popular For Curtains.

The coin spot muslins still continue popular for curtains. The new fabrics come in double widths, while the spots are in all sizes. Nearly all of these curtains are tied back close to the window with wide, loose bands of the curtain stuff, edged on the bottom with ruffles of the same. Very few windows now show the old loopings of ribbons or cords.

BATTLES IN THE SEA

COMBATS BETWEEN BLUE CRABS AND MINNOWS.

The Crab Bails Its Claw and Walls for a Bite—Little Cannibals and Their Ways as Practised in the Brimy Deep—Soft Shell Crabs.

The blue crab is a pretty fair hand at catching fish. It will lie in shallow water motionless, with its pincer claws extended and its pincers open, waiting for a chance to nip a minnow. If one, coming swimming along through the water, should happen to pass between those open jaws, suddenly the jaws close and that is the last of the minnow. But the blue crab can do better than this; sometimes it will hold motionless in one claw a shred of something on which it has been feeding as a bait for minnows, holding at the same time its other big claw with the pincer open, waiting. The minnow comes to nibble at the food held in the closed claw, but there are likely to be enough of them to spread, and they may come from various directions, so that more than one of the crab will come within the waiting pincers of the open claw, and when one does the proceedings are closed for the time being.

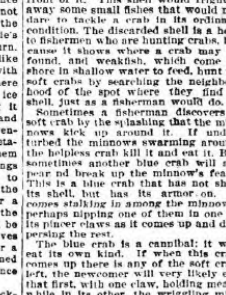
But sometimes the minnows get the blue crab, as they do when the crab is shedding. The crab knows when that time is coming, and then it makes for a place where it can shed its shell and *stay in safety until its new shell is suf*ficiently hard to protect it. The crab comes to the side and makes for some place on the bottom, in shallow water, perhaps along the edge of the eel grass, or under some protecting patch of algæ, and then proceeds to dig a hole in which it can stay after it has shed its shell until it is strong enough to dig out. It digs the sand or mud up around from under itself, and, as likely as not, leaves its discarded shell, in a most lifelike form, up on the sand on the edge of the hole in front of it. This shell would frighten away some small fishes that would not have to look at it in its ordinary condition. The discarded shell is a help to fishermen who are hunting crabs, because it shows where a crab may be found, and wealfish, which come in shore in shallow water to feed, hunt up soft crabs by searching the neighborhood of the spot where they find a shell. But a fisherman would do.

Sometimes a fisherman discovers a soft crab by the splashing that the minnows kick up around it and undisturbed the minnow swarming around the helpless crab kill it and eat it. But sometimes another blue crab will appear and break up the minnow's feast. This is a blue crab that has not shed its shell, but has its armor on. It comes stalking in among the minnows, perhaps slipping one of them in one of its pincer claws as it comes up and dispersing the rest.

The blue crab is a cannibal: it will eat its own kind. If when this crab comes up there is any of the soft crab left, the newcomer will very likely eat that first, with one claw, holding meanwhile in its other, the wriggling minnow which it had seized at the outset, keeping that to top off with.

A Dog and the Elephant.

Visitors to the New York Zoo recently have been surprised to find a Newfoundland dog chained in one of the elephant cages living in apparent peace and contentment.



DOG AND ELEPHANT.

Every one expects to see the great elephant kill his companion with a single sweep of her trunk, and crowds frequently gather at the cage expecting a battle, but the dog eats and sleeps without being molested.

The history of this strange companionship, which no one ever guesses, is that the dog Prince is really the master of the household and the elephant pets the animal for fear of him.

On more than one occasion Prince has succeeded in quieting the great beasts when her keepers were powerless to govern them. Elephants are naturally nervous and easily excited, and when once aroused are difficult to control. Prince has been known to, when everything else fails they need merely send Prince into the cage and the furious monsters will back to their corners and remain quiet.

Peter B. McNally, one of the assistants at the zoo, who vouched for these facts, says that Prince performs similar cases of this curious power in dogs.

The keepers do not know that Prince ever goes into the lion's cage with one of the elephants, though there is not the least doubt that they are all afraid of him.

AN ESCAPE FROM BONDAGE

This Man Says He Was Tricked Into An Insane Asylum.

WILD RACE FOR LIBERTY.

Through Tennessee Swamps, Cut By Barbed Wire Fences, In a Strange Country.

Story Told By a Man Who Says He Was Put Out of the Way For His Little Fortune—His Escape From Louisville—The Utmost Limit of Endurance.

Moses D. Morris tells a thrilling tale of his escape from the Great Western Insane Asylum, in Bolivar, Tenn., in which he was incarcerated for several weeks, although, he declares, he was perfectly sane. He was tricked into the asylum, he says, and the object of those who had him finally there was his little fortune of $35,000.

Mr. Morris's favorite among the unfortunate inmates with whom he was locked up was "Mike" McGee, a man who had been educated for the priesthood, and who was at times entirely rational. The two talked over plans to escape from the asylum, and finally consulted with another patient, Dr. B., who had become insane through drink.

"I'm right," said the Doctor to them one day, "and I'll go to the North Hall.

"You will file over from here, and on the way will traverse a long narrow corridor. At the left of it and midway there is a small stair down to the ground floor. At the end of the lower corridor is a door. For an hour every evening it is unlocked, but you must pass the watchman's door. If he sees you all is lost. If you reach the door you may succeed. Try it, and God save you."

Mr. Morris and "Mike" decided to adopt the Doctor's suggestion. When night came Mr. Morris put on his evening dress suit, even to patent leather shoes, in order not to excite suspicion, though it was storming hard and he knew he ought to have heavier clothing if he plan to escape successfully.

"When the warder marched us over to the hall," said Mr Morris, "I was walking as in a dream. Down the long, dimly lighted corridor we marched like a company of flagellants. I looked ahead with blurring eyes. There was the spiral stairway—my heaven of escape. I felt behind me the fortunate in front of me, trying to make myself smaller. I reached the head of the stairway, gave a glance around, and then down we dashed like a madman in reality—down, down, down, reaching the ground floor with my head in a whirl.

"It looked forward. A flood of light poured through the opening of the watchman's door. How could I ever get by it? My blood froze with the thought of capture now. I tip-toed along, then made a sudden dash through the blaze of light like a spectre. I reached the door unseen. My brain was on fire. I seized the great latch and threw my strength into the last stroke for liberty and home. Thank God, the door flew open. A gust of wind-swept rain enveloped me like a thousand angels sent for my deliverance. Into the darkness I plunged, not knowing, not caring. I possessed only with the conviction that I was free, free, free!

"On and on I raced. I was hundreds of miles from home, in a strange country. The December rain pelted me in torrents, the mud was almost to my knees. I did not know a single road, but plunged on and on, with the hope of finding some sort of a place—anywhere on earth, so long as it was out of sight of that accursed place. I dared not look back, still breathlessly I passed, and, from a distant hill, I saw the bleak turrets illuminated by the lightning's flash and then they faded from my sight forever.

"I found that in tearing through a barbed wire fence in my flight I had torn one of my fingers almost from my hand. It bled profusely, but, binding it up as best I could, I set my face from the scene of my miseries, scanning the darkness for evidence of the habitat of civilized man. Knowing that they would soon bee after me, I dared not lapse into a walk, but kept up a fierce gait, over ridges, through creeks, surmounting every obstacle, the mud of the Tennessee valleys often to my knees, falling into ponds whose thin ice cut me as I plunged.

"Finally when almost totally exhausted, Mr. Morris heard dogs baying in the distance behind him. Following the sound, came to a little cabin. The negro who owned it took him in and cared for him for two days. He was then taken to the insane asylum and a hundred miles from home.

"Afterward I offered my watch for fare to Nashville, but the young man of the house said, 'No, I'll be sending express stops for water just a half minute down here about a mile. Conceal yourself nearby and board the blind baggage car. You are safe till you get to Louisville.' I thanked him, bade these good people adieu with tears of gratitude, and, with the help of my friend, in hour later boarded the blind baggage car of the mid-night express. 'God bless you all!' I screamed out as I sped away, and then I was alone, fearful toward home and my dear people, pelted with cinders, stifled and strangled, with smoke, but with my heart beating fast and triumph. I arrived at Louisville at daybreak to face my accusers, who saw the miracle of my escape from the prison asylum with consternation and terror. How I ever survived it I do not know, but here I am, safe, sane and sound, proving that there is still hope in the world from un just bondage, with right on your side, there is no limit to human endurance."

They gently clad the poet in that he always took the gloomy view of things.

"Do you ever write on an empty stomach?" he asked.

The poet glared up at them with glassy eyes.

A ROBIN'S APPETITE

THE DAILY RATIONS FOR A SONG BIRD ARE STARTLING.

Food of the Little Beings That Flutter, Fly and Feed—Their Value to the Farmer—Man's Attitude Toward His Most Industrious Friend.

If a man ate as much daily in proportion to his weight and size as does a wren or a robin, to compare his food his statue would need be so great as to have the crowning head several feet farther from the ground than is the ungainly effigy of Washington monument at the Capital City.

This statue estimate is based on the premise that the man with the big appetite would only need to be of ordinary height. If he were 900 feet high and only a foot and a half thick he would be somewhat unsainly, and to bring him down from the clouds a bit, and still keep up the bird and food comparison, the man, to eat as much daily proportionately as a robin, must necessarily be about sixty miles high, two feet thick from back to front and five feet broad across the shoulders.

Moreover, if a man did his duty by his fellows in the selection of food, as do the wren and the robin, his diet would consist in the main of centipedes, daddy-long-legs, rattlesnakes, spiders, and tarantulas, and other creatures whose living is supposed to be a menace to the world.

It has not been duly assured by some scientists within the last few years that if all the birds which make the earth beautiful and musical were to die, the destroying insects would make the world would not long be delayed.

From man's attitude toward the song and insectivorous birds, killing them and robbing their nests in his own functionless way that he does, it does not appear that man has much dread of the fate in store for him if his feathered friends take their flight to better land. Notwithstanding human indifference to possible impending annihilation the sniffers, gunners and hunters go on slaughtering the songsters, it is really not a difficult matter to demonstrate fairly conclusively that ornithological students are not far wrong when they say that man's life depends upon birds' life.

As a plain matter of fact, it is believed by every one who has watched the little beings that "flutter, fly and feed" about his door, that if their appetites were as voracious as they are, and if the nature of their food were not such as it is, the insect plague of Pharoah would visit the land, so that it would be impossible for the multitudes of the visitants, and that they would "eat every herb of the land and all the fruit of the trees," and there would remain "not any green thing in the trees or in the herbs of the field." The farmer who sees a robin or a catbird pecking away at a cherry is likely to shoot the bird, forgetting in his wrath at the theft the good offices of the bird in killing the insects which would have devoured the husbandman's trees, stalk, stem, leaf and fruit.

A GREEDY ROBIN.

A robin nestling, two-thirds grown, will eat in one meal of insect food to the amount of four times the little one's weight. The mother bird, and the father bird, too, for that matter, probably eat no more than the same amount. Now, a little calculation will show what this means. An average robin household contains four children. It will be rather timid each little one weighs three ounces. This will make a food supply of twelve ounces daily for the nestling, or forty-eight ounces for the four birdlings. During the same time the father and mother, unless they are starving themselves for the benefit of the young, as sometimes seems much more than probable, will eat one pound of food apiece, making a total for the robin family of five pounds of provender for the day. During some months almost every bit of food consumed by old and young birds is of an insect nature, forming at least a smaller part of the diet. Early in summer a robin family was watched closely, the head of the observer being kept well under cover, while the old birds visited fearlessly and fed their young, utterly ignoring the presence of six feet of humanity and a pair of sharp eyes. The chief part of the food which the redbreasts brought consisted of those green slugs which are seen on the leaves of the most tender stems of the trees. It is this creature which invariably "lumps" itself as it moves on its devastating way. Another insect which appears more in evidence as food than any other single species of crawler, though caterpillars were frequently brought to the bird would bring as many as three insects at once. The feeling process was constant from sunrise until sunset, and the nest was rarely not more than fifty yards from home for their food supply.

Angle worms, grubs, slugs, and the like are said to constitute a daily ultimate of twelve ounces a day for the young and sixteen ounces a day for the old is doubtless on the under side of extravagance. If a man should undertake to eat as much in proportion to his size as does a robin he would supply his stomach every day with seven or nine and 1000 pounds of solid matter, the amount varying, of course, with his weight and stature. A man six feet tall, weighing 180 pounds, in order to keep pace with the robin, must need eat 750 pounds of solid matter a day, and if he would do the same amount of food in proportion to his size that a single redbreast does he would consume his diet to pestiferous animal and plant nuisances.

CULT OF THE FORK.

MARION HARLAND WRITES ENTERTAININGLY ON TABLE MANNERS.

To Say of a Man "He Eats With His Knife" Is Either to Brand Him With Vulgarity or Asperse the Gentility of His Antecedents.

When the poor seamstress in "Timothy Quest" laments that she has been so lowly that she could hardly get her knife to her mouth," we smile indulgent amusement.

When Mrs. Shoddy, seated in state among her foreigners in a Bar Harbor drawing room, animadverts upon the barbarity of the original denizens of the region, who "used to give summer boarders steel knives to eat fish with, when everybody who knows anything knows that steel gives a disagreeable taste to fish—I pledge you my word, my dear, I couldn't bear to put those horrid knives into my mouth!"—the smile is a broad laugh.

When we recognize in a fashionable Boston restaurant a former Governor, who is also a former Congressman and an eminent jurist, and, while our acquaintance is looking we see him, in an absent minded sort of way, shovel peas into his mouth with the blade of his knife—we shudder, and straightway the man is to us unrighteous, says Marion Harland, in the New York Herald.

"Not ours to reason why" the use of the fork as a vehicle for transferring solid foods from the plate to lips that should have become a stringent law among us. Custom is the rule is as binding as that enjoining that every man who knows the rudiments of good manners should lift his hat in saluting a lady in the street, and uncover his head when he finds himself with ladies in a hotel elevator.

To say of a man, "He eats with his knife," is to brand him with vulgar*ity, or, as is oftener just, to asperse the* gentility of his antecedents. His origin is unknown, his training is none, and his breeding defective. The adage that the cult of the fork, like correct spelling, must be mastered before the boy or girl passes the age of fifteen—or never—is grounded in truth and supported by daily observation.

We are nowise surprised to learn in reading the report of our former Governor's next professional triumph, that he was born of peasant stock. Until he was seventeen he ploughed the fields by day and cultivated his mind by night. By the time he entered college the knife-swallowing habit was established. Association with men and women in the higher walks of the fork has so far modified his behavior that, in donning his dress suit and "importing" one, he will also be guilty of no painful unpardonable solecism. Lunching at his ease, and alone, in the Parker House, unconscious of the presence of any one who knew him by sight, his thoughts absorbed by political or legal questions, his right hand forgets its borrowed cunning. Early practices prevail over artificial civilization. Out of (and in) his own mouth he is convicted as a clownish rustic.

The phrase is sene too strong. No man has a right to arrange the sensi*bilities of others by the unclean trick* of thrusting the laden blade between his lips and withdrawing it, reeking, for another onslaught upon the provisions set before him .The nimble fork approaches the lips—the knife plunges into the door. The concensus of refined judges of aocfal manners and customs on this head makes for decency as well as for propriety. So well established is the law now that it ranks with constitutional sections.

As, for instance, when a woman, neither quarrelsome nor hypercritical, hissed her private doubts as to the social antecedents of another upon the circumstance that the "suspect" cut up her fish before she used the fork to bear upon it. "There was something amiss with her home education," was the shrewd and reluctant conclusion. The stress that accurate home education cannot be exaggerated. While seven out of every ten business men lunch in restaurants, and five out of ten seek promiscuous sustenance three times a day in chop houses, "hash halls" and business hotels, table etiquette must be one of the least considered of trifles. Hardly one out of a score of prosperous citizens can eat his soup without audible auction, and the discretion of the waiter who proffers commends to the squeamish spectator the wisdom of the dear old maids in Cranford, who always took their oranges in their own reticules, there is not a man without danger of annoyance to others. I have seen a millionaire pare his cucumber with his knife, and carefully each quarter to his mouth upon the point of his silver fruit knife. The act may have been illfully reminiscent of his early life, but the effect upon sympathetic beholders was peculair and not appetizing.

Few "live" American men learn to eat slowly until national dyspepsia has struck its fangs into their vitals. College boys in mess halls, clerks and salesmen at bookkeepers, however carefully trained at home, fall into slipshod table tricks that would horrify their mothers. But the cult of the fork is beneficent in its influence on the most reckless. The collegian may gulp his coffee and bolt his steak and smack his lips over his soup. He would as soon think of using the objective plural noun by a singular verb as to carry his food to his mouth with his knife. He taught in childhood that it is not decent to do it. The very young fellow—lazy or diligent, drunk or sober, prosperous or a "dead beat"—never violates this principle drilled into him by the time he could feed himself of absolute divorce between his lips and his knife. As a sign manual of polite education and personal refinement its meaning—the use (or misuse) of the table fork is a faithful test, and an invariable one

For the Turn of the Stairs.

Old Dutch candlesticks are odd and ornamental for the halls of the country house. They stand four feet high, and are of brass, in the form of colonettes. The shade of the candle is as large as a lamp-shade, and if the candlestick is in blue and white Delft figured it is a fine and handsome piece for the staircase landings these candlesticks are very effective. Tall silver taper candlesticks in Rococo workmanship are shaped like altar candlesticks and are as costly as they are handsome.

A QUARTETTE OF DEMONS.

Three Serving Life Sentences In the Penitentiary At Columbus, Ohio.

FOUR DESPERATE MEN.

The Prison Warden Proposes to Make Them Work in a Novel Iron Cage.

Worthless Creatures Who Are a Constant Menace to the State—An Experiment In Penology Which Will Be Closely Watched—Plotting Against All Prison Rules.

Whether it is best that desperate murderous prisoners should be made to work, rather than allowed to sit idle day after day in solitary cells, is the question which Warden Coffin, of the Penitentiary in Columbus, Ohio, is seeking to solve by placing the four most incorrigible prisoners of that institution in a new steel "demon cage," especially constructed for them.

These four "prison demons" are Ira Mariatt, Otis Hurley, John Atkinson and Frank O'Neil, all of them murderers serving life sentences, except Hurley, who has thrice vainly attempted murder within the prison walls, and has a twelve years' sentence before him. Until a few days ago all of these men were kept in solitary confinement, their desperate character and dangerous disposition making a social possibility of their working in the crowded shops.

"The State of Ohio can no longer afford to employ armed guards to watch these desperate degenerates in solitary cells," said Warden Coffin, "and I propose from this on to make them work. That is my chief object for having this special cage constructed. It is simply a large steel lattice work box or cage, built around one end of a corridor. Into which five small cells open. Being about 11 by 21 feet, it will afford the 'prison demons' ample room for stretching themselves and doing whatever work I may see fit to give them. As soon as they have become accustomed to their new quarters and quieted down the excitement of their removal I shall put them to sorting broom corn, a light work, which they can easily perform in their cage."

This association of the most desperate characters of the institution, where they will have abundant opportunity to plan together plots against the guards and perhaps the lives of each other, is an experiment in penology which will be closely watched by prison reformists everywhere. Mariatt and Hurley have on numerous occasions attempted the lives of guards with curious weapons, which they have manufactured out of the most unlikely material. Using a case knife or any piece of iron which might fall into their hands in the hundreds of mysterious ways that baffle the authorities.

*Only a few weeks ago Hurley dan*gerously stabbed a guard, whom he lodged in the cell on the pretext that he would give him a package of saws taken from another prisoner contemplating escape. When the guard entered the cell Hurley thrust the steel wire stiletto into the guard's abdomen. The weapon was taken from him, but a similar one has been found concealed in his shoe since his transfer to the new cage.

It is this cunningness of all four of the "demons" to secrete material for weapons and to manufacture needle-pointed stilettos and daggers almost under the watchful eyes of the guards that raises the question whether it will be possible for them at some time to make an organized attack upon their keepers, or, perchance, quarreling among themselves to engage in a combat for the survival of the fittest. When the latter possibility was suggested to Warden Coffin he smiled and said:

"That would settle the problem, then. They are worthless creatures and a constant trouble to the State."

Mariatt was received at the prison October 31, 1891, on a life sentence, for second degree murder, committed in Mahoning county. He disputed with a fellow-workman, and struck him blow of his violent temper and shot the man. On his way home from the scene of the murder he attempted the lives of several persons with his gun. His past is now thirty-seven years old. When received at the prison he was placed at work in the stone pile, but did not take kindly to his duties and rebelled. When Guard Scott attempted to punish him Mariatt showed his demoniacal character by attacking the guard like a fury. His ravings were so frightful that he has since that time been confined and has done practically nothing. Otis Hurley, "demon" of the cage, and Frank O'Neil have served longterms than the others. They were born originally from Cuyahoga county, Atkinson being imprisoned in 1883 for grand larceny and picking pockets, and O'Neil, alias James O'Neil, in 1880, on the same charge. Both are professional robbers and thieves of the most des-

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

It Was Contemplated.

A Philadelphia dispatch says:

"The story that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company intends establishing a "cut off" near Bound Brook, N. J., shortening its route to New York, was denied today by David G. Baird, assistant secretary of the company. Mr. Baird said: 'The story is news to me, and you may put it down that there is nothing in it. I am pretty well acquainted with the road, and know of no such plan, and so far as that particular spot is concerned the scheme is not practicable.'"

The above refers, of course, to the story printed in The Daily Press Wednesday, in which it was stated that the Lehigh officials were contemplating the building of a "cut off" line from Bound Brook to Jersey City, reducing the distance between the two points nine miles and opening up an entirely new territory to the Lehigh.

Notwithstanding the denial of Mr. Baird The Daily Press has it on the best of authority that the Lehigh people have contemplated the project and that they have even gone so far as to send surveyors over the proposed line on a prospecting trip. The Daily Press did not in the published story say that it was assured that the branch would be built, but that it was contemplated. And so it was.

Editor Runyon in Politics.

Having failed in his desire to be Postmaster of Plainfield, Editor Runyon, if we are to believe a political writer in the Elizabeth Journal, is anxious for a seat in the State Assembly as one of Union county's Legislative representatives. The Journal man says:

There seems to be no doubt about Mr. Murray's sincerity in wishing to go out of politics, and it is not at all probable that Elizabeth Republicans will obstruct the way of Editor Runyon if he can secure the first essential—the support of the Plainfield delegates.

The drift of political chat here at the county seat indicates that Plainfield Republicans do not intend to be aggressive in seeking nominations from the county convention. No one feels that Plainfield has been omitted whenever the plum basket has been passed around, and the delegates from the "Colorado of the East" are coming to the county seat on convention day with the single purpose of doing their duty as loyal Republicans.

One of the hotel men said yesterday that County Clerk Howard would have the support of the Plainfield delegation, and that Assemblyman Houston is regarded in that city as the logical candidate for Sheriff. B. Frank Coriell, who has a legion of friends in Plainfield, has been mentioned by some of them for the Shrievalty, but his candidacy is to be urged only in case there is a friction among the Elizabeth men in the convention.

There is some talk in sections of the county, especially among the Democrats, of course, that former Sheriff Kyte would make an acceptable candidate for re-election. Some who are known to be in pretty close relations with Mr. Kyte, however, say that evidently he is not keeping up nights preparing the way for the honor.

Of the $150,000 appropriated by New York city for the Dewey welcome only $78,000 will be used for features that the public can participate in and enjoy. The remainder will be expended in elaborate and exclusive details, to which only the chosen few will be elect. It is doubtful if the open-hearted manner of Admiral Dewey will approve of such a course. The genuineness of his welcome will be in thorough interest displayed by the general public, and in view of this but a small proportion of the money appropriated for his reception should be expended in affairs to which the general public is to be barred.

Dover, somewhat different from Plainfield, has made an actual offer to the water supply company of that city for its plant in order to bring the enterprise under municipal control. The Common Council has passed a resolution offering the company $40,000 for its plant, which is to include all the property, water rights and other assets, and to be free of all encumbrances. If the offer is accepted within thirty days the matter will be submitted to a vote of the citizens of the town for either ratification or rejection.

Evidently the Somerville Unionist-Gazette considers a second term for Assemblyman Cooper a foregone conclusion, as witness the following:

Assemblyman Cooper was in town Sunday. He looks equal to any physical exertion and seems to be ready for the fall campaign, when he is once undoubtedly be a candidate for re-election. Mr. Cooper attends strictly to business when at home and his head is not the least bit turned by his success thus far in the political arena. Somerset needs no better representative in the Assembly than E. E. Cooper.

after you have concluded that you ought not to drink coffee. It is not a medicine but does good to all. Insist that it is healthful, invigorating and appetizing. It is made from pure grains and has that rich seal brown color and tastes like the finest grades of coffee and costs about 1/4 as much. Children like it and thrive on it because it is a genuine food drink containing nothing but nourishment. Ask your grocer for Grain-O, the new food drink. 15 and 25c.

Blame for Local Officials.

In discussing the accident at the grade crossing of the Central Railroad at Seabright Wednesday, Aug. 23, when three lives were lost, the New Jersey editor of the New York Tribune makes some very forcible remarks, none of which are more fitting to the terrible situation than his reference to the contributory negligence of local officials in not forcing railroads to live up to the laws passed to prevent such fatalities. The Tribune says:

The needless sacrifice of three lives at an unprotected grade crossing north of Long Branch ought to rouse a real indignation to the authorities of every municipality in New Jersey that there is a law on the statute books of the State under which they can compel the railroad companies to properly protect grade crossings. It is contributory negligence on the part of the local officials that permits the continuance of such death traps as that at which the accident occured. It is probably due to that spirit of complaisance toward all the shortcomings of railroads which is the natural consequence of the system of free passes which, as Senator Johnson, of Bergen, succeeded, after a hard fight, in having a law passed which would enable the people to compel the railroad companies to properly guard their crossings. It remains with the people to see that their official representatives do their duty in taking advantage of this law. It is passing strange that the corporations themselves do not see that one such accident costs them more than the expense of keeping flagmen at a score of crossings for a year. It seems they do not see it. This is why it was necessary to pass a law giving the Court of Chancery jurisdiction and power to compel the proper protection of grade crossings. What is needed now is some power to move the local authorities to enforce the law.

The Tax Rate.

Deducting the 2 cents increase in the county tax rate, over which the city has no control or voice in making, the local tax rate has gone up 12 points for this year, meaning that on the $8,000,000 taxable valuation of the city there will have to be raised $9,600 more for city expenditures than last year. But adding the 2 points increase in the county rate, which compels Plainfield to raise $1,600 more under this head this year than last, the total sum in excess of the amount raised last year by the city will be $11,200. For practical purposes, however, in considering how much more must be raised government is going to cost, the county tax must be eliminated.

Divided into the departments where the increases prevail, the extra sums that will have to be raised are as follows: City and city lights (including streets) $3,200; library, $2,400; fire department, $1,660; free schools and bonds, $2,400.

In our news columns yesterday we explained why it was necessary to raise larger sums in the above departments, but notwithstanding that they are all for needed and legitimate maintenance of the city government up to a standard that the constituency of the city—taken as a whole—demand, it is to be regretted that the increase has been necessary.

High tax rates usually have a deleterious affect upon the growth and prosperity of a town, but it is to be hoped that this sequence will not be Plainfield's misfortune.

Taking Time By the Forelock.

If there is any advantage in taking time by the forelock the Socialist Labor leaders of Union county intend to benefit by it, as they are the first in the political field with a full set of nominees for county offices to be filled in November. They must have gone at the nominating business in a very quiet manner, however, for none of the alert newspaper men of Plainfield were aware that the candidates had been named at a convention held in Plainfield August 21st, until the certificate of nominations was filed in the County Clerk's office last Saturday. The nominations are as follows:

For Senator—Chas. Burns, of Plainfield.
For Assemblyman—John Miller, of Plainfield, and Michael McGarry, of Elizabeth.
For Sheriff—Alvin Lentz, of Elizabeth.
For County Clerk—Frank Cullen, of Plainfield.
For Coroner—Charles R. Wallender, of Plainfield.

While the Watchung Silk Company's mill in this city is a minute factor in that industry in this country, there is a striking contrast in the prosperity that attaches itself to this enterprise, according to the promoters, as compared to the condition that prevails in one of the greatest silk making centers in the world—the city of Paterson. The Paterson Press reports the silk business very quiet there, and says that "like Micawber, the manufacturer is simply waiting for something to turn up, though the analogy ends there, for unlike Micawber he is eager to get to work. The maker is waiting for the women of the land to say what they intend to favor for fall and winter wear."

Mayor Van Wyck, of New York, admits that he would like to be a Judge of the Supreme Court of his State but denies that he has any notion of resigning his present office in order to be a candidate in the next election.

An officer of the Lehigh Valley is reported as having declared that the company will not build a branch to Plainfield. Thus does Plainfield's cherished hope for railroad competition take flight.

OLD NEWSPAPERS.

Don't Throw Them Away, They Are Very Useful.

Just a hint for housekeepers about old newspapers. Don't throw them away; they cost practically nothing, and are so useful for domestic purposes. Dipped in cold water they make the best window cleaners; just rub the windows over with the wet paper, and they are clean with very little labor. Crush some paper in the hand and rub the cooking stove over when the cooking is finished; it removes the grease quickly, and keeps the stove in capital order if it is done frequently, so that the grease does not corrode. Rub the hair brushes every morning with a pad of paper; it removes the dust. A piece of newspaper rolled into a ball or pad is a good substitute for a saucepan brush. A few newspapers, perforated with small holes for ventilation, tacked on to a blanket, makes a very warm and comfortable bed covering on cold nights. Spills for lighting lamps and candles are most useful, but are not always to be found even in well regulated households, yet in idle moments dozens can be made out of an old newspaper. Again, torn into small shreds (a nice amusement for a child, by the way), curled up and put into a washing tick, they make a clean and wholesome bed for the baby, and can be constantly renewed. A few folds of newspaper under the cake tin prevents it burning while in the oven.

The clothes-moth, like other evildoers has an aversion to printer's ink. An excellent shop-proof bag, second only to expensive tar paper, and costing nothing, may be made of two thicknesses of newspaper, with the edges folded as if for an inch-wide hem, and securely pasted. Bags of the same kind are almost as good for linen, and are for keeping seeds and dried herbs. They are dust and insect proof, and can be labeled and hung in the storeroom until needed.

The Hindu Child-Wife.

A Hindu child-wife divides her year in two intervals, one of which she spends with her parents, this being a sort of vacation time, and the other she spends at the house of her husband's parents, this being the time of daily downright drudgery. Village girls in Bengal blacken their teeth with missi, a coloring powder. The lips are black as jet, and this is supposed to make them exceedingly charming.

Writing letters, especially to her husband, is thought to be fearful immodesty in a Hindu girl; and she has no chance of improving her mind by intelligent conversation with anyone. She can have books in her house, though she has to do it by stealth in the night. The moon is her lamp, a stick out of the domestic broom her pen, the juice of the pain berry her ink, and probably the dried leaf of the banana her paper. A Hindu girl must always keep the inner apartment of the house. She is only let out when she goes to draw water for the household either from the pond or the well or the river. Hence the waterside is a great feminine resort, a sort of women's club, where there is much gossiping and plenty of stolen leisure.

Womankind.

A man causes some talk by deserting from one political party to another, but the real sensation is caused when a woman leaves one church to join another.

An Atchison woman rather lays it over all the other women in town by possessing a cut-glass and silver affair to fasten on an ear of corn while eating it.

When a woman bore calls, the hostess is compelled to get rid of her twice—when she gets up to go and at the front door.

There are different degrees of narrow-mindedness. The society woman who talks about "our set" is as bad as the church woman who believes that heaven was made to be filled by people of her church denomination.

A Woman Blacksmith.

A young lady living in California some little while ago took it into her head that she would like to make a horseshoe. It had been a favorite pastime of hers to watch a neighboring blacksmith at work, and she at last asked to be allowed to try her hand upon a shoe. Permission was granted, and she did so well that she continued the employment, and came to be largely patronized. Specimens of her handiwork were subsequently exhibited at San Francisco, and the blacksmith who taught her sent one of the horseshoes as a present to Queen Victoria.

In Washing Silk.

In washing silk there are four things to avoid—rubbing, wringing, soap and heat. Have the water like warm, make a lather with a little dissolved soap, if very dirty; if not, use bran water. Don't allow the soap in lumps to come in contact with silk; swish round and round till clean. Rinse in cold water to which has been added 1 sugar, one dessertspoonful to a quart. Place between dry cloths and squeeze perfectly through a wringer. Shake well and iron at once through tissue paper.

Do Not Bite Thread.

If you are in the habit of doing much sewing do not bite off the thread; use a pair of scissors. Apart from the fact that biting the cotton is injurious, the trick often results also in a very sore mouth. When silk thread is bitten the danger is greater, for it is usual to soak the thread in acetate of lead, so the result may be very serious, and even lead to blood poisoning.

Silk for the Hair.

A hairdresser says that an old silk handkerchief is much better to use in stroking the hair night and morning than a brush.

DAVID B. HENDERSON

A Long Career in the Army and in Politics.

Politics is a game of chance to a large extent; that is, the outcome is always uncertain. A little while ago the chances of David Bremner Henderson, of Dubuque, Iowa, to succeed Thomas B. Reed as Speaker of the House of Representatives appeared to be slight. But now he looms up as the dark horse of the contest, and there seems but little doubt that he will win in a walk.

Public interest is, therefore, concentrated upon Mr. Henderson at present, and it is believed in Washington that he will be nominated for Speaker upon the first ballot, when the Republican caucus meets just before the beginning of the session.

Nothing short of a complete revulsion of public sentiment against him in the next six months can prevent his success.

The career of Mr. Henderson, therefore, has a special interest at this time. He is a naturalized citizen of the United States, for he was born at Old Deer, Scotland, on March 14, 1840. His parents emigrated to America when he was six years old, and finally settled in Iowa, in 1849. He was educated in public schools and at the Upper Iowa University. Subsequently he studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1865. Meantime he had enlisted in the army, in 1861, as a private. He was wounded several times and lost a leg, but gallantly stuck to his post upon his recovery as colonel of the Forty-sixth Iowa infantry, and remained with his regiment till the close of the war. From 1867 until 1880 he was collector of internal revenue for the Third district of Iowa, resigning his position to become a member of a law firm in Dubuque. For about two years he was Assistant United States District Attorney for the northern division of the district of Iowa, which position he resigned in 1871.

For the last sixteen years he has served in Congress continuously, and almost from his first term has taken an active part in the business of the House. The most important piece of legislation with which Mr. Henderson has been specially associated in recent years is the Bankruptcy law, which he, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reported and carried through the House. He advocated the bill for the election of Senators by the people, and in debates on the Civil Service law he has been one of the strongest supporters on the floor of the House. His position on the money question is satisfactory to sound money men generally.

Mr. Henderson is personally popular among his colleagues in the House, irrespective of party, but he is a strong partisan, and his impulsive manners have frequently led him into hot, sharp clashes with his political opponents.

If Washington and in Iowa "Dave" Henderson, as he is known among his friends, is a noted and popular character—noted because of his oratorical gifts, his good nature, his love of humor and his love of song and of singing. Mr. Henderson possesses a voice of such power at to make itself heard in any chorus. As singing has been considered a social accomplishment, former Representative Warren B. Hooker, as very strong in wind but very weak in tune. But this may be a case of professional jealousy, for at any rate everybody is fond of hearing Mr. Henderson sing. It was he who led the chorus in the Doxology sung before the Speaker's chair at the close of the Fifty-first Congress, and his voice is in constant demand at social gatherings.

Traveled Incog.

President H. G. Burt, of the Union Bank of Rochester, has had a time-honored tactics of Haroun al Raschid last week, and took a trip incog. among his employes. He entered a baggage car at Clifton, Va., with the conductor of a flyer, and being introduced as a friend, rode 300 miles in the character of a bummer. He sat on a Saratoga, and handed cigars to the brakesmen, who, after 10 miles of his company, voted him the most agreeable person they had ever met on the road. From almost to Omaha before a chance official, getting on to ride to a station, discovered him. The smashers were then informed who they were, and they saw to whom they had been confiding their thoughts, especially as some of the conversations had touched on the dangers of the line, but President Burt put them all at their ease in a twinkling. His true character known, he rode to the next station in the caboose on a log trunk, talking railroad, and enjoying himself hugely. And when they reached their destination, he performed that job for which he was heading to the Governor of North Carolina, no gendeman would avoid.

WHY THE HORSE SHIES

Sensible Explanation of the Habits of Well-Known Animals.

Dr. Louis Robinson, an English zoologist, has just given to the world an account of the habits and mode of life of certain animals, and the conclusion at which he seems to arrive is that all such phenomena may be explained on the ground of atavism. Thus he claims that the horse of our day derives its swiftness not from the endurance from the fact that his ancestors in former days were obliged to flee from and frequently to defend themselves against their most cruel enemies—the wolves. In like manner he claims that the reason that the horse shies is because his ancestors were forced to be constantly on the alert against hidden enemies, and that the reason that he rears and plunges is evidence only by pursuing such tactics could his forefathers shake off wild animals who had leaped upon their backs.

Sheep when frightened immediately rush off to the highest point they can reach. The reason, says Dr. Robinson, is because all sheep originally inhabited mountainous districts. This, he claims, is also the reason why they wear a thick fleece of wool all the year through, the summer temperature in mountainous districts being almost as cold as that of winter. Finally, we are assured that the reason sheep invariably follow a leader is because their ancestors were obliged to go in Indian file through the narrow mountainous passes.

Dogs have also engaged Dr. Robinson's attention. He was puzzled for a long while as to the cause of their grunting, says the Chicago Times-Herald, but now he thinks he has discovered the real reason. The pigs of to-day, he says, evidently grunt because their ancestors made their home in thick woods, for such is the making this sound could they keep track of each other and guard themselves against going astray from the herd. In addition to furnishing us with a latter explanation, a scientist suggests that Dr. Robinson might now do well to spend some time in trying to find out why the horse neighs and why the dog barks.

Well-Dressed Man Arouses Sympathy

The generosity supposed to be hidden under the coarse garb of the ancient highwayman is sometimes present under the rags of his modern edition, the street tramp. A well-dressed man, who had just left the ferryhouse in New York after crossing the river, started to pick his way through the mud of the crossing at Cortlandt street, when his silk hat and his shining evening dress made him an obvious prey for the tattered dock bandit, who solemnly held up him with the usual piteous cry for help to get a night's lodging.

"My dear fellow," said the well-dressed man with a sudden burst of frankness, "I'm in my store clothes, but the fact is I've got to walk up town because I haven't a nickel to pay my car fare."

"Is that so?" said the other in an excited whisper. "Well, it ain't goin' to be said I left a pard in the lurch when he was up against it."

And putting his hand into his rags, he hauled up a bewildering heap of silver and offered anything the other wanted.

The "pard" burst into a shout of laughter and insisted on shaking hands with the stranger, who refused the nickel. And all through his trudge home he had plenty of food for thought, humorous and otherwise.

WANTS A UNITED CHURCH

REV MR. SHOTT STILL PREACHES ON SCOTCH PLAINS' MORALS.

He Blames Plainfield for the Rowdies Who Go There on the Trolley Cars to Drink, Carouse and Raise Disturbance.

Scotch Plains, N. J., August 28th—Rev. G. M. Shott continued Sunday morning his sermons along the line he has agitated for several months, calling for a higher moral and spiritual standard in the little village. Mr. Shott took as his text: "The Three-fold Mission of the Church."

At the latter end of it he took up the agitation against the lawlessness in the village, especially on Sundays, when, he says, "our neighbor pours into our little village, by way of the trolley, its castoffs and lawless element, whose only purpose in coming to Scotch Plains is to drink and carouse. If measures are not taken to stop the nuisance the day is not far distant when the town will be ruled by the rowdy element. God forbid that this day should come, but it has got so that people think they can get drunk on the Sabbath, shoot firearms in the street and commit other lawless depredations and not be arrested for it. Do I have any excuse to offer for my sermon this morning? Give me a solid church back of me and I will soon begin to see the streets of our town cleaned of its speak-easies, etc. If you want to become efficient in the work for the Master you must be developed. A sickly church has no more business bringing in weak converts to the Master than a consumptive mother has to bear consumptive children.

"Christ does not say he is with us because we are an organized church, but he says: 'Go ye into the whole world and preach the Gospel.' May God help us to take the sermon this morning and benefit by it."

AT THE HOSPITAL.

New Cases Admitted to the Community Sick Room.

Saveria Mitiliga, aged 40 years, an Italian residing at Westfield, was taken to the hospital Monday evening about 7:30 o'clock suffering from a badly lacerated wound on the left leg, caused, he said, by a wagon running over it. The accident happened in this city, but just where no one seems to know. He will be detained for sometime.

Christopher Hedemark, of Richmond street, who has been detained at the hospital for several weeks, the result of injuries received in falling off a scaffold, on South avenue, was discharged today, cured.

William Seals, the brakeman of the wrecked freight train at White House, yesterday morning, who is at the hospital suffering from injuries received, seems to be doing very well today, and unless other complications set in his recovery is assured.

A HELFFUL GOSPEL SERVICE.

A Delegation of Trinity Endeavorers Visited Mary E. Wilson Chapel.

One of the best Gospel services held at the Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel, Washingtonville, was that of last Sunday, when a party of thirty Christian Endeavorers from Trinity Reformed church attended the meeting. In addition to the visitors there was a large attendance of people living in the vicinity.

The meeting was conducted by F.E. Smith, who, after opening the service and making a few remarks, gave all present an opportunity to assist by the giving of testimony or offering prayer. A feature was the music which was in charge of Mr. VanWerda, a student in the Theological Seminary at Rutgers College, and his efforts resulted in a helpful and spirited service of song interspersing the testimony.

CUT ON BARB WIRE.

Gypsies' Horse Was Badly Injured But Christmas Will Cure It.

A horse owned by the band of gypsies encamped on South avenue, near Terrill road, met with an accident last week. The animal caught its leg in a barb wire fence and cut it badly. The animal was led to town and turned over to the police to be shot. Patsy Christmas, the contractor, saw the animal and believed that the wound could be healed and the horse used again. So the gypsies turned it over to Christmas and the animal was not shot after all.

WOMAN'S SUDDEN DEATH

THE WIDOW NANKIN FOUND DEAD ON THE FLOOR.

Discovery Made By One of Her Step children at Her Home on Carlton Avenue—Two Children Left Alone

Mrs. Theodore G. Nankin died suddenly at her home, 330 Carlton avenue, early Monday afternoon.

She was found by her little daughter lying upon the floor in an upper apartment.

The girl notified one of the neighbors, who hastily came to the house and attempted to revive the woman. Then Dr. Murray was notified, but the physician saw at a glance that the woman was beyond medical aid.

The police authorities were apprised of the death and Chief Grant visited the house about 2 o'clock. He then notified County Physician Westcott, who later examined Mrs. Nankin and decided that death was due to heart failure. Later the body was removed by Undertaker Runyon to the morgue.

The couple came to Plainfield from Canada several years ago, and for a time they formerly lived at 330 Richmond street, where her husband died about fifteen months ago of dropsy. Before coming to the states, Nankin had been a stock dealer, but he did not follow that occupation here because of ill health.

Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Nankin has had a struggle to support herself and children. But for the kindness of the members of the Park Avenue Baptist church she would have fared poorly.

Recently Mrs. Nankin has complained of not feeling well and yesterday went up stairs to rest after dinner, telling the children to keep quiet for a short time while she took a nap. About an hour afterwards one of the children had occasion to go up stairs and looking in the room was surprised to see her mother lying upon the floor near the bed. The children consist of a boy aged 13, and a girl of 11 years. Both were children of her husband by his first wife.

Until some of the relatives of the deceased can be notified the body will remain in charge of Undertaker Runyon.

Unless word is received from the woman's relatives or friends in Canada the body will be buried beside the side of her husband in Hillside Cemetery. In the meantime kind neighbors are looking after the orphaned children.

Good Sermon—Cordial Greetings

A large congregation attended Grace M. E. church in the borough, Sunday morning, among the number being many visitors from other churches whose places of worship were closed. The pastor, Rev. G. W. Gardner, delivered a most excellent sermon on "The Master Passions of This Life," taking as a text the fourth and fifth verses of the 37th Psalm. His exposition of the text was a strong and tender appeal for more consecration to God and the living of better lives by those who had given their hearts to Christ. His entire discourse was attentively listened to and greatly enjoyed by all, as was also the cordial greetings extended to strangers after the service by pastor and people.

Revival Meeting.

The W. C. T. U. held an old-time revival meeting in their rooms yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. There was a large and enthusiastic attendance and over twenty brief volunteer testimonies were given by those present among the audience. Many requests for prayer were made and some were of a pathetic character, among whom was a man addicted to the drink habit. Seely Edsall was leader of the meeting and will conduct the services there again next Sunday afternoon.

SEARCHING FOR A HERMIT'S CASH

Nephew of Bill Gould of Scotch Plains.

HEIR TO A SMALL FORTUNE.

RELATIVES OF JAY GOULD READS HIS UNCLE'S WILL.

The Gratitude of a Dying Man Who Bequeathes Mrs. Eva Brown Money for Nursing Him Back to Life—Search Being Made in This City for the Hordes Earnings of a Well Know Old Miser.

Scarcely any one is to be found in Scotch Plains and vicinity who doesn't remember William Gould, who lived away back of the Plains on a small farm. All the boys recall old "Bill" Gould. His face was as familiar as the frowsy little mule which was his constant companion when on a visit to the village. "Bill" was as eccentric as one could immage. Seated behind his mule, on a two-wheeled gig, the old man attracted more or less attention because of his quaint dress and unkempt appearance. He was tall, raw-boned and angular.

For more than thirty years "Bill" Gould led the life of a recluse. His farm of about seven acres was located on the New Providence road. He was of a reticent disposition and made but few friends. To those whom he made even the lest pertence of confidence he would tell but little. He had said that his early life was passed up in New York State.

Inquisitive neighbors, who occasionally had the temerity to pry into the old man's private affairs, were not infrequently snubbed. Gould admitted that he knew Jay Gould, and when pressed for an answer as to whether he was related to the distinguished financier, he would reply brusquely: "I suppose I be." The old man had sometimes spoken of Delaware county, N. Y., and many of his neighbors believed that he had at one time been associated with Jay Gould in the latter's early struggles. "Bill" Gould is thought to have been a second cousin of Jay Gould, and it is possible that they were brought up together in Delaware county. However, it is well known that Jay Gould lived near Roxbury, Delaware county, and that he attended the old academy at Fayetteville.

It was along in the early '70's that Gould secured the small plot of land that for a number of years he cultivated. He built a rude frame structure away up on the brow of the mountain, a lay most picturesque spot, which in after years came to be coveted by men of more advanced ideas of civilization than was possessed by the occupant.

When Gould had occasion to go to town to sell the products of his small farm he would invariably drive down from his moutain home behind the sure footed mule.

His old gray hat was generally pulled half way over his eyes, while creeping from beneath it long locks of iron gray hair protruded above his face, which was fringed by a heavy, bushy beard streaked with silver. He was truly a quaint looking character.

No one troubled him and he troubled no one. Along in 1890 Gould was taken sick, and but for the kind attention of Mrs. Eva Brown, a neighbor, he would have died alone in his crude home on the mountains. Mrs. Brown had missed the old man for several days and she thought it passing strange. Finally the good woman decided to investigate. The poor mule was found tied to a pole in the rear of the shanty. It was the strange conduct of the beast that at first led Mrs. Brown to think that all was not right at the old man's home.

With some difficulty Mrs. Brown finally succeeded in gaining admission to the interior of the house. What a sight met her gaze! Stretched upon a miserable apology for a bed she found the old man, sick unto death. Mrs. Brown immediately set to work to make him comfortable, and then looked after the mule, which was nearly starved, having had nothing to eat in several days.

Mrs. Brown set the squalled place to rights. Then for days she never ceased to administer to the unfortunate man's wants.

But the serious illness of the old man had told on his previously good conadtution and he was compelled to give up farming. From time to time efforts had been made by various persons to buy the Gould farm, but they always failed. Finally, in the summer of 1891, Ernest C. Kieb, of Fanwood, succeeded in purchasing the land, paying Gould $2,100 for it.

When the farm was sold Gould moved to the village of Scotch Plains, where he boarded with a well known family until the spring of 1898, when he died.

Not many months after Gould sold the farm he made his will. The instrument was drawn by Harry C. Runyon, of this city. Although it was always supposed that Gould was a poor man, it is now believed that he had accumulated considerable money. In the will Gould bequeathed $100 to Mrs. Eva Brown, the woman who had nursed him in his serious illness. The balance of his estate he divided equally between his two sisters, Miss Mahaley Gould, of Manchester, N. H., and Mrs. Lucy Morton, of Monson, Me.

The will was deposited in the First National Bank of this city, but was never admitted to probate, the relatives seemingly not thinking that the old man had any means.

It appears that after Gould had received the cash for the sale of his farm he went to New York and deposited the money in the Seamans' Bank, where it is also supposed he had made many deposits. Soon after making his will, however, the old man withdrew his money from the Seaman's Bank, but what he did with it is not definitely known. The fact that Gould had left any will or that he had made a deposit in the Seamans' Bank was not known until quite recently, and that was learned by mere accident.

It came about in this way: A. H. Morton, a son of Mrs. Lucy Morton, of Monson, Me., who lives in Chicago, where he is connected with the extensive establishment of Marshall Field & Company, had business in New York. One day Mr. Morton ran across a relative, who made inquiries regarding his eccentric uncle, and was told that he had died some years ago. The stranger, who had known the old man in his younger days, then informed the nephew that his uncle had been in the habit of making deposits in the Seamans' Bank in New York. He believed that he had money in one of the banks of Plainfield. A visit was paid to the Seamans' Bank, but Mr. Morton was told that his uncle had transferred his account to another bank.

Diligent search in New York threw no light upon the matter and Mr. Morton came to Plainfield to ascertain what he could regarding his deceased uncle's money. Accompanied by Mr. Runyon, Mr. Morton visited the First National Bank in this city last Saturday morning. There to his surprise he found the will, which was opened and read. But no cash was on deposit in the name of William Gould, and the bank officials said there never had been. The only thing Mr. Gould had placed in the custody of the bank was the will. It is believed that when Gould sold his farm and it was necessary to look up the original deed that he had then transferred what money he had in the Seamans' Bank to some other institution or else had concealed it about his personal effects, which he always kept in an old wooden box.

The matter has been placed in the hands of Attorney H. C. Runyon, who has been authorized by Mr. Morton, of Chicago, to make a diligent search for the missing cash. It is the belief of those who knew the habits of old "Bill" Gould that he had amassed quite a small fortune. His frugal, almost penurious characteristics, were known to every one and it is highly possible that he has horded upwards of $8,000 or $10,000. A thorough search is to be made at once among the old man's personal effects, which are still at the home of the family with whom he boarded previous to his death.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

COMING ATTRACTIONS FOR MUSIC HALL

Manager Maze Edwards Has a Fine Season.

MANY GOOD PLAYS BOOKED.

SOME OF THE LEADING ONES TO BE SEEN THIS WINTER.

Joe Jefferson Has Promised to Come—Also Mme. Modjeska—"The Christian," and "The Children Of The Ghetto" are Booked to Appear in Music Hall—Many Other Fine Attractions Promised

If there is one busy man in Plainfield today that individual is Manager Maze Edwards, of the Stillman Music Hall. It may appear an easy thing to direct operations in a theatre in a suburban city, but it isn't when the work is properly done. The theatrical season in Plainfield has practically just opened and Manager Edwards is an exceedingly busy man looking after all the details of his charge. This is third season that Mr. Edwards has been in charge of Music Hall and it promises to be an eminently successful one.

It is the intention of Manager Edwards to give the theatre going people of Plainfield two plays a week. All of the first-class plays are slow this season in booking their stands, but Mr. Edwards has been quite successful in securing the promise of a number of the best now on the American stage. Others will be booked if possible later in the season. Mr. Edwards believes that Plainfield will give him good support if he, in turn, gives them the best of the performances now on the stage. And that is just what he is going to do this season.

One of the first of the leading actors of the day is Joe Jefferson. He is now booked to appear in Plainfield in a dramatization of Dicken's "The Cricket and the Hearth." Mme. Modjeska, the world renowned emotional actress, will be here in one of her best selections.

Leiber and Co., the theatrical managers, have promised their two great attractions to Manager Edwards. One is "The Christian," which played to crowded houses in New York all last winter. It will be presented by a very strong cast. The other is "The Children of the Ghetto," that is to appear in New York this season and which is predicted to be one of the successes of the coming season.

Frohman's "The Little Minister" played to a large audience at Music Hall last season and made a great hit. The same company is booked for another appearance here this fall.

Last winter New York was over-run with different versions of Dumas' "Three Musketeers." Among the best was James O'Neil's "The Musketeer," which played for many weeks to large audiences. O'Neil and his New York company will appear in Music Hall as one of the strong attractions for the coming season.

Then there will be the great rival to "The Old Homestead," "Way Down East," which had such a successful run at the Manhattan Theatre. One of its successors at the Manhattan, "Mile Fifi," is also booked by Manager Edwards.

"The Heart of Maryland," with its famous bell ringing scene, in which Mrs. Leslie Carter made such a success, will be presented by a powerful cast, and will lose none of its effectiveness when presented on the local stage. There are a host of other well-known dramas on the list as well. The spectacular "Dan'l Boone," Stetson's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Fred Miller's American opera, "Davy Jones," "Blue Jeans," and many others are now booked to appear.

Several of Lincoln J. Carter's superbly staged dramas will come to Plainfield. Wm. Barrie will appear in his father's new play, "The Rising Generation." A successful southern drama, "The Knobs of Tennessee," has been booked.

Washburn's Minstrels are coming again. So is John W. Vogel's Afro-American troupe. Thursday night John W. Isham's Famous Octoroons open in Music Hall with Belle Davis, of Hammerstein fame, as one of the stars.

Repertoire companies will be few and far between this season. The Borroughs Company and three other equally good ones are all that Manager has booked. Altogether he has a decidedly satisfactory lot of attractions for the fall and winter, which gives promise of many a pleasant evening's entertainment for the many theatregoers of Plainfield and vicinity.

GOLF WINS ADHERANTS FROM OTHER SPORTS.

Football This Fall Will Suffer Accordingly.

PLAINFIELD'S PROSPECTS.

WILL UNDOUBTEDLY BE REPRESENTED ON THE GRIDIRON.

Many of the Young Men Who Played Football in Past Years Are Now Enthusiastic Golfers and Will Give Up the Old Game—Several Teams Likely to Play Here During the Fall—No Announcement Yet.

Undoubtedly there will be a football team of prominence in Plainfield this fall but it also is certain the team will be greatly handicapped by the general interest in golf. Last season was really the first when any general interest was taken in the royal game of golf. The game did not become general in popularity until this year. Last fall it was confined to a few who never had anything to do with football. In the fall months football became the only outdoor sport that attracted general attention. This year golf promises to rival it in the popular eye and thereby considerably handicap the local teams.

Most of the young men who, in past seasons, have taken an active part in football, are new members of the Hillside and Park Clubs. Their Saturday afternoon's when at home have been spent on the links of those two clubs and they have taken part in the various competitions and club matches. September, October and sometimes, November are the favorite months for play of the golfers.

When the football season comes the golfers will have to decide whether to return to their old love or remain with the new favorite sport. Football will undoubtedly suffer as a result. It has always been hard to get the boys out for practice and this year, under these circumstances, it will be doubly so.

No announcement has been made as yet regarding the fall plans of the local teams. It was thought that last year saw the end of the Plainfield A. A. team which has represented Plainfield so successfully on the gridiron for the past five years. Some of the well-known players have left town, others are firm in their determination to quit the game for good and then golf has won some adherants from that class. There will be a nucleus of veterans around which some of the younger set may gather to form a strong combination. The advisability of reviving the old team is being considered and a decision may be speedily looked for.

The crack Alls team will probably be on the field again this season, Roy T. Phillips, captain and manager, is quietly looking over the young men of the town for proper material to fill in the vacancies in the old eleven. The team will play without doubt, but its season may be confined to holiday games.

Then there is the Alls second, of which Harold Phillips is captain and manager. Most of the boys that played on it are working in New York now and Captain Phillips may have some trouble in getting his players together for practice or for Saturday afternoon games.

A LARGER DINING HALL.

IMPROVEMENTS TO BE MADE AT HOTEL KENSINGTON.

An Annex to be Built for the Kitchen and the Capacity of Dining-room Doubled—A Grill Room Also to be Established.

When J. A. Staats remodeled and opened the Hotel Kensington he did not anticipate such a liberal patronage as has been accorded him, and as a result he now finds his accommodations too limited to handle the trade in a manner satisfactory to him.

His dining-room has become very popular, owing to the excellence of the cuisine and service, and at nearly every meal the accommodation of the room is taxed to the full extent. Mr. Staats has found it necessary to devise plans for the enlargement of the dining-room and in a few days he will commence improvements that will give him more space in this direction.

An annex will be built on to the rear of the hotel, where the kitchen will be located. And where the kitchen is now established will be utilized in extending the dining-room the full length of the house, just doubling its present capacity. The present partition will be removed and the new section will be modeled and decorated in conformity to the present room in front. When finished it will be one of the prettiest in the State.

Mr. Staats also contemplates establishing a grill room in connection with his house, where gentlemen may go for chops, steaks, etc., without coming in contact with the guests at the regular meals. This feature he proposes to keep open all day and late into the night.

David W. Rogers, of West Second street, who has been confined to his home helpless with rheumatism, is now slowly recovering and hopes to be out again in a short time.

SALE OF CEMETERY TO BE GONE AHEAD WITH Purchaser is Entitled to Its Use for Thirty Years.

HE CAN EVEN BUILD ON IT.

THE ASSESSMENT CAN BE ENFORCED BECAUSE IT IS SPECIAL.

If the Delinquent Assesment of $210 is Not Paid by September 1st, It Will be Advertised for One Month and Then Sold to the One Who is Willing to Pay the Highest Price for It.

Regarding the fact that Mayor Smalley and the Borough Council have issued a warrant on Collector George F. Brown commanding him to advertise and sell all real estate on which the assessment for the opening of Watchung avenue remains unpaid, and in view of the fact that the Presbyterian Cemetery on Chatham street is included in that property, there has been a great deal of criticism concerning the action of the officials in announcing the intended sale if the assessment of $210 is not paid.

The fact is, however, that Collector Brown will advertise and sell that property if the assessment is not paid, to any person or corporation who will take it for a term of years not exceeding thirty years, and will pay the assessment. It then becomes the property of the person buying it and he may use it for pasturing cows and horses or if he choses he can build thereon, and no one can deny him the privilege so long as he holds the property according to the provisions under which he purchases it.

The legal status of the subject is that the matter does not come under the general taxation laws, as the assessment is levied for the improvement and opening of a street in close proximity. The laws holds that it is a benefit to the property to have a new street opened near the property, thus affording easy access, and it is considered in the same light as the laying of a stone sidewalk or curbing where an assessment would be made to pay for the work.

If the cemetery association has not funds to pay the assessment they probably have the right to levy an assessment on all property owners holding lots in the cemetery and thus secure the necessary money.

It is even a question as to whether the cemetery association in this particular case was organized under the law granting to them exemption from general taxation. This latter will be looked into. If the cemetery association was omitted from those assessed for the opening and improvement of Watchung avenue there would have been a storm raised, because all property affected was not included, and such a report could not have been submitted. According to the best of legal authority there is no good and sufficient reason why the cemetery in this case should be exempt from paying the $210 assessed, and if the amount is not paid by Sept. 1st the property will be advertised and sold during the first week in October. If an individual buys it in the cemetery association will, under the law, have two years in which they can secure control of it. If advantage is not taken of that law the owner can keep the property for the balance of the twenty-eight years, making use of it, unless he is willing to pass it back to the association.

A CYCLONE OF MUSIC.

Salvationists to Sing One Hundred Choruses Without Stopping.

What promises to be one of the most novel of services will take place at the Salvation Army hall on Front street next Thursday night. It is to be called a cyclone of music. Assisted by the soldiers, the officers in charge are going to sing 100 different choruses and ten solos without stopping. This is a feat of endurance in singing without a parallel, never having been done here or elsewhere. This will of course mean the breaking of the record for long distance singing. The captain says he is ready for the ordeal.

Grocers' Excursion.

The last, one of the best and the cheapest excursion from the city will go next Monday, Labor Day, and will be conducted by the Plainfield Grocers' Association. They will go to South Beach. The first section will leave Plainfield at 8 a. m.; the second section will leave Dunellen at the same hour, stopping at Clinton avenue and Grant avenue and Plainfield. Returning, the first section will leave the beach at 6 o'clock and the second at 9 o'clock. From this city the fare will be 75 cents for adults and 50 cents for children.

HEAVY TRAINS CRASH NEAR WHITEHOUSE.

Serious Rear End Collision on the Jersey Central.

TWO MEN SERIOUSLY HURT.

FIFTY FREIGHT AND COAL CARS WERE OVERTURNED AND DERAILED.

Freight Train Broke in Two at Water Tank at Whitehouse and Loaded Coal and Freight Train Came Down Mountain Grade Too Fast to be Stopped —Traffic Delayed for Eighteen Hours.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Whitehouse, Aug. 28—On the long curve half a mile west of the Whitehouse station of the Jersey Central Railroad, an eastbound train of sixty heavily-loaded freight and coal cars crashed into the rear of another freight train at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Fifty cars were heaped up on the tracks or rolled down the embankment into the ditch fifty feet below. Engineer Andrew Youngblood jumped for his life and was badly injured. Brakesman R. Seales was crushed between two cars and now lies at the Muhlenberg Hospital, Plainfield, in a precarious condition.

The wreck was the worst that has occurred on the lines of the Jersey Central for many years, and despite the efforts of the wrecking crews, the road was not reopened to traffic for eighteen hours after the crash came.

It was raining hard when the regular freight train, scheduled as No. 422 and bound from Mauch Chunk to Jersey City, stopped at the water tank, just west of the station. The train was drawn by locomotive No. 423, Engineer Hartsell, of Jersey City, and was under the charge of Conductor Moynihan, of Jersey City. After taking water, Engineer Hartsell started ahead, having called in his rear flagman.

A broken coupling caused some twenty cars to be left behind. The locomotive returned for the cars and the crew was preparing to put in a new coupling when the second train appeared around the curve, coming at a terrific speed.

The second train was an extra, drawn by one of the large "hog" engines of the new pattern, No. 433. The engineer was Andrew Youngblood, of Jersey City. He had two fireman with him. The conductor was Wm. Van Arsdale, of Jersey City. They were two brakemen. The heavy train was coming down the steep grade at a terrific pace. The rails were slippery and the train was beyond control. When Engineer Youngblood saw the lights on the caboose of the other train as he rounded the curve, he whistled down brakes, put on the air brakes and reversed the the engine. But it was too late. The momentum of the train was too great and the crash came an instant later. Youngblood yelled to his firemen and sprang out of the cab. Striking the ground, he bounded into the air and finally landed against a fence 100 feet away. The firemen also jumped. Youngblood was badly cut and bruised about the head and shoulders. One of the firemen was unconscious when picked up. He suffered severe injuries about the head and was taken to a hospital in South Bethlehem. The other fireman escaped with slight bruises.

The heavy locomotive crashed through the caboose and the rear cars of the first train, wrecking ten of them. The locomotive was so wedged in the mass of wreckage that it could not fall over. The tender went over the enbankment after telescoping several cars. Then the freight cars and coal gondolas of the second train, to the number of forty, heaped up in two great piles. Some fell over the embankment. Many of the cars were smashed into kindling-wood and the coal strewn over the tracks. Both tracks were torn up for a distance of several hundred feet.

The wreckage caught fire at once and was partly destroyed before the bucket brigade, formed by the railroad men, could extinguish it.

Richard Seales, of Phillipsburg, one of the brakemen of the moving train, was caught between two cars and badly injured. He was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital, Plainfield.

A very narrow escape was that of John Layton, of Plainfield, who is employed as night engineer at the pumping station. He also acts as flagman. He was standing by the caboose when the headlight of the second train was seen rounding the curve. He sprang out and hurried to the little flagman's shanty, close by the track, to save his valuables. Before he could leave it, one of the cars struck the shanty and threw it fifty feet into the field. The stove inside fell on Layton, but he escaped with sundry bruises and cuts. Had any of the wreckage fallen on the shanty, he would have been surely crushed to death.

News of the wreck was sent to Jersey City and Phillipsburg. Four wrecking trains arrived at the scene of the wreck an hour after it happened and worked steadily until 6 o'clock last evening, when the westbound track was opened. Two hours later the first eastbound train passed through Whitehouse. Trainmaster J. T. Olhausen was on the scene in charge of the operations. Jack Gaffney, of Plainfield, was the operator at the special railroad telegraph office established at the scene of the wreck.

Traffic was at a complete standstill over the main line of the Central west of Bound Brook. The morning trains came as far as Whitehouse and then backed down to Bound Brook where they went over the Lehigh Valley Railroad. The paper train went over the Lehigh Valley and was stalled by a washout.

From early morning to sundown the wreck was visited by several thousand people.

TAX RATE INCREASED FOURTEEN POINTS.

Board of Assessors Have Completed Their Work.

NEW CITY TAX WILL BE $2.56.

INCREASE IN COST OF SEWERS, STREETS AND FIRE DEPARTMENT.

County Tax is Two Points Higher—Library Trustees and Board of Education Want Additional Funds—Detailed Comparison of Old and New Tax Rates—Reasons Given for the Various Items Increased.

The tax rate in the city of Plainfield has been fixed for the coming year. It will be $2.56 on a hundred, fourteen points higher than the present rate This increase can be accounted for by an increase in the cost of the maintenance of the public schools, the fire department, the city streets and sewers, improvements at the public library and a higher county expenditure.

The items of the new tax rate as compared with those of the present one are as follows:

	99-99.	99-1900.
County	.52	.54
State schools	.28	.28
Free public school	.39	.52
Library	.04	.07
City and city lights	.60	.64
Poor	.08	.05
Interest on bonds and bonds	.61	.58
Principal on sewer bonds	.05	.85
Interest on sewer obligations	.06	.06
	2.42	2.56

The county tax is beyond the pale of the city government. It is fixed by the expenditures of the County Board of Freeholders. The increase in the fire department is the result of the adoption of the call system. One of the arguments advanced in its favor was that while it would increase the actual cost of the department over that of the old volunteer system the cost would be more than covered in time by taxes on property that would otherwise be exempt.

The rise in the library tax amounts to three points. The extra funds were demanded by the library trustees to put in a new heating and lighting system and pay the increased expenses of the enlarged library.

There is an increase of four points in the city and city lights tax. Two points are needed to pay for the repairs to the sewer system on Richmond street and a slight increase in the cost of maintenance. The other two provide for extra money to be expended on the streets.

The Board of Education decided that more funds were needed to pay for the repairs to the Whittier School and the increase in the school system by the addition of several new classes to relieve the overcrowding of certain departments. The school tax is raised three points.

The total increase is fourteen points, making the tax rate $2.56, the highest on record in the city of Plainfield.

RAPIDRUNOF MARRIAGES

MATRIMONAL BREEZE SLEW STRONG IN THE BOROUGH.

Three Couples Seek the Ministerial Services of Rev. G. W. Gardner in Order to be Made as One.

The fact that strong matrimonial breezes were blowing in the borough Saturday evening was evidenced by a trio of weddings at Grace Methodist Episcopal parsonage between the hours of 8 and 9:45, when Rev. G. W. Gardner united in the bonds of wedlock six young lives.

The first happy pair desiring to be "made one" were LeRoy DeCamp, of 13 Harmony street, and Miss Clara Holcomb, of 45 Mountain avenue. They were married at 8 o'clock.

Clarence William Willmot, of 9 Grant avenue and Miss Florence May Clarinden, of the same street and number, next asked for the services of the pastor, and received the sanction of the church and State to their union at 8:45.

At 9:30 Frank Randolph Bastelman, of Avondale, N. J., and Miss Phebe May Osborn, of Washingtonville, N. J., attended by John C. Osborn and Mrs. J. Arthur Harrold, brother and sister of the bridge, were admitted to the parlors of the new parsonage, and Pastor Gardner instinctively felt that the nuptial breezes were still blowing his way. This surmise proved to be correct, and these, too, received his good offices and best wishes at 9:45 o'clock.

DRYDEN NOW LEADS FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP.

Made Low Score At Park Golf Club Saturday.

ANDERSON IN HARD LUCK

MADE NINETY-EIGHT DESPITE LOSS OF THREE BALLS.

Anderson Was Second In Saturday's Competition—Third Honors Divided Between W. R. Faber and H. D. Hibberd—Dryden Has Most Points for Trophy With Anderson Second and CooleyThird—a Poor Day.

There was a general shakeup among the leading competitors for the Mrs. C. W. McCutchen Cup at the Park Golf Club course, Saturday afternoon. As a result of the play of Saturday Meredith Dryden, the club secretary, took the lead with W. de la R. Anderson, club champion, second, while Gifford W. Cooley, who has been in the lead for sometime, fell back to third place. The honors for the day's play went to Dryden whose net score was down at 91.

With threatening clouds at every hand, the day was not by any means an ideal one for golf. Those who did venture out prepared to brave the rain that appeared imminent. It didn't come, however, and the golfers played without hinderance.

The attendance was fair and a few ladies were present. Most of those who turned out were competing for the trophy. Seven scores were handed in and several others entered for the tournament but failed to pass in their score cards.

Dryden played during the morning and made the best he has done yet in the tournament play. He completed the eighteen holes in 108 which, minus his handicap of 17, gave him a net score of 91, which was lowest for the day. Another week will probably see him playing with a lower handicap.

Anderson and W. J. R. Thiers made their two rounds together. Anderson was up against hard luck. Three balls managed to loose themselves for him despite his efforts and those of his caddy. Six extra strokes were consequently counted against him. Even under these circumstances he managed to keep his score down to 98, which gave him second for the day's play.

Gifford W. Cooley was way off his usual form and did no better than 127, which will not help him any in the contest for points. Charles E. Faber, who played round with Charles Dupee, ran against hard luck all the way and met with sundry adventures in the various hazards. His gross score was 131. Dupee did the eighteen holes in 122, but did not enter for the trophy. He has been allotted no handicap as yet.

W. R. Faber tied for third honor with H. D. Hibbard, with a net score of 101. It was the first time that Faber played for the trophy as he plays in the tournament very seldom. The Townsends, V. F. Green, the champion whist team and other candidates for trophy honors were absent.

As a result of the finish of Saturday Meredith Dryden is now in the lead, he having scored 10½ points for the cup. W. de la R. Anderson is second with 9½ points. Last week they were tied for second place. Gifford W. Cooley, who has been in the lead for the past month, fell back to third place with eight points. C. E. Faber remains fourth. There was no other change in the order except that H. D. Hibbard moved from eighth place to seventh, where he is now tied with E. Douglass, with 3½ points each. W. R. Faber scored half a point as a result of tying for third place.

The scores handed in for the McCutchen Cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Meredith Dryden	108	17	91
W. de la R. Anderson	98	7	98
W. R. Faber	131	28	101
H. D. Hibbard	119	18	101
Charles E. Faber	131	24	107
Gifford W. Cooley	127	9	118

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

Meredith Dryden	10½
W. de la R. Anderson	9½
Gifford W. Cooley	8
Charles E. Faber	7
H. D. Hibbard	3½
Samuel Townsend	4½
H. D. Douglass	3½
H. D. Hibbard	3½
C. E. Rogers	2
Arthur Peck	2
Frank Taylor	2
S. S. Squires	2
Wm. A. Townsend	2
W. R. Faber	½
Volney F. Green	2
W. J. R. Thiers	1
Fred S. Overton	1
Clarence S. Bowne	1
Augustus Van Deventer	1
J. McCutchen	1
W. R. F. Taylor	1

Miss Daisy Elaberg was the only competitor to hand in her score for the Buttfield Cup. She played the necessary nine holes in the morning, making the round in 65. Her handicap is 18, giving her a net score of 67.

A Benefit Public Debate.

A public debate will be held by the Bidgedale Debating Society, of this city, Thursday evening for the benefit of the Calvary Baptist church. The subject will be, "Which is the More Disastrous, Fire or Water?" J. A. Scott and Joseph Bolden will look after the water side of the question, while W. S. Jenkins and T. J. Banks will speak for the other side.

FAST AMATEURS IN FIFTEEN-MILE RACE

G. H. Kenyon's Cycle Race Was a Successful Contest.

THIRTEEN RIDERS STARTED.

ONLY SEVEN FINISHED AND SE CURED A PLACE.

The Road Was in Good Condition as Some Very Good Time Was Made—One Rider Disqualified—Time Prize Won by Jack Townsend—First Over the Course Was Arthur Chapin.

G. H. Kenyon's fifteen-mile road race was run off Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, and attracted about two hundred enthusiastic cyclists. The race was over the Plainfield-Pumptown course. Although the weather was threatening it was ideal for a race. The start was made a short distance this side of Randolph road. There were twenty-two entries, including some of the best riders in this vicinity.

It was 4:16 o'clock when the race started and a few minutes all were off. The course was from the place of starting to Pumtown, back to Campbell's Roadhouse, to Pumtown again, and back to place of starting. There were thirteen who started, but only seven came in and secured a place and time, the rest either being too far behind or not completing the race. The road was in a good condition.

A. Neale Ransom, of this city, came in ahead of some of the scratch men. It was doubted if he completed the course. He was questioned and refused to say one way or the other. In consequence a protest was entered and he was disqualified by the judges.

Jack Townsend, of Cranford, came in third, but won the time prize, a White sewing machine. He was scratch man, and made the course in 42:32, while Peter Sims, colored, of this city, also scratch, was close behind him and finished only a second later, winning the second prize, a pair of Hartford tires. The first prize, Palmer tires, was won by Arthur Chapin, of Scotch Plains, who came in first making the course in 42:42, his handicap being 2½ minutes. The winner of the third prize, a Deitz lamp, was Charles Hummer, who finished a half second later, with a handicap of 2½ minutes. Charles R. Poole, of this city, who was scratch man, finished in 43:34 and won the last prize, a Brown racing saddle. J. W. James, scratch, finished in 46:55 and Joseph Burke, with a handicap of 1½ minutes, finished in 48:25, but neither won a prize.

G. H. Kenyon was manager of the race. L. S. Pocock and Frank J. Blatz were the times. The scorers were F. R. Stevens, Nathan Titsworth and Harry K. Lister. The clerks of the course were George Gould and R. A. Meeker.

ACTIVITY IN REAL ESTATE.

Residential Changes That Have Taken Place Recently.

Despite the fact that the summer has been a quiet one there has been a great deal of activity in real estate and property changes, and E. C. Mulford & Son, the well-known real estate brokers, of North avenue, have been kept very busy. A partial list of the residential changes effected through their agency is as follows: Mrs. Josephine Minor, of this city, has purchased Manning & Runyon's handsome new house on Belvidere avenue, Netherwood; James M. Derby has rented the property at 94 Grove street, and A. P. Ives, of Malden, Mass., has rented Wm. Bohl's new house on Kensington avenue. Miss Mary Brown, of East Fourth street, has leased H. H. Moore's house on Washington avenue near Front street. Lawyer Winfield S. Angleman has leased E. B. Clark's house corner of Waynewood place and West Front street. N. E. Lewis has rented the house at the corner of West Sixth street and Lee place, and H. Crowe, of New York, has taken Mrs. Green's house 916 Park avenue, F. L. Morse, of the New Jersey Central Railroad Company, has rented Henry Leifke's new house corner of West Front street and Grant avenue, and A. F. Power, of New York, has leased C. M. Thorpe's house on Belvidere avenue, Netherwood. All of the above parties will take possession September 1st, excepting Mr. Power, who takes possession October 1st. Mr. MacPherson, of Crosby & Hill's store, has leased the property at 431 East Fifth street, and takes possession September 1st.

Red Men's Local Time.

After the business was transacted at Misanonomoh Tribe of Red Men last evening an entertainment of an informal nature was held. There were songs by Brothers Bedford, Stiglitz and Perry, and short talks by Brothers Magee, Whiteley, Leahy, Westphal, Newcorn and Allen. Ice cream and cigars followed. An invitation was received to attend the entertainment to be held in South Plainfield Tuesday evening in the interests of a proposed tribe there.

MANY DOUBT STORY OF REED'S WITHDRAWL

Believe Him Still a Candidate for State Senator.

CHIEF RIVAL IS GEO. DILTS.

EVEN OPPONENTS ADMIT REED IS LIKELY TO GET IT.

Somerset G. O. P. Men Believe He Will be Renominated if Gen. Sewell Does Not Interfere—Thompson Faction Declares That Once Nominated, He Will be Surely Defeated—Cooper for Assembly Seat.

Although the report was generally circulated that General Sewell had settled the present troubles of the Republican party in Somerset county by a virtual request to Senator Chas. A. Reed to withdraw from the contest for re-election to the State Senate, there are many in Somerset county who do not give credence to the story. In their minds the question of leadership in the G. O. P. in Somerset is still unsettled. They believe that the two factions led respectively by Lewis A. Thompson and Senator Chas. A. Reed will meet in the county convention this fall and furnish a lively time.

There are only two important county offices to be filled at the election in November. A Senator will be chosen to succeed Senator A. Reed, of North Plainfield, to represent Somerset in the higher branch of the State Legislature and an Assemblyman will be elected to succeed Edward E Cooper, of Warren. In both cases the present ncumbent is a candidate for renomination by the Republican party.

For two years the rivalry between the Thompson and Reed factions has continued with varying results. Last year Senator Reed was successful in getting Assemblyman VanDoren, of Somerville, nominated for sheriff only to see him defeated at the polls, the result, it was alleged, of the efforts of the rival faction.

If the story of the interference of Geo. Sewell is not true, and many of the prominent Republican politicians of the county do not credit it, the general opinion seems to be that Senator Reed will be nominated. The friends of Mr. Thompson are positive, however, that once nominated, he will be as badly defeated as Van Doren was.

The truth of the matter is that many of the opponents of Senator Reed profess a disire to see him nominated. His nomination they declare, means a certain defeat and consequent step into the back ground in county politics.

If Senator Sewell interferes, they claim that it will result in Mr. Reed posing in the light of a political martyr and enable him to still dispute the title of leader with Thompson.

The explanation given for Gen. Sewell's interference is that he will need a Republican Senator from Somerset to assure his election to the United States Senate, and he will insist on Mr. Thompson's candidate being nominated.

The name mentioned for the Senatorial nomination by the Thompson faction is that of George Dilts, of Somerville. He was formerly Assemblyman and afterwards Sheriff.

Cooper will undoubtedly be renominated to the Assembly. He has had one term there, and, while he has done nothing to particularly distinguish himself, he has a good record. It is customary to give each Assemblyman a second term, unless his record is particularly unfortunate. So there seems little doubt but that Cooper will be sent to represent Somerset for another term in the Lower House of the State Legislature.

A Defective Sidewalk.

There is a defective sidewalk on the west side of Somerset street, extending across the county line. The walk is early in need of repair and in its present condition is dangerous. Whether it is the duty of the officials of this city or those of the borough to repair the walk is not known; but it should be attended to at once. Should an accident occur it is believed that a good cause for damages would result. Last night a women slipped into one of the excavations, which time has made in the concrete pavement of which the walk is composed, and was thrown down. Fortunately the woman did not sprain her ankle, though she was slightly hurt.

Death of a Little Fellow.

Word has been received in this city from Belleport, L. I., telling of the sudden death of Ashley Randolph Grace, aged 3 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Ashely Grace, of this city. The family has been spending the summer at the above place, and the news of the death of this bright little fellow will be a shock to all who knew him. No particulars of the death have been received.

A Slugging Match.

Two young men engaged in a lively slugging match on East Second street Saturday evening. One of the men, who was badly used up, rushed into Justice Nash's office for a warrant for his antagonist, but it was refused.

WITNESS OF KILLING IDENTIFIES MURDERER.

Lisbon Pierson, of New Market, Sees William Darling.

STORY OF THE SHOOTING.

COLORED MAN AN IMPORTANT WITNESS FOR PROSECUTION.

He Witnessed the Fatality and Heard the Words That Led up to it—Darling and Pierson Did Not Speak to Each Other—Murderer is Taking Life in Jail as Easy as it is Possible for Him.

Lisbon Pierson, of New Market, visited the Middlesex County Jail Wednesday and identified William Darling as the man who shot and killed Harry Dunham at that place four years ago. Pierson, who is a highly respected colored resident of New Market, was brought to New Brunswick by Detective John R. Ferguson. Pierson says that he witnessed the shooting. In conversation with a Home News reporter Pierson said.

"The shooting took place in the pool room of the Lake House, at New Market, which was then owned by a Mr. Danz, who has since died. In the room at the time of the shooting besides myself, were Edwin Mitchell and Peter Campbell. Campbell has also died since the affray happened.

"Dunham, the man who was shot, Mitchell and myself were sitting in the pool room talking when Darling came in and asked us to shoot a game of pool. The three played a game and Mitchell won out. I did not play. Darling and Dunham played the game off and Darling got stuck. More games were played and in each case Darling was beaten. After we had something to drink Darling, Mitchell and Dunham had another game of pool and again Darling was stuck.

"Darling then challenged Dunham to play with him alone. Dunham played him two games and beat him both games. Then Darling challenged Dunham to play for $1 a corner. Dunham did not want to play for money, but finally agreed to play for 25 cents a corner. Darling then stepped out for a minute and returned. When he did a coversation arose over how long the men had known each other. Darling said to Dunham that he had known him ever since he (Dunham) was knee-high to a grasshopper. Dunham replied that he had known Darling before he was born. Dunham took offence at the remark and said to Dunham:

"'Do you mean that, Dunham?'

"'Why, certainly,' answered Dunham.

"'Well, you take that back, Dunham, or you are a dead man,' said Darling, who was then becoming quite angry."

"'Not today, I won't take that back,' replied Dunham.

"As Dunham said that Darling whipped a pistol from behind his back and fired a shot at Dunham, who was standing up, leaning against the wall in the pool room. The thing happened so suddenly that we all became afraid and began to make a break for the doors. I started to run for the door and before I got there another shot rang out. I saw Dunham topple over and drop, but did not stop, as things were getting to warm. I ran out of the building.

"Upon returning I found Dunham lying upon the sofa and called him, but received no answer. He was not yet dead, but passed away twenty minutes afterward. A physician had called, but nothing could be done for Dunham.

"I did not see what became of Darling, but people who were in the bar room said that he passed through there and jumped on a bicycle, which he had outside, and started off. Charles Day, who was near, started on a wheel in pursuit toward Bound Brook, but he could not find Darling. That is all I know of the shooting."

Pierson did not have anything to say to Darling when he saw him in jail, but merely took a good look at the prisoner while Mr. Ferguson talked with him. Pierson says that Darling had side-whiskers when he saw him last, which was when the shooting took place, but remembers him by his hair, which is black, thick and rather curly. Darling did not have anything to say to Pierson. Pierson said that Darling and Dunham had been friends ever since childhood almost, they having worked in Potter's Printing Works together.

Darling keeps as quiet as ever and seems fairly contented. He is locked up in the murderer's cell while the other prisoners are in the corridor and let out when they are kept in their cells. His father has called on him and furnished him with small sums of money at times, which Darling uses for getting extra dishes and such things. Darling wrote yesterday to his counsel to get some more money for him.

Fixing Up the Bridge.

LAST TROLLEY LINK ON PRIVATE PROPERTY.

Right of Way Between Scotch Plains and Westfield.

ROUTE THAT IS PLANNED.

NEW EIGHTY FOOT WIDE BOULEVARD TO BE OPENED.

Private Right of Way Runs Through the Property Owned by J. G. Cook, Mrs. Warren Ackerman and Dr. J Ackerman Coles, Commencing at Westfield Avenue and Westfield Road.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Scotch Plains, August 21.—The efforts which the trolley people have made for several months to form a connecting link between this borough and Westfield are about to result in something more tangible than mere newspaper talk. It was found almost impossible to obtain the consent of property owners along the highway between here and Westfield. The gentlemen interested in the trolley road have found a way out of their difficulty.

They now propose building the trolley line over private propery. Through the efforts of Col. Hine and others a new route has been secured. The promoters have been successful in buying from J. G. Cook, Mrs. Warren Ackerman, Dr. J. A. Cole and others a sufficient amount of land to secure the right of way for the road.

The new route starts from the junction of *Westfield avenue and West*field road and runs through the property of J. G. Cook, opening up a boulevard 80 feet wide. It then crosses the Sheelan track of land cutting through the Osborn farm to the junction of Jerusalem and the Morse roads into Fanwood township. From the Jerusalem road the route will extend to Brightwood avenue, to Prospect street and again over a private right of way to the head of Elm street in Westfield, to which point the road bed is at present constructed.

This route is said to be somewhat shorter than the one proposed over the highway between Scotch Plains and Westfield.

While the entire right of way over the private property has not yet been fully secured a sufficient guarantee has been given that no obstacle will be placed in the way of building the road over the new route.

Col. Hine and H. C. VanEmburgh, the civil engineer of the road, were at Scotch Plains yesterday. They went over the route and it was surveyed and the stakes driven. The work of building the road will be begun at once, the legal formalities having been arranged for. It is expected that the road will be in operation by October 1st.

When this road is completed it will give a through trolley line from New Brunswick to Cranford, and eventually to Elizabeth. Work upon that end of the line is at present under way.

Silk Business Booming.

Stirling, August 25.—Work is progressing rapidly on the new silk mill at this place being erected by Mr. Streuli, and it is expected to have the building completed by October 1st. There is much activity in the silk business and the three hundred looms in the mill are run on full time. When the new mill is completed and thorough equipped with new machinery the capacity will about equal the demand for silks.

Laying New Depot Platform.

The work of laying a concrete platform at the North avenue station was begun Saturday by the Central Railroad Company. The wooden planks are to be removed and concrete laid from the track to the stone flagging.

COLD PLACE IN TOWN.

COLD STORAGE HOUSE OF PLAINFIELD BEEF COMPANY.

Addition to It Just Completed—A Well Equipped Establishment—Everything is Clean and in the Best of Order.

Think of it. Only five minutes' walk from the North Avenue station there is a place where the thermometer just hovers over the freezing point these August days. Men work there in heavy overcoats and feel thankful that that they have them while the rest of humanity is sweltering under the tropic rays of the noon sun. The pace of this uncasanable cold is the cold storage house of the Plainfield Beef Company, which represents the Swifts in Plainfield.

An addition to this rather remarkable place has just been finished and makes the establishment one of the most perfect and complete of its kind outside of the very large cities.

The Plainfield Beef Company has its headquarters on East Third street, near Washington street. It is a substantial brick structure of two stories. The lower floor is devoted to the stor*age of meat with the offices in front.* The walls are very thick and lined with felt and paper to keep the interior temperature even. A regular system of overhead track carry the little wheeled trucks to which the meat is hung and enable it to be easily moved about. Every week in the neighborhood of 50,000 pounds of meat is received and disposed of among the local butchers. The temperature in this room always remains at about 38 degrees above.

The second floor is devoted to the cooling room where two hundred tons of ice is stored, accounting for the low temperature below. Every two weeks the room is replenished with ice.

The addition just completed is a provision room where canned goods, bacon and sausage are stored. The temperature there is kept at 60 degrees. The whole place is kept as clean as soap and water can make it and everything has its proper place. H. S. Taylor is manager of the receiving and sales departments while Arthur A. Cannon has charge of the books and accounts. Each is responsible alone to the head of his department in the Swift Company.

SPEEDWAY IS PROBABLE

PROJECT TO WIDEN WOODLAND AVENUE TO 110 FEET.

The Idea is to Add 50 Feet on Westerly Side of Present Street, Leaving Row of Trees in Middle to Divide Thoroughfare.

After several year's of agitation among the horsemen in this vicinity for the building of a speedway there is a project on fact now that is likely to develope such a feature into reality.

The plan is to widen Woodland avenue from sixty to 110 feet. James E. Martine, who owns a great deal of property skirting one side of that thoroughfare, and J. Wesley Johnson, president of the First National Bank, representing the company that has purchased the Denton tract of land, are behind the project. The purpose is to widen the avenue fifty feet on the westerly side, leaving the present row of trees that skirt that side in the middle of the widened street.

This will make two drives, the idea being to make the westerly one a speedway for owners and drivers of fast steppers. The present roadway, which would be on the easterly side of the row of trees, would be intended for the use of those who desire to drive at a more moderate pace.

Such a speedway would be beautifully located, as it is situated at the base of the hills overlooking the city, and would be fifty feet above the centre of the city. It is calculated that it will be easy to raise the necessary funds to improve the roadway after the land is secured for the purpose.

MR. O'SULLIVAN'S CONDITION.

No Internal Injuries, but He is Unable to Move Himself.

Sylvester J. O'Sullivan, who was struck by a train at the Netherwood station Friday morning, passed a fairly comfortable night at the Hotel Hunterston, where he is stopping. The physicians are now satisfied that there are no internal injuries, but the external injuries are such that Mr. O'Sullivan cannot move himself without help. There are no new developments in the case, and those in charge feel assured that the patient will now recover speedily.

Nothing New in Country Club.

Charles E. Brooke, who is one of the leading spirits in the Union County Country Club, denies in toto the article published in The News a few days ago about the club. There is nothing new at the club or in its affairs, and no plans for the future have been made or thought of. Mr. Brooke stamps the story as a fanciful dream of the reporter who wrote it HIT BY A TRAIN AT NETERWOOD STATION.

S. J. O'Sullivan Will Be Laid Up for Several Weeks.

ILL LUCK SEEMS TO BE HIS.

HE DID NOT SEE HIS DANGER UNTIL IT WAS TOO LATE.

Had Been in the Habit of Standing on Track No. 4 for His Regular Train, But This Morning He Did Not See That the Train Was on that Track—Seriously, But Not Fatally, Hurt

Sylvester J. O'Sullivan, vice-president of the Maryland Surety Company, of New York, seems to be ill-fated. When the Windsor Hotel fire occurred in New York last spring, he resided in a house next door and had most of his furniture destroyed. His wife suffered a severe shock to her nervous system by the scenes she witnessed at the fire, and the first of June last she came to the Hotel Hunterston, at Netherwood to spend the summer and recuperate her health. The last day of June she stepped on a match in the dry goods store of Crosby & Hill, in this city, and her flimsy summer gown was ignited. In a moments she was a living torch, and later in the day died from the affects of the burns she received. After passing through this fatality Mr. O'Sullivan found his health impaired and he decided to spend the remainder of the summer at the Hunterston. He went back and forth to New York every day, but this morning while waiting for a train at the Netherwood station his misfortunes were added to by being struck by the train he expected to board, and now he lies seriously injured in his apartments in the hotel.

Mr. O'Sullivan has been in the habit of leaving Netherwood at 8.30 o'clock, but Friday he decided to go on the train that passes Netherwood at 10.01. The train that he usually takes runs on track No 3, and Mr. O'Sullivan generally stepped out onto track 4 as the train rolled into the station. The 10 01 runs on track 4, but as Mr. O'Sullivan did not notice the difference this morning he walked on the track directly in front of the oncoming train without apprehending his danger. The locomotive was almost upon him he saw his predicament. He jumped back, but it was too late. He was struck with great force by the side of the engine and thrown several feet on the hard ballast of the roadbed. The engine came to a stop without striking him again, and the witnesse of the accident rushed to Mr. O'Sullivan's aid. He was lying half conscious from the shock. His face was cut and bruised, bleeding profusely, and his clothes badly torn. He was carried to the depot platform and a delivery wagon pressed into service to carry him back to the hotel. While being carried to his apartments Mr. O'Sullivan, who weighs 320 pounds, suffered excruciating pain.

By this time Drs. J. B. and Norman Probasco had arrived at the hotel. They called Dr. Long in consultation and made an examination of Mr. O'Sullivan's injuries. They found his left hip badly sprained, his left arm broken near the shoulder and the upper part of his body badly bruised. It is not thought that he suffered internal injuries. Though the injuries are very painful and will confine him to the bed for several weeks, they are not sufficient to cause fatal results.

Dr. Fritts, the railroad's surgeon, called, but his services were not required.

An Extension of Time.

Cranford, August 26.—The Township Committee at a meeting held last evening were inclined not to grant an extension of time to the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company to complete its lines at this place on account of the company's delay in macadamizing the streets through which the rails have been laid. Committeeman Thompson considered that no extension of time should be allowed unless the company agree to complete the road work. Representative A. A. Gaddis was present and asked for an extension of time for the railway company until December 1st. After considerable discussion the extension was granted providing the railway company would finish the road work by October 15th.

Thirteen Days on the Briny Deep.

A very handsome illustrated postal card has just received in this city from Rev. H. C. Eyme, former pastor of the German Lutheran church, on Grove street. Mr. Eyme is in the Harzburg Mountains, Germany, and states that he had a long—thirteen days—but beautiful voyage across the water. He says that he is enjoying the cool weather which necessitates the wearing of heavy coats and furs afternoon and evening. The postal card gives an idea of the beauti*ful scenery where Mr. Eyme is now* stopping.

PUT POISON IN COFFEE.

THE FIENDISH ACT COMMITTED BY EPILETIC DAUGHTER.

The Girl is Undoubtedly Demented—The Whole Family of John Ent Narrowly Escaped Losing Their Lives.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Flemington, August 25—The family of John Ent, in Sergeantville, drank freely of coffee at breakfast. Shortly after breakfast one after another become ill and a physician was summoned hastily. He diagnosed the case as one of poisoning. Antidotes were given, and after much labor all were pronounced out of danger.

Investigation showed that the dregs in the coffee pot contained large quantities of poison. Mr. Ent's suspicion at once was directed toward his daughter, Miss Hattie Ent, 16 years old. A grandson, 3 years old, saw the young girl with the poison. He did not notice her empty the contents of the package into the coffee, but saw her throw the parcel away. The empty wrapper was found and then it became apparent that Miss Ent was laboring under the hallucination that all the family must die.

She has been an epileptic nearly all her life, and her mind became affected. She will be taken to the State Hospital for treatment.

AWAY FOR TWO YEARS.

RAZOR SLASHING BARBER SENT TO STATE PRISON.

Albert Champion Only Convicted of Assault and Battery, But Given the Extreme Penalty of the Law—Lived Here.

Paterson, Aug. 26.—Albert Champion, formerly of Plainfield, the colored razor slashing barber who came near ending the career of John Mingo in a fight at Griffith's saloon about three weeks ago, was arraigned for sentence yesterday in the Court of Special Sessions. Champion was charged with atrocious assault and battery and assault with intent to kill, but Judge Barkalow found him guilty of assault and battery merely. The verdict made the friends of Champion feel that a light penalty would be imposed, but they were disappointed. Champion was given the extreme term of imprisonment, two years in State Prison.

Champion is well known in this city, where he figured frequently in police court for indulging in "crap" games. His last stand before the cadi was on the charge of running a disorderly house on Madison avenue, the place being raided by the police. He was sent to the county jail for six months, and after his release he came to Plainfield for a short time. Then he drifted to Paterson, where he quarrelled with a barber over his wife's devotion to him, which resulted in his badly slashing the fellow who cast asperslons upon his better half.

Horace Huff, who has been in the furniture business in this city for ten years, is the manager, and he knows thoroughly the wants of Plainfielders in furniture. He will study to please and give satisfaction. The prices will be all right and as will also the goods sold. The store is stocked with new goods of the latest design, and every effort has been made to make the store as attractive as possible.

AN ITALIAN'S THREAT.

Against His Partner's Life Lands Him in the County Jail.

Joseph Munch and Angello Verlini work a farm together at Warrenville. Joseph is of French extraction and Verlini is a son of Sunny Italy. Recently Angello was of the opinion that his partner was not dividing the receipts of the farm in an equitable manner and he did not hesitate to tell Munch his opinion of his idea of equal division. The result was a quarrel and Munch alleges that Verlini threatened to kill him.

Fearing for his safety Munch secured a warrant of Justice Smalley for the Italian's arrest. Officer Pangborn had the accused before the magistrate late yesterday afternoon. Former Judge Coddington represented the State and looked after Munch's interests. The result was that Verlinn was boond over to keep the peace in the sum of $200 in default of bail. He was committed to the county jail at Somerville.

Mrs. Carr, of West Fifth street, is detained at home by illness.

IMPROVED FORM FOR POSTAL MONEY ORDERS

Important Notice That Postmaster Bird Has Received.

THE SIZE TO BE SMALLER.

NEW FEATURES TO PREVENT MISTAKES THAT NOW HAPPEN.

The Design is an Artistic One, the Color Being Blue—Will be Introduced in Postoffices Throughout the Country September 4th—Growth of the Money Order System Has Been Phenomenal

Postmaster Bird, of this city, has received from the Postoffice Department at Washington a notification of the adoption of a new form of domestic money order which will be introduced gradually, or as the supplies of the old form become exhausted, at the various postoffice throughout the country after September 4th.

The new form is somewhat smaller than the order now in use. Its dimensions are about those of the ordidary bank draft. It has two adjuncts. The advice, or notification to be sent by the issuing to the paying Postmaster, is a reproduction of the order thr ough the use of carbonized paper (the manifold process,) and a receipt for the amount, to be furnished by the issuing Postmaster to the remitter.

On the back of the order a separate space has been provided for the stamps of banks through which it may be passed for collection.

In color the order is blue, having a light blue ground, with fine, closely interlaced, tinted lines of geometrical lathe work, of darker shade. In the centre is an escutcheon bearing the words "Postal Money Order" in shaded capital letters of the same two tints of blue. The tint of the order and the lathe work will serve to prevent imitations; but, as an additional safeguard against counterfeiting, a horizontal water-mark, composed of the initials U. S. M. O., in broad capital letters, has been wrought into the paper on which the new forms are printed.

Discrepances between order and advice, which, by entailing additional correspondence and causing delay in payment, have heretofore been a source of annoyance to the department and Postmasters, as well as to remitters and payees, are prevented, and absolute uniformity between the order and advice insured. The dispatch of advices, which hitherto have not been made out until after issue of the orders, will also be accelerated.

The receipt which is to be furnished by the issuing Postmaster to the remitter, showing the number and date of the order and the amount for which issued, is also, in the main, a reproduction, by the carbon process, of the writing and stamping of the order. The adoption of a receipt has not hitherto been practicable.

The postal money order system, from a small beginning in 1894, when the number of money order postoffices established in the United States was 419, has grown to be one of the great agencies of exchange. There are now about 30,000 such offices. The number of domestic money orders issued tn the United States during the past year was 30,000,000, amounting to $21,000,000. The system is used most extensively for remittances from places where bank exchange is not so readily obtainable. It is expected that on or about Jan. 1st next the fee charged for orders will be materially reduced.

EYEBROWS WERE SINGED

LUCKY ESCAPE OF MRS. H. T. SMITH FROM SERIOUS BURNING.

Gas Turned on in the Oven of a Stove—Mrs. Smith Did Not Know It—Lighted Match, Explosion Followed

An explosion of gas inflicted serious injuries to Mrs. H. T. Smith, of Westervelt avenue, Friday. Under the circumstances it was remarkable that she did not lose her sight and receive even worse injuries.

Mrs. Smith only lately returned from the Long Island shore. In her absence her son, Thomas U. Smith, kept bachelor's hall. He did his cooking on a gas stove. On Mrs. Smith's return a woman was employed to clean the kitchen. In cleaning the stove she accidentally turned on the gas in the oven of the gas stove. That was in the morning. Mrs. Smith smelt the escaping gas, but thought it was from the burner. She lighted the upper burners in the stove and then opened the door. There was a flash and an explosion.

Mrs. Smith's hair and eyebrows were singed and her face burned. She also received a severe shock. Luckily she closed her eyes and they were not injured.

Wesley Randolph, of Brookiyn, is visiting Plainfield relatives for a short time.

Mrs. S. O. Staats returned to her home, 130 West Second street, yesterday, after a pleasant visit at the home of her brother at Martinsville, Somerset county.

BODY OF J R RUNYON FOUND IN FERRY SLIP.

He Lived in Plainfield For Many Years.

ACCIDENT OR SUICIDE?

STUDIED LAW WITH JUDGE RUNYON AND C. L. MOFFETT.

Strange Career of Young Man Finally Ended in a Tragic Manner—Studied Law, Was an Actor and Hotel Keeper and Was in the Real Estate Business at Time of His Death.

Joseph R. Runyon, who studied law in this city and spent several years here, was drowned in one of the ferry slips of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Jersey City and his body was found Thursday. The Jersey City police believe he committed suicide but the relatives of the young man declare that he must have made a misstep and met his death in an accidental manner.

Many Plainfielders will remember Runyon who lived alone with his widowed mother on Orchard place. They were in reduced circumstances. As soon as Runyon was old enough, he went to work. He was at one time, clerk in Mallisne's Pharmacy. April 1st, 1894, he began to study law with Former Judge Nelson Runyon and remained in his offices until November 1st, 1895. Then he entered the office of Charles L. Moffett and continued his studies. Two years ago, he was prepared to take his enrrance exami*nations for the New Jersey Bar but, for* some reason, never went to Trenton to take them.

Soon after that, he went to Portland, Me., with the intention of beginning a career as an actor. He did not find the career satisfactory and returned after a week's time. He then went to South Plainfield where he ran a hotel for several months. He then moved out of this neighborhood and tried hotel keeping in another place. He also worked in Elizabeth. At the time of his death, he was living in New Yerk and was in the employ of a firm of real estate agents on Broadway, New York.

He was twenty-four years old, of middle height and were eyeglasses. Since he left Plainfield two years ago, he has not been back here.

He has an uncle in Elizabeth, Dr. George L. Gidney, who conducts a livery stable there. He said that Runyon had been missing for a week. His body was identified by those who knew him. The burial was at Snake Hill, Jersey City, but the body will be removed to the family plot in this city as soon as the necessary formalities can be gone through with.

LOAN COMPANY SUED BY RED MEN'S LODGE

Miantonomo Tribe Appeal to Supreme Court for Redress.

CLAIM UNFAIR DEALINGS.

WANTED TO WITHDRAW STOCK FROM REPUBLIC COMPANY.

Had Paid in $370 in Cash and Were to Receive $367—Profits and Balance Eaten Up by an Expense Fund to Pay President's Salary—Suit Brought by William Newcorn, Counsel for Miantonomo Tribe.

Suit has been started by Miantonomo Tribe, No. 118, I. O. R. M., against the Republic Savings and Loan Association, of Newark, in the New Jersey Supreme Court to recover dues paid in on twenty shares of short term stock in that corporation held by the tribe. The suit is brought for $500.

It is alleged that one of the conditions of sale was that if the tribe should decide to withdraw at any time before three years was up, they should receive the amount of the dues, less $1 on each share of stock. After three years they were to receive the full amount of the dues paid in and 6 per cent. on the money at the average time.

At the annual meeting of the company in 1897 an amendment was passed setting aside a certain amount of the dues as an expense fund to be charged up against the shares held by each stockholder. Most of it went to pay that salary of the president and general manager, Luther G. Gadd, of Newark.

*Last fall the tribe decided to with*draw, but at the suggestion of the officers of the company decided to wait until last March when the three years expired and take advantage of the rules that returned the full amount and interest. It is alleged by the tribe that the amendment had never been enforced up to that time.

The tribe, it is alleged, has paid in $370 in cash, according to the company its shares were worth $401.05 but there was its share of the expense fund to bear, leaving $309 to be returned.

The tribe claimed $370 and interest and not a cent less. The matter was put in the hands of the tribe's counsel, William Newcorn, who has finally brought suit after vainly trying to secure a settlement.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

A SUPERIOR POSTAL SERVICE TO BE HAD.

Changes to Go Into Effect at the Postoffice.

THREE MORE CARRIERS.

THE CITY AND BORDUGH HAS BEEN REDISTRICTED.

One of the New Carriers Assigned to North Plainfield—Another Will Be Mounted for the Outlying Territory of the City—The New Districts and the Men Who Are Assigned to Them.

Increased postal facilities, accompanied by better service, will go into effect Friday, Sept. 1st. Since Postmaster Bird was notified that the office had been allowed three extra carriers, he has been busily engaged in redistricting the city and making thorough and complete arrangements for introducing the additional carriers and shifting the others to obtain the best possible service. After Mr. Bird had completed his task he forwarded his plan and map to the postal authorities at Washington for approval. They were approved and yesterday returned to Plainfield.

An additional point in favor of Plainfield secured by Mr. Bird is the securing of an additional mounted carrier, making three in all. No. 13, Robert Loughlin, has secured this position. The other two are Edward Dunn and Patrick Reville.

North Plainfield is well cared for by having three carriers who do nothing but deliver mail in that section, while there will be a separate business delivery on Somerset street to Manning avenue.

The business section of the city will have four deliveries a day as at present, and if possible a good portion of the city will receive three deliveries, while the rest will have two deliveries. The carriers will commence work at 6:45 a. m., fifteen minutes earlier than at present, and will quit when their eight hours are up. John Hines, one of the new carriers, will be stationed at the carriers' window in the afternoon in place of Carrier Shea, who has had the position four years. As for the redistricting it will be seen by the following that the whole territory is well looked after, and the plan is one of credit to the postmaster who arranged it.

Carrier No. 1, Oliver Pierson, will cover a territory from Madison avenue east to Centre street, Netherwood; No. 2, Daniel Shea, will take in Watchung avenue and Sixth street out as far as Hillside avenue; No. 3, Charles Stephens, covers a territory between Fourth street and Stelle avenue and Madison and Plainfield avenues; No. 4, John Hines, will go from Fourth street to West Front street and from Madison avenue to Plainfield avenue; No. 5, William Dematest, will look after the territory from Greenbrook to Linden avenue and from Somerset street to Westfield avenue; No. 6, J. W. A. Bauersachs, has from Somerset street to Franklin avenue and from Greenbrook to Grandview avenue; No. 7, Charles Glaentzer, will have the business section and will make a business delivery on Somerset street to Manning avenue; No. 8, Edward Dunn, will cover everything west of Grant avenue; No. 9, Edward T. Van-Winkle, will look after the route between Central and Watchung avenues, taking in Ninth street and Fifth street between Watchung and Central avenue; No. 10, Patrick Reveila, will have a portion of Netherwood district, East Front street and Farragut road; No. 11, Chas. Gies, will look after Watchung avenue to Farragut road and from Greenbrook to East Third street; No. 12, Robert Loughlin, has from Plainfield to Watchung avenues, southeast of Ninth street; No. 13, John Burns, will have the territory between Plainfield and Grant avenues and from the Railroad to Ninth street; No. 14, Robert Tingley, will take care of the route from Linden to Fritz avenue and from Grove street to Westervelt avenue.

To Make Artificial Leather.

Elizabeth, August 28.—Articles of incorporation were filed Saturday with Union County Clerk Howard, by the Boston Artificial Leather Company, of Springfield, N. J. The company is capitalized at $100,000 and will erect a large factory at Springfield for the manufacture of Waterproof coatings and findings. They will also acquire land for factory purposes there. Samuel H. Graves will be the resident agent, and the incorporators are: Walter M. Bole, George H. Davidson and Frank B. Colton, all of Springfield. The partnership will be unlimited.

Torn His Bonds in Two.

Samuel Devoe, of Spotswood, ten miles from New Brunswick, has lost faith in banks since the Valentine defalcation, and accordingly he has withdrawn his deposits in the New Brunswick banks. Taking some bonds which he had in bank, he tore them in two and kept one half and left the other half with the bank, secure in the belief that no one would care to do anything with half a bond.

TOLD TO A MARINE

Wigwagging That Relieved an Army Officer's Feelings.

The Spaniards had slunk away from the Plaza del Este. They had tested the American marine and they were satisfied. The buzzard-picked bones in the simmering valley of Cusco, where "Pigging Bill" Elliott and his 100 men trapped the lurking guerrillas, were a warning to which the Spanish troops at Calmenara paid heed. Camp McCalla was as peaceful as a State gathering of militia. The warships in the outer harbor of Guantanamo lay still on the warm blue waters, with no fierce booming of heavy guns to frighten out to sea the timid hammer-headed sharks so thickly crowding the bay. Boats filled with jackies were pulling about between the ships and the shore with rarely an anxious eye being turned at the wooded bluffs on either side of the camp where no short a time before were hidden the sharp-shooting Spaniards. On the beach the marines were busy with the police work of the camp and the officers off duty lolled beneath the shade of the mess tent at the base of the hill, glad of the respite from actual fighting. Peaceful as everything seemed, however, there was no relaxation in vigilance. The outposts were on duty at the crossroads and at the salt pond and the danger of a surprise was eliminated.

Among the officers under the mess tent the talk was about the three days of steady fighting they went through after leaving Daiquiri, that they had done good work, and they were telling one another incidents, some heroic and some amusing, and wondering what folks at home were thinking about it all. Pretty soon there came up from the landing a tall young Lieutenant of marines. He looked as fresh as on parade in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and the contrast he offered, coming as he did from one of the warships in the harbor, with the campsoiled and fight-torn uniforms of the officers in the land battalion was very striking. His brother officers greeted him warmly, for, aside from any personal reason, a new face was welcome, as it meant news of some sort from the other world, from the fleet off Santiago, or perhaps from home.

The newcomer seated himself on a box of hardtack and joined in the conversation concerning the repulse of the Spaniards in their attack upon the camp.

"Boys," he said hesitatingly, "I heard something on one of the colliers to-day that I did not like. I don't believe it, but as it concerns you all, I think you ought to know it."

"Oh, we're not thin skinned any more," said one of the officers on shore. "It'll have to be pretty tough to worry us after our little experience of the last few days."

"Well, this will worry you, if anything will," replied the visitor.

"What was it?" asked several.

"Why, I heard, went on the visitor, "that if it hadn't been for the Cubans you fellows would have been wiped out. They say you flunked the Sunday night the Spaniards jumped you and that the Cubans had to rally you. The report is all over the fleet."

There was just a moment of silence, while several of the men who had faced death all through the fighting without flinching looked at one another a little queerly and then grew angry. The accusation was unjust, so unexpected, coming from their own branch of the service, too, that they hardly knew what to say or do. Then a big fellow with a full black beard grew red in the face and stood up.

"Who told you that?" he asked as his eyes flashed in an ugly way.

His brother officer told him, naming a Lieutenant on one of the ships in the harbor.

"Go back to him," said the angry man, "and tell him for me that he's a liar. Tell him I'm sorry I can't get over there to say it myself."

So indignant was the speaker that the other officers forgot for the moment the reflection upon them contained in the galley gossip, and they laughed.

"No don't tell him," went on the angry officer. "I'll tell it myself. I'll let him know what I think of him, even if I can't get at him."

With that he abruptly left the sheltering mess tent, strode out into the blazing sun along the trail leading up the bluff to where the camp proper was and where the flag, planted on the highest point of the hill during the day they first set foot on Cuban soil, still waved defiance to the impotent Spanish General in Calmenara. The others watched him as he stormed along through the chaparral, kicking the variegated land crabs from his pathway. They saw him climb laboriously up the steep winding ascent and slip in front of the signal tent where stood a signal boy leaning against a guy rope. In his hand the boy held the red signal flag with the white square in the center. Grabbing it from the private, the officer made three or four passes in the air.

"He's calling ——'s ship," said one of the officers in the mess tent as he read the signal.

"What's he going to do?" inquired one of the others, and we all stood up to watch him.

The man with the flag kept calling and calling, and finally there came an answering signal from the ship he wanted. Then the officers below read this message from the hill:

"Present my compliments to Mr.—— and say to him that he's a damned liar."

Whereupon the wigwagger, having let off steam, came down the hill somewhat mollified. When he reached the tent again he was greeted with good-natured jeers.

"And you can tell him," he said to the visiting marine, "that I'll back it up the first time I get a chance."

This opportunity never came. Explanations followed the next day, the offending officer declaring that he had but repeated reports heard by him, and a lasting peace was arranged. However, had the Spaniards been able to read the American signal code, they would no doubt have been somewhat surprised by this particular message.

Queen Victoria's Lace.

Queen Victoria's collection of lace is said to be worth about $400,000. The Princess of Wales owns $250,000 worth of lace, and the ex-Empress Eugenie has a splendid collection. But that of Leo XIII. surpasses them all, being valued at almost a million of dollars.

ELECTRIC VEHICLES.

THE IDEAL POWER FOR AUTOMOBILES IS ELECTRICITY.

New Ideas Being Worked Out Constantly and Weight of Storage Batteries Being Reduced—Its Reserve Power Instantly Available.

The wonderful development of electricity within the past few years, for power purposes, and its great economy, adaptability, and usefulness in that line, as shown by its universal adoption for the propulsion of street railway cars, also clearly demonstrate its superiority as a convenient and easily controlled power for motor vehicles, which are becoming so popular.

While the well known trolley car takes its power through the overhead or underground wires and conductors from an inexhaustible source of electricity, the motor vehicle is limited to the charge or amount it can carry, in consequence of the fact that it is intended to travel in places and over roads where there is no continuous outside supply of electricity. Hence, the means of storing electricity economically in the form of batteries whereby a surprisingly large quantity of active material is put into a small space, and this accounts for the greater speed the electric motor vehicles now possess over former designs. It is also a fact that the aggregate weight of battery for the amount of current discharge obtained is less than formerly.

The factor of weight is one of the features in electric vehicles that practical men are working to overcome, and it is said that whenever a storage battery or a system of storing the electric current is invented by which the weight of the battery is greatly reduced, there is certain to be an impetus given to the electric motor vehicle industry such as has never been thought of.

One of the essential requirements in a motor vehicle is that the reserve power shall be instantly available for a brief period of time, as, for example, when heavy grades are met with. In a storage battery this condition is perfectly met, the increase of current demanded being readily given off and accurately measured by the ampere meter, so that by observing the latter while traveling on an apparently level road one can detect slight grades by the varying position of the ampere needle.

The battery may be considered as an elastic equalizer capable of giving off in an instant the amount of current needed at various grades and emergencies. This makes electricity an ideal power for vehicles, for it eliminates the complication of machinery of either gas, steam, or compressed air motors, with their attendant noise, heat, and vibration. It is not only serviceable as power but is also as light as it is silent.

The vertical steering shaft is connected underneath the carriage by a crank and rod with one end of an interior movable hollow hub, around which the front wheel runs on ball bearings; the hub is pivoted on its interior to the carriage frame. Another connecting crank rod extends from this hub to the same style of hub on the opposite side. So that the movement of one hub by the steering shaft operates the other in the same direction, both moving parallel to each other. This enables the steering to be done very easily.

The carriage frame which supports the springs is built of strong steel tubing, well braced and jointed. The foot brake lever projects slightly above the floor, and has side notches for holding the lever in any position it may be placed. By a system of levers under the carriage, the brake rod extends to a band brake wheel secured on the rear tubular propelling shaft adjoining the large gear wheel, also keyed on the same shaft. To exclude dust, these are covered by a metal casing which is removed in the illustration for more clearly showing the driving mechanism. An additional safety hand brake is provided, the lever of which will be seen just inside the front seat.—Scientific American.

Some Late Inventions.

Sheears and scissors are to be made with ball bearings, the washer at the end of the connecting rivet being cut out on the underside to form a ball race, while it not only decreases the wear on the rivet, but securely holds the cutting edges together.

A handy tool for carpenters' use is a nailholder, for holding nails in corners and places where the fingers cannot hold them easily, a steel punch having a pair of jaws attached to its face to grasp the nail and hold it while the hammer is driving it.

Pens can be adjusted at any desired angle in a new holder, which has the pen socket mounted on a ball and in a clamping head, so it can be moved in the position desired and held fast by turning a screw at the opposite end of the holder to lock the jaws in the head.

Ground is easily thawed for mining operations by the use of a new apparatus having a stove mounted on a sled, with a boiler over the firebox, the water being heated and discharged in the form of steam to a thawing chamber, which is placed over the ground to be loosened.

PROJECT TO WIDEN SOMERSET STREET

Mayor Smalley is Promoting Plans for the Improvement

THE TAXPAYERS FAVOR IT.

TROLLEY TRACKS NOW MONOPOLIZE TOO MUCH SPACE.

The Plan is to Widen the Street From the Green Brook Bridge to Jackson Avenu, Taking a Few Feet From all the Properties Between Those Points—Many Interested Ones.

Mayor Smalley, of the borough, has a reputation for being progressive, and he is maintaining this in more ways than one. He now has a scheme whereby the borough will have a great improvement that is apparent to everyone. It is that of widening Somerset street, from the county bridge to Jackson avenue, thus giving carriages and cyclists more room. This is needed in view of the amount of room monopolized by the trolley. In rainy weather, when the street is muddy, it is very difficulty to get along and the need of a wider street has pressed itself on the minds of the Mayor.

The idea is to take a little off of both sides where it is possible, and where it is not, only one side will be touched. Mr. Smalley has the scheme figured out in his mind, but it is a little early to give the thing away in details. However, he has seen a sufficient number of property owners along the street, and they all declare themselves in favor of the project, for they can readily see the advantages to be gained by it.

The distance selected from the bridge to Jackson avenue is deemed sufficient, but it is learned that those living beyond want the street widened and there is an opportunity of doing the work it will be continued for a further distance. His Honor will present his scheme before the Council before anything is done in the matter.

WILL SPLICE CABLE.

Splicing Will Complete the New Telephone Lines to New York.

The cable which is to connect the four new trunk lines of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company with the system of underground wires of the company in Plainfield, has been put in position. It runs from Netherwood where the trunk lines end to South avenue and Richmond street where the underground conduits begin. The cable is in four sections and will have to be spliced. It was used in the city but was taken down at the time of the removal of the overhead wires. Several of the company's expert cablemen are expected here today to splice the cable.

To Furnish Music at the Play.

George Rogers, who has conducted the Hotel Hunterston orchestra during the summer months, will resume his duties as musical director of the orchestra at Music Hall next week. The orchestra at the hotel will still be under his charge, but he will personally direct the one before the footlights.

AFTER THE CONTRACTOR.

SOMERSET COUNTY ROAD WORK IS NOT SATISFACTORY.

Adjoining Property Owners Will Not Pay Their Assessments Because They Claim That the Macadamizing is Not Good.

The Somerset County Board of Freeholders met last Tuesday at Belle mead for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the macadam road leading from Somerville to Belle Mead which was improved sometime ago. The property owners along that road, which is nearly six miles long, refuse to pay their share of 10 per cent. for the work of repairing the road until Hugh Reel, of Somerville, the contractor, completes his work. Mr. Reel is under contract to put the road in the best of condition.

A portion of the road was repaired, but not to the satisfaction of the property owner or Freeholders. As the matter has been held in abeyance for sometime past, the Freeholders thought it time that something should be done.

The Freeholders are of the same opinion as the property owners, and after examination they will ascertain if Contractor Reel intends completing his work. If he will not finish it the Freeholders will call in the services of the County Engineer and he will complete the work. The Freeholders will then deduct the amount and cost for the repairs from the amount to be paid to Mr. Reel.

A NEW WATER COMPANY

WOULD LOCATE ON SECOND MOUNTAIN BACK OF WASHINGTONVILLE.

New York Capitalists are Interested in Scheme and Promise to Push It—Might Extend Lines to Plainfield.

The value of the high ground back of Scotch Plains and Washington Valley as a source of water supply is just beginning to be generally appreciated. The Feltville Water Company has prepared to supply the neighboring towns and cities with water on a large scale. Now comes a statement from one who should certainly know what he is talking about, that another company is in process of organization and will establish itself on the second range of mountains, back of Washingtonville.

The statement is made that several New York capitalists are interested in the scheme and have looked the situation over and are satisfied that it is a good investment. The authority for it is one who is largely interested in property in that section, and keeps fully in touch with any movement looking toward the advantages of that section.

It is said that the company will furnish Washingtonville and Somerset Park with water and may also try to enter North Plainfield and Plainfield.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, and have it in the hands of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?" He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said: "The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, said who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter why she visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion, but I had employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $3 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who specially objected to their mother giving a testimonial which would bear her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be other ones just like me, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling about my case may help some other person suffering from some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing her thoroughly did not object to the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style pocket containing five RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper carton, (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical, who can thus procure a dose for FIVE CENTS. Ripans Tabules may also be had of druggists generally, or by sending the price (60 cents) to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (10 tabules) will be sent for FIVE CENTS. Ripans Tabules are the best blood purifier, nerve regulator and all around liquor drunkard banish cheap. One gives relief.

CITY AFFAIRS DEALT WITH BY THE COUNCIL.

Many Small Matters Considered at September Meeting.

PETITIONS FROM CITIZENS.

BIDS RECEIVED FOR MACADAMIZING W. THIRD AND FOURTH STREETS.

Extension of the Trolley Wanted Through Woodland and Putnam Avenues to the Cemetery and the Golf Grounds—City Asked to Give Money for Drinking Fountain—Other Business.

The business transacted at the regular September meeting of the Common Council held last Tuesday was not of great importance, and owing to the lateness of the hour in starting, 10 o'clock, which was due to the public hearing given on the extension of the Arlington avenue trolley, an account of which appears in another column, it was completed in as short a time as possible.

There were bids received for the macadamizing of West Third and Fourth streets, and three bids were presented. Phillips & Co., of Philadelphia, bid 69 cents per lineal foot for Third street; $1.14½ for West Fourth street, 30 feet wide from New street to Plainfield avenue, and $1.45½ for 40 foot width from Plainfield avenue to Monroe avenue. The bid submitted by C. M. Meeker was very close to the above bid. It was 68 cents for West Third street, $1.18 for West Fourth street, from New street to Plainfield avenue, and $1.46 from Plainfield avenue to Monroe avenue. Patsy Christmas was high man. He bid 73 cents for West Third street and $1.44 for West Fourth street, from New street to Monroe avenue. Of course, all bids include the furnishing of all materials. They were all received and the result will be announced at the next meeting probably.

H. J. Runyon and others petitioned the Council for the extension of the trolley through Woodland and Putnam avenues to the golf grounds and cemetery, setting forth the advantages to be derived from it over that route. Residents of West Second street, between Central avenue and Liberty street, asked to have that street macadamized. Residents of John street petitioned to have the street set to grade, claiming that the street is in terrible condition. Charles H. Hand petitioned for the privilege of erecting four iron posts for an awning in front of his property, corner of East Fourth street and Watchung avenue, similar to the one in front of J. A. Smith & Brother's grocery. Residents of Essex street petitioned to have the surplus dirt now on West Fourth street removed to their street and the street graded. Residents of West Fourth street and Lee place complained of the condition of the gutters, which they say will not carry off the surface water. Mr. Barrows explained that it is the intention of the Council to macadamize that street and the trouble will be remedied.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company stated in a communication that two fire hydrants, as ordered, had been installed. The Loyal Temperance Legion, in a communication, stated that funds are being raised for the purpose of erecting a public drinking fountain on North avenue for man and beast, and they asked the Council to contribute something toward the same which will cost about $475. The Board of Education asked the Council to deposit their share of the collections from the Martin Act in the bank to the credit of the school fund.

Mrs. A. Swaim, of West Front street, again called the attention of the Council to the complaint she made sometime ago regarding the damages caused to her plants through carelessness as a result of the breaking of gas mains near her house. The matter was referred to the street committee who will communicate with the complainant. It was Mrs. Swaim's expressed wish that the Council settle with her for damages.

Building Inspector T. O. Doane reported that thirteen permits were granted during August.

Mr. VanHerwerden offered a resolution that in anticipation of the collection of taxes that $5,000 for the general fund and $1,000 for the fire fund be borrowed. Mr. Tolles moved that the request for four electric lights on West Sixth street be granted, and that a similar request for four lights on the lower part of Park avenue also be granted. Regarding the petition for lights on Beliview avenue, in the opinion of the committee there are not a sufficient number of houses on the avenue to warrant the locating of any on that thoroughfare.

Mr. Smith offered a resolution giving George J. Tobin the contract to heat the City Industrial Home at an expense of $1,027.24. The same was adopted. Mr. Smith explained, in answer to Mr. Barrows' inquiries as to whether bids had been advertised for, that the line committee had recommended the names of A. M. Griffin, W. C Krause and G. J. Tobin, and bids had been received from these people to do the work. Mr. Tobin's bid was found to be the one best suited for the purpose in the judgment of the alms committee.

Mr. VanHerwerden stated that he had received many complaints from residents of this city about the great amount of unnecessary noise made by engines on the Central Railroad, especially during the night when people want to sleep, and he moved that the corporation counsel be instructed to write to the company and use his efforts to have the nuisance abated. It was complained that people are unable to sleep owing to the constant whistle of engines and from other causes which in the opinion of the complainants can be stopped.

After Mr. Barrows moved that when council adjourn it be to meet next Monday evening, council adjourned.

ESTIMABLE WOMAN DEAD

SUFFERED FATAL HEMORRHAGE SOON AFTER KISSING HUSBAND GOODBY.

Mrs. Meschutt Had Been Ill for Sometime—No Hope of Recovery, but Death Came Rather Unexpectedly Tuesday.

The many friends in this city will be pained to learn of the death of Mrs Hannah M. Meschutt, wife of George F. Meschutt, which occurred at 9:30 o'clock Tuesday morning at her residence, 326 East Front street.

Mrs. Meschutt had been an invalid for many months, but it was not until about Christmas that she was confined to her room and later to her bed, consumption having developed to such a stage that her husband and the relatives of the family have entertained no hope of her recovery.

Dr. Zeglio has been in attendance and though he gave no encouragement to the family, he succeeded in materially benefitting the sufferer, who at times would feel greatly encouraged. Frequently Mrs. Meschutt had been able to sit up and had expressed the belief that she would regain her health. She has been attended by her only sister, Mrs. T. S. Harris, of Philadelphia, who has been her faithful and constant companion for several months. Of late, however, Mrs. Meschutt became despondent and felt as though she could not live. Tuesday morning she kissed her husband good bye as he left for his place of business in Jersey City.

Soon afterwards she was seized with a hemorrhage and before Dr. Zeglio could reach the house death resulted.

Mrs. Meschutt was a member of the First Presbyterian church, but owing to ill health had not taken active interest in church affairs.

Funeral services will be held at the house at 8 o'clock this evening. Rev. Charles E. Herring will officiate. The body will be taken to Arlington for burial in the family plot Friday morning. The funeral is in charge of Undertaker Walter Runyon, of Dunellen.

STOPPED TROLLEY WORK.

The Company was Not Following the Route Agreed Upon Through the Cook Estate.

Work on the trolley extension to Westfield received a temporary setback at Scotch Plains yesterday, when Henry Cook, representing the Cook estate, stopped the work through the Cook farm. Mr. Cook claimed the company was not following the route agreed upon, and unless they kept to their agreement there would be no trolley through the estate he represented. Col. Hines was communicated with and after a consultation with others it was agreed that the company would follow the route agreed upon, so work will probably be resumed today.

New York and New Jersey Telephone Company Plan Further Invasion.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company is planning to still further extend its lines. The present line to Neshanic from Somerville now runs within a few hundred yards of the village of South Branch. It is the intention of the company to run a line into South Branch and establish a pay station there. There will only be one telephone in the place as the demand is not sufficient to put in any more.

FIERCE CHASE FOR GIRL'S ASSAILANT.

Neighbors Aroused to a Fury by Attacks on a Child.

WAS JAILED JUST IN TIME.

MOB WOULD HAVE DEALT HARSHLY WITH HIM.

He Had Entered the House of a Mountain-side Farmer and Over-awed and Assaulted a Twelve-year-old Girl—Chased by Farmers Almost All the Way Into Westfield, Where He Was Arrested.

Westfield, Sept. 6—Mountainside, a small town near here, had a regular man hunt yesterday when it became known that Lelia, the twelve year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James O'Connor, had been assaulted in the absence from the house of the parents.

Mr. O'Connor, who is a well-to-do farmer, was working in the fields and his wife had gone to call on a neighbor, leaving three young children alone. The younger two went to join their father, and as soon as they were out of sight a tall, rough man appeared at the kitchen door and asked the little girl if she was alone. He walked in and told her to get him something to eat.

After placing some bread and butter before the man the girl attempted to leave the house, but he caught her by the arm and dragged her screaming into the parlor. The child fought with all her might, and the man hit her over the head. This did not stop her, and he then took her by the throat and choked her. As she could do nothing more, she reasoned that he might leave her if she was quiet, and she was right. Thinking that the blow on the head had killed her, the man quickly left the house.

Although badly hurt and frightened the little girl lost no time in getting to her father. He aroused the neighborhood and started a search for the man. He was sighted about noon, and a hot race took place. The crowd increased at every house, and threats of lynching were numerous. Had the man been caught at this time he would have suffered for his crime without a trial. George Pfitz saw the man turn into Chestnut street, Westfield. He drove after him, and after a hard fight brought him to the lockup in this place and turned him over to the police just as the father and a crowd of followers arrived, vowing vengeance. They attempted to get at the man, but he was pushed into a cell and the lock snapped before they could mete out retribution.

The man, who is about forty years old, said that he was Frederick Knock, of Pittsburg, Pa., and that he had been looking for work. He denied that he had been at the house at all, but was identified by several men who had seen him hanging about the place all the morning. In his pocket was found a paper showing that he had taken out naturalization papers in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, April 4th, 1899.

The man was committed to the County Jail at Elizabeth, but has not been removed there as yet. It is feared that there will be trouble when the prisoner is taken to the railroad station.

RUTH MOORE SENT TO REFORM SCHOOL.

Tried to Escape On Her Way to Jail.

NOT FIFTEEN YEARS OLD.

WAS COMMITTED AT REQUEST OF HER MOTHER.

Was Married a Month Ago to Richard Davis, Who, the Police Allege, Has Another Wife—She Has Had an Eventful Career—Judge Vail Sent Her to the Industrial School at Trenton.

Although Ruth Moore is not yet 15 years old she has seen a good deal of life. She has been married, has been in jail, and now the latest important happening in her career is her departure to the State Industrial School for Girls at Trenton. She was committed to that institution Tuesday by Judge Vail at the request of her mother.

For some time Ruth has been under the surveillance of the police. In June she was arrested on the charge of being disorderly and City Judge Runyon suspended sentence on her after she promised to reform. A month ago she was married to one Richard Davis, who, the police allege, has another wife.

Before the marriage Mrs. Moore was able to have some slight control over the girl but since that time, she has done as she pleased, claiming that as a married woman she was beyond parental authority.

Tuesday morning Mrs. Moore and her daughter, City Judge Runyon and Sergeant Kiely went to Elizabeth and appeared before Judge Vail. Mrs. Moore made application to the Judge to have her daughter committed to the Industrial School, alleging that she was incorrigible. There was a new phase to the case as Ruth claimed to be a married woman. The police declared the marriage illegal, however, and the Judge sent her to the school.

After the adjournment of court Sergeant Kiely and Sheriff Kirk started to escort Ruth to the jail, pending her transfer to the Industrial School. As the Sheriff approached her, she uttered a scream and, backing up against the railing, begged the officers not to take her, promising to obey her mother if she was not taken away.

After some persuasion she agreed to accompany the officers to the warden's office and started forward. When she reached the door leading from the court room to the jail she made a sudden dash for liberty. Sergeant Kiely had been watching her and was after her in an instant. She had taken but a few steps when the officer's hand was on her arm and she was hustled into the jail before she had time to make any further resistance.

CONTRACTOR RELIEVED OF JOB.

Somerset Freeholders Not Satisfied With Macadamizing Being Done.

Freeholder Lutkins, of the borough, met yesterday with the bridge committee from the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, and they went over the road at Belle Mead, which was being macadamized by Contractor Rathi, of Somerville. They found the work was not being done as it should be and they took it out of the hands of the contractor and turned it over to County Engineer Joseph Dougherty, with instructions for him to go on and finish the road as it should be.

Night Watchman George Rockafellaw discovered late last Tuesday that the front door at VanEmburgh & Son's store on West Front street was unlocked. He left Patrolman Higgins in charge while he went to Mr. VanEmburgh's home and notified him about it. The door was fastened soon afterward by Mr. VanEmburgh. During the early part of the evening one of the proprietors and W. R. Codington were at the store, and they must have unconsciously left the door unlocked.

ARLINGTON AVENUE TROLLEY EXTENSION

Much Hard Work for and Against the Use of the Trolley.

COUNCIL GAVE A HEARING.

EUGENE HATCH REPRESENTED ELEVEN PROPERTY OWNERS.

Argued That the Avenue Was Not Fitted for the Introduction of the Trolley for Several Reasons—Col. Dietrich Was Enthusiastically in Favor of It—Council Adjourned Without Taking Action.

Apropos of the introduction of the trolley through Arlington avenue, the Common Council set last Tuesday as the time when a hearing pro and con should be given. Long before 8 o'clock the lobby was well filled with a representative gathering of citizens, some of whom opposed and some favored the trolley. Despite argument for and against, nothing was done by the Council and after a recess of fifteen minutes, the hearing was adjourned for one week.

Eugene Hatch, one of those affected, and a resident of Eighth street and Arlington avenue, was the first speaker. He said that he represented eleven property owners on Arlington avenue, with a total of 2,100 feet frontage, as follows: Mrs. Babcock, 352 feet; Mrs Hatch, 330; Miss Kenyon, 350; Mrs. W. P. Smith, 260; Mr. Schuck, 147; Mr. Ross, 174; J. D. Spicer, 175; Mr. Buckalew, 140; Mrs. Taylor, 135; Mrs. Monfort, 42; Mrs. Jackson, 50. This was assessed, Mr. Hatch said, for $50,000, which was equal to the property for which consents had been secured for the trolley.

Mr. Hatch reaffirmed his objections made at a previous meeting about that section being one of homes and of the number of invalids living there, and of the constant annoyance that a trolley would be. He thought the Council did the residents on that avenue an injury when they granted the Scotch Plains trolley with the agreement that one should be located on their avenue, thus binding themselves to grant the franchise.

He quoted Assessor Hubbard as saying that if the trolley should go through that avenue it would depreciate the value of the property very materially. He said that there was not a general demand for the trolley, and cited the vacant lots below Ninth street, which would never be improved, a veritable swamp land, and yet consents for 700 feet of this land had been secured. Mr. Hatch cited legal objections and said that he be represented would fight the trolley in the courts.

Col. John Dietrich, of Arlington avenue, was the next speaker. He said that judging from the remarks of Mr. Hatch one would think that there is nothing but brown stone houses and invalids on the avenue. He said that Mrs. Babcock lives 100 feet off of the avenue, and Mr. Hatch, who would not want to be known as living on the avenue, resides on fashionable Eighth street. The Seminary property was exempt from taxes twenty-three years ago, he stated, and a prominent Legislator secured an enactment in favor of this property. He begged the Council to grant the trolley franchise.

Hugh McDonough, who claimed he had spent $30 000 on the avenue in erecting houses, earnestly asked that the trolley franchise be granted.

Lawyer Winfield S Angleman, representing some of the objectors, said he was glad that the fact was noted that a majority of the property owners do not front on the avenue. He said about half of the consents secured were for property on East avenue where it runs through to Arlington avenue. He cited the fact that the trolley company filed a map for a single track, and they might use a double one. They should petition directly for what they want. He thought it did not look as though the people on Arlington avenue want the trolley when there is a bare majority of 154 feet in consents. He claimed that the avenue near the school is a play ground for children, that a wagon scarcely passes through there once an hour.

David Runyon, who lives on the upper part of the avenue, also spoke in favor of the trolley. He did not think it should be a contest of one end of the avenue against the other, or that two or three people should block the trolley.

Otto Abrens, of Park avenue, argued in favor of the trolley. Assemblyman Roger F. Murray spoke at length in favor of the trolley. He lives on Arlington avenue and wants to see improvements. B. A. Mumford, a resident of the avenue for twenty years, urged the introduction of the trolley.

William Palmer Smith spoke against the trolley and told how it would damage his property on the avenue. Dr. Probasco, of the Board of Education, spoke in favor of the trolley, but objected to the short turn from Fourth street into the avenue. Charles Burner, of Madison avenue, spoke in favor of the trolley.

This concluded the remarks by the citizens present, and Mr. Barrows made a few remarks in conclusion. He said while no one had approached any member regarding the trolley the Council had agreed to grant a franchise for Arlington avenue. He spoke of the benefits to be derived in opening unused territory. No other street in the city would be injured as little as this avenue and he favored it for the trolley. He spoke of the advantages for children in getting to school, especially where carriages cannot be hired for that purpose. He said that Plainfield was just beginning to grow in the outlying districts. He spoke of the advantages in reaching nearby towns. He hoped that soon there would only be two cemeteries in the city—Hillside and St. Mary's and he understood that the one on Plainfield avenue is to be abandoned.

This concluded the trolley matter for the evening and after a recess the hearing was adjourned for one week.

IS KEPT IN THE FAMILY.

COMPTON BLOCK PURCHARED BY CORNELIUS K. COMPTON.

Bids Started at $10,000 and Ended at $12,500—Other Property of the Estate Will Be Sold at a Later Date.

Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the City Hotel, Charles A. Reed, special master in chancery, sold the Compton property Nos. 140, 142, 144 West Front street, which is one of the best known in this city. There was a good sized crowd present and the property was started at $10,000 and gradually bid up to $12,500 at which price it was sold to Cornelius K. Compton, one of the heirs. It was bid in for Mr. Compton by Nelson Runyon, of the firm of Nelson & Wm. N. Runyon, solicitors.

The other property belonging to the estate and located at 502 West Front street, consisting of a dwelling house and lot, was bid up to $2,150, and it was agreed to adjourn the sale of this property for two weeks. The sale will take place on the premises on Tuesday, September 19th. The property is being disposed of for the purpose of settling the estate.

THE ASSESSMENT PAID.

William H. Shotwell Advanced the Cash Depending on the Lot Owners to Reimburse Him.

Yesterday William H. Shotwell personally advanced the money and paid Collector George F. Brown, of the borough, the assessment of $216 on the North Plainfield Cemetery for the opening of Watchung avenue. Although public opinion was almost unanimously against the commissioners for assessing the cemetery, still there seemed no legal way to prevent the collector from collecting the amount or selling the property, and Mr. Shotwell was daily being importuned by lot owners not to let the place be sold or even advertised for sale, and he therefore paid the assessment out of his personal funds, trusting to the honor and integrity of lot owners to reimburse him.

INDULGED IN OYSTERS.

Perious to That the Borough Firemen Made Arrangements for Their Parade.

There was a regular meeting of the Warren Engine Company last Tuesday, followed by an oyster supper. At the meeting there was considerable discussion regarding the firemen's parade to be held on October 12th. It was reported that acceptances had been received from eleven companies and arrangements for the parade are gradually being perfected.

The members expect to receive their new uniforms in a few days, and a handsome closet, costing $75, is being erected to keep them in. The supper which followed the meeting was a pleasant affair. It was held at the rooms and the committee in charge prepared it to suit the taste of all present.

Many on the Trolley Cars.

The travel last Monday on the trolley cars was perhaps the largest in the history of the company, with the possible exception of Fourth of July. The beautiful weather brought pleasure seekers out in large numbers.

Borough Schools Open Next Tuesday.

The Borough Public Schools will reopen next week Tuesday, September 12th.

The steam roller is now located on Park avenue below Randolph road, where it is being used to repair the road.

BOROUGH TAX GOES UP EIGHT POINTS.

Despite Efforts of Administration to Lower It.

BIG JUMP IN SCHOOL TAX.

COST OF RUNNING BOROUGH HAS BEEN REDUCED.

The Borough Tax Rate for the New Fiscal Year Will Be $2.28, as Against $2.20 in the Present Year—School Tax and County Tax Are Responsible—Cost of Schools Increased.

The tax rate in the borough of North Plainfield has followed the example of the tax rate on the city side of the brook. It has gone up. There is an essential difference in the increase, however. The new administration in the borough promised, when it was elected, to reduce the tax rate. As far as the administration is concerned, that promise has been kept, but the county and school taxes have taken such a jump that they more than equalled the reduction in the expenses of the borough government and sent the tax rate from $2.20 on $100 to $2.28.

The administration made a great effort to reduce the cost of running the borough. According to the appropriations for the coming fiscal year, it will be necessary to raise $35,000 to run the borough during the next year. This appropriation is considerably less than that of the present fiscal year. The borough rate at present is .81. Next year it will be .76, a fall of five points.

The decrease is more than covered, however, by the increase in the cost of running the borough public schools. The Board of Education has the fixing of the school tax. Their request at the beginning of the present fiscal year was for $13,200. Now the appropriation is fixed at $16,000. In addition, the schools have the appropriation from the State of several thousand dollars.

The cost of running Somerset county affairs is also growing. The county tax rate has been increased from .53 to .56. There is also one point increase in the State school tax. The Board of Health tax remains the same, two points.

The taxable valuation of real and personal property in the borough is $2,384,455. Assessor E. M. French has completed the computation of the tax rate. The old and new tax rates compared are as follows:

	99.	99.
Borough	.81	.76
County	.53	.56
State school	.36	.37
Special school	.38	.39
Board of Health	.02	.02

HIS BONDSMAN SETTLED.

Then the Charge of Embezzlement Against William Widdeman Was Not Pushed in Court.

William Widdeman, a collector formerly employed by Frank Linke, was arrested early yesterday by Patrolman Totten, who found him on Watchung avenue in a helpless state of intoxication. Widdeman was locked up. The real purpose of apprehending Widdeman was for an alleged embezzlement from Mr. Linke of a sum of money said to be about $80 which he had failed to turn in after collecting. John Widdeman, the accused's father, who is also his bondsman, agreed to make good the loss.

The charge of embezzlement against Widdeman was not pressed.

Miss Wagner, a valued sales lady with Doane & Ecsall, resigned her position Saturday night.

SKIRTS.

The Clinging Style Still Holds the Foremost Place.

Skirts continue to be perfectly plain and tight at the top, without a fold or plait, and to flare around the foot more or less, according to the nature of the material employed. The thinner the goods the more ripples are allowed, and for these goods accordion plaiting is largely used. Stiff and heavy goods are cut so as to show but few undulations.

Circular ruffles and flounces are a favorite method of giving a flare to the base of thin skirts. These are of varying height, according to taste, and either one or several are used, plain or trimmed. The flounce is almost invariably higher at the back than in front unless it is to be arranged on the skirt as to simulate a tunic.

Skirt linings continue to be incorporated with the outside, being held against the goods by inside stitches along the seams. The opening occurs at the side rather than the back in the case of tight skirts without plaits and is concealed under a band of trimming or a strap or is made decorative with ornamental buttons.

The picture illustrates a costume in which the skirt has a triple redingote of pastel blue wool goods opening over a front of blue and white printed foulard. The bodice is of the blue wool and forms a plastron with epaulets, bound with cream silk. The collar and little yoke are of the blue and white foulard, as are the tight sleeves. The belt is of cream silk.

FUR CLOTHING.

How to Care For It During the Summer Months.

Furs should be beaten carefully with a light switch before being put away for the summer. The dust and lurking moth eggs are thus removed, especially if the beating is followed by a gentle combing with a coarse toothed comb. Benzine kills insects and does not injure furs, but it evaporates quickly, while moth balls have so offensive an odor that it is highly unpleasant to use them for any article of personal apparel. The best way is to sprinkle Persian insect powder on the furs and to keep them in tightly closed bags or boxes, brushing them out frequently for renewed beatings and fresh powder.

Bran water softens and whitens the skin and is useful as an application for sunburn. The preparation is simple—a handful of bran is boiled in a quart of water; the water is strained and used while it is fresh. It is more effective warm than cold.

An illustration is given of a simple and attractive outing costume for a girl. It is of navy blue English serge and has a plaited skirt. The loose sack has a sailor collar and revers of white flannel, bordered with lines of blue stitching, and the collar and vest are also of stitched white flannel. The plain sleeves are tight, the buttons of mother of pearl. With this costume is worn a sailor hat of white straw, with a band and bow of blue and white striped ribbon.

NOVELTIES.

Pretty Things For the Fashionable Wardrobe.

A novelty is shown in the shops of a long boa entirely composed of the shaded and crimped silk petals of poppies. These petals, which may properly appear in red, pink or white, are also seen in blue and maize, the taste of the purchaser being consulted in preference to nature.

The old fashioned long, narrow, straight scarf is revived and is being ranked as a novelty, so long has it been out of date. Of crape or silk, with embroidered and fringed ends, it is a most graceful accessory to a dignified toilet.

A delicate and silvery geranium pink and all the violet tones are the millinery shades of the present and early future.

BATHROBE.

Summer blouses are masses of lace and needlework fine as a cobweb. These of taffeta are tucked, embroidered and enriched with lace insertion, and those of lawn sometimes have not a square inch of plain material in them. One model, worn over an underbodice of colored taffeta, consists solely of little bands of valenciennes insertion separated by lace beading, through which narrow satin ribbon the color of taffeta is threaded.

The bathrobe illustrated is of this pink French flannel. It is mounted on a round yoke, bordered with a circular ruffle and two inches of coral satin ribbon, which also passes around the high daring collar. The fronts of the gown form two box plaits. The sleeves are in one piece, gathered at the waist with a coral ruche. The girdle is a cord of coral silk.

FASHIONABLE GOWNS.

What Is Worn by the Best Dressed Women.

Not so very many years ago the really elegant and well dressed woman always appeared in a dark gown, even a black one, in the summer, but now all that is entirely changed, and not only for ceremonious wear, but for the simplest occasions, light, bright gowns are worn, adorned with lace, guipure and ruffles. The favorite materials are batiste, foulard, pique or muslin. The eternal dark blue and white foulard is, however, well to the front as usual, and is a pet fabric for street costumes, being comparatively cool and not easily soiled.

Etamine is a useful summer material, being of light weight and thoroughly serviceable for ordinary wear.

A pretty and novel arrangement is the guipure stole falling down the front of the gown from head to foot. It is not loose, but is sewed down at each side and is threaded with rather wide velvet ribbon. Black velvet is most frequently employed.

A picture is given of a gown of cherry foulard with a floral design a shade deeper. It has a princess back and a slight train, and around the foot is a circular flounce. The front of the bodice is gathered at the waist and is crossed by horizontal bands of black chantilly insertion. The tablier is decorated in the same way, as are also the tight sleeves. At each side of the front is a lengthwise band of the insertion, and a band also passes around the foot at the head of the flounce. The black straw hat is trimmed with a black plume, black velvet and a buckle.

Strength of Animals.

A man pressing upon a dynamometer with one hand exerts a force equal to three-quarters of his own weight, and a dog lifting its lower jaw does it with a force equal to eight times its own weight. But crabs and mussels are even more muscular. The pinch of a crab is no joking matter, considering that it is effected with a force equal to 28 times its own weight. Worse still is it to be caught between the shells of a mussel. A mussel closes its shell with a force equal to 882 times its own weight.—London Answers.

LACE TRIMMED GOWNS.

They Are Fashion's Favorites For Summer and Fall.

Gowns of lawn or linen have very little of either of those materials about them as a whole, for the goods simply serve as connecting tissue to hold together bands of lace insertion, lace motifs or masses of embroidery, which practically compose the costume. Black, white, ecru and cream laces enjoy equal success, being the preferred decoration for skirts, bodices, wraps, hats and parasols.

Entire skirts, made in one piece and shaped to the figure, are composed of renaissance guipure or luxeuil lace and are worn over underskirts of white or light silk or satin. They are of very rich appearance and cost proportionately.

Black lace is immensely worn over a white foundation and is an additional mark of the increasing tendency toward black and white combinations. White muslin trimmed with black valenciennes is also much seen.

The princess gown illustrated is of French blue crepe de chine. The skirt forms three shaped flounces, edged with an application of guipure. The upper part of the bodice and the collar have corded tucks. Over the gown is a sort of pinafore tunic of guipure, closed at the back by little bows and buckles. The guipure sleeves are lined with crepe de chine and have three cords at the top. The beret which accompanies the gown is of flowers, surrounded by a drapery of tulle and trimmed with a curled plume. Pearl gray gloves are worn.

THE MODE.

Prevailing Styles in Gowns, Jackets and Millinery.

Red is in great favor. Garlands of poppies on hats, bodices of cloth or plaited taffeta worn with white skirts and parasols of brilliant silk give the striking red note which is so joyous and pleasing, especially out of doors. In the juvenile wardrobe red reigns triumphant and is always suitable and attractive.

Jackets and boleros are rendered highly elaborate by the embroideries of chenille, beads and open designs, often mingled with spangles and lace.

The loose jacket, which is making another struggle for supremacy, meets with greater success for children than for women. Its shape, or rather shapelessness, renders it easy to put on and off, and it does not in any degree incommode its wearer nor hinder her freedom of action. A summer sack of muslin or taffeta, bordered with an application of guipure, is the accepted coat for a very little girl.

The picture illustrates a costume for a little girl. The plaided skirt is of Scotch plaid, the loose jacket of black cloth, fastened in front by a strap and two steel buttons. The sleeves are tucked at the top. The plastron and wide collar of white etamine are embroidered with red. The belt is of fawn kid. The sailor hat of mixed straw has a band of red grosgrain and a little bunch of cherries and black feathers.

Wittiest of Clubwomen.

Mrs. Mercedes Leigh and Some of Her Clever Bonmots.

Among the thousands of club women in New York city there are many clever women, but clubwomen are as a rule serious minded persons, intent on "ologies" and "isms." A humorous woman in a club is an exception as the writer, who has agonized at the reporters' table through the tragedy of many "round robins," club "debates" and learned "papers," can testify.

Now and then, however, there is an exception—a woman who not only can see the ludicrous, but can express it strikingly.

The clean cut, cool, clever sally such as made the late Miss Kate Field admired and, perhaps, a little feared, most nearly approximated by a woman whose name is known better as a student of Shakespeare and an authority on expression in speech than as a mere clubwoman. She is Mrs. Mercedes Leigh, a Southern woman by birth and belonging to a family famous for the brilliancy of its men and the wit and beauty of its women.

Several years ago she went abroad to give dramatic readings in the drawing rooms of London and made a great success on account of her wit, talent and her striking appearance. She was at his request presented to the Prince of Wales, who said afterward that she was one of the most charming American women he had ever met.

After leaving London Mrs. Leigh joined some friends who were traveling on the continent and was presented to his holiness the pope, who talked or rather questioned her in regard to American women of the intellectual class, their aims, achievements, etc.

The Fortnightly Shakespeare club, of which Mrs. Anna Randall Diehl is the president, counts Mrs. Leigh one of its valued members.

As a philanthropist her work has been as much as is possible to a busy woman. She is always ready to give her services to help a good cause and was last winter one of the actively interested in college settlement work in the slums of New York. When the American soldiers were brought to Montauk Point, N. Y., and were said to be without food and medicine, Mrs. Leigh in a few hours secured enough provisions and cordials to fill a car and with several other ladies went out to the camp where they distributed their donations to the suffering.

A witticism is never half so bright when repeated as when first said. Here are a few bonmots credited to this clever woman:

At a benefit of the Lambs club, whose members are prominent actors, some one of the party with Mrs. Leigh commented on the marriage of a very bald, very blase and very ugly but gifted actor who had just been married to one of the most beautiful actresses on the stage.

"I don't see," said the friend, inspecting the lovely actress who occupied a box with her newly made, but much married husband, "what women can see in that homely, baldheaded man."

"Ah, you know," said Mrs. Leigh, "the Lord tempers the wind to the shorn Lamb!"

A club lady of wealth but rather humble origin, approached a party of women of which Mrs. Leigh was the center at one of the club meetings. The lady had married a very successful wholesale jeweler, whose beginning was said to have been a humble shop on the Bowery. Nevertheless the club lady affected a great ambition to flaunt a pedigree.

"Oh, I must tell you," she said, as she came up to the group. "I am having car coat of arms done by Biffany in the sweetest robin's egg blue note paper. Have you ever seen our crest; it is so sweetly pretty?"

"Charming, with robin's egg blue, I'm sure."

The rich lady, after making herself generally disagreeable to the group, said superciliously:

"I've heard that is quite the latest thing to have one's coat of arms or crest stamped upon the pocketbook. I'm thinking of having it done."

"Splendid idea!" exclaimed Mrs. Leigh genially. "It would look lovely Trois bals d'or" (three gold balls).

At Richfield Springs, where Mrs. Leigh spent one summer, a young lady of the party to which Mrs. Leigh belonged, was the belle of the season. A woman of manufactured good looks and advancing years, jealous of the younger woman's popularity, remarked sarcastically to the belle in Mrs. Leigh's presence:

"It must be so nice to be handsome, dear! I'm sure we all ought to envy you!"

"Now, that's nice of you, Mrs. C.! Belle ought to appreciate your compliment, for you've been handsome so long, you ought to know!"

FASHION NOTES.

Novel Styles in Parasol Handles and Millinery Ornaments.

No expense is spared in making parasol handles. They are veritable works of art, being set with jewels and incrusted with silver and gold. The opal is largely employed as a decoration this year, after having suffered a long retirement from public favor. Large garnets set in red gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, cut rock crystal, carnelian and onyx are all used. Then there are fantastic handles made in the form of the head of a horse, swan, duck, cock or rabbit. For simple parasols to accompany plain toilets, fashion decrees Indian cashmere foulards, with an undecorated handle of wild cherry wood.

Some of the latest Parisian millinery models are ornamented with dragon flies, butterflies or beetles. These insects are greatly exaggerated in size and are of a brilliant and decorative character. In one case an enormous butterfly, placed in a chou of pink and white silk gauze, was the only trimming of the hat.

The costume illustrated is of ash gray voile. It is in the princess style and has a redingote effect over a plain lower skirt. The redingote is bordered with double bias folds and is divided into three parts by horizontal arrangements of similar folds. The bodice shows a corselet effect, adorned with bias folds, the upper part and the sleeves being of ecru guipure over cream satin. The accompanying hat is of white straw trimmed with gray ostrich plumes.

PARASOLS.

Novel Arrangements For Changing Covers and Handles.

The parasol being a necessary adjunct of the summer costume, plain or elaborate, it follows that a number of different parasols are a necessity of the wardrobe, in order that each gown may have an appropriate accompaniment. This involves much expense, as costly handles are in vogue, so an ingenious method has been devised by which the same handle may be used for several parasols. The rods are so arranged that the handle may be detached at will, thus facilitating the packing of the parasols and permitting it to be changed from one to another. Moreover, there are parasol frames so arranged that the silk covering is adjustable. It is supplied with little eyelets to catch on the tips of the ribs, while the ribs themselves have little hooks which fasten to the inside of the cover. With several covers of different colors, one may have a number of different parasols at small cost.

The costume illustrated is for a girl 12 years old. It is of thin mastic cloth, the skirt having two circular ruffles around the foot, headed by two bands of white galloon. The bodice opens over a guimpe of renaissance embroidery and is trimmed with white galloon, as are also the cloth sleeves, which have embroidery at the top to match the guimpe. The hat of rice straw is trimmed with white plumes and white ribbon.

VARIOUS NOTES.

Fashionable Fans and Other Accessories.

A new idea is the fan of mottled feathers in which the markings of the feathers are followed by tiny gold and silver spangles, which are so skillfully arranged and applied that they seem a part of the plumage.

Fans decorated with natural flowers were another novelty, but they were merely experimental, and the experiment did not prove successful, since the flowers soon faded and became a disfigurement instead of an ornament.

The pique parasols matching pique costumes are disappearing before the costumes themselves are laid aside and are being replaced by parasols of bright silk, more appropriate for cool weather.

Taffeta petticoats are trimmed with nainsook or muslin flounces enriched with lace. This is an odd combination, which will doubtless vanish with the last warm days.

The girl's costume illustrated is of silver gray poplin. The circular skirt is in one piece and is edged by a band of black passementerie, above which are two braids of insertion applied over blue silk. The bodice has a tucked yoke of blue taffeta, bordered at the collarless neck and around the edge by black passementerie. A lace bertha surrounds the yoke, and three bands of insertion like that on the skirt pass down the front of the bodice. The sleeves are trimmed to match and have a full epaulet, also trimmed. The belt is of blue surah.

Cloth gowns and those of the tailor made style have revers elaborately trimmed with mousseline de soie or with pean de soie incrusted with guipure, little ruches and similar decorations. The plastrons are made to match, of gathered mousseline, with ruches and applications.

If the costume is very simple and severe and nothing in the least frivolous is desired as an adjunct, the bolero or jacket is kept quite plain and is worn over a shirt waist of taffeta or cotton or linen goods. The white waist is at present preferred made of plain lawn or lawn with satin checks and plaits.

The jacket or bolero of tucked black taffeta is having a great vogue among fashionable women. The tucks run obliquely, and the large revers are covered with shirred mousseline de soie.

The illustration shows a princess gown of ivory faille. It is quite plain in form, with a train, and is trimmed with large applications of guipure, forming wide bands. A band of pink taffeta passes down the middle of the front, and other bands of the same material are threaded perpendicularly through the guipure. The sleeves of ivory taffeta are tight and plain and flare at the wrist. The hat which accompanies the gown is of cream straw, trimmed with black velvet, black tulle and black feathers.

Lowell as a Teacher.

In Lowell's college work the weakest part was his oratorical work. While no teacher in the university was more willing to help his boys, his habit of doing most of the reading, when a boy labored, with friction, breaking right into the reading, was not agreeable to the boy. But even in that he at least had the courage of mastery, and never shirked the hard places. His corrections and remarks were often lost from the want of clearness and open mouthed carefulness of articulation. When he spoke in public, he always made himself heard, but to a small, almost private class, speaking without effort, his modest stillness and his smothering moustache would make us wish that men's hair had been forbidden to grow forward of the corners of their mouths.—James Russell Lowell and His Friends."

FASHION HINTS.

Latest Developments of the Fashionable Wardrobe.

Cashmere is coming in again, and that is something upon which one may congratulate oneself, for no material is more serviceable or artistic. At recent garden parties and similar functions numerous gowns of fine French cashmere have appeared in soft but frank colors, ornamented with embroideries and incrustations of white, cream or ecru lace. Pastel and flax blue, pinkish mauve and fawn are among the favorite tints.

The straight sack is again to the fore, attempting to establish itself in favor. In its latest form it is a half long garment, falling below the knee. At the middle of the back and at each side it is sometimes seamed, and fans of silk are inserted. It closes with two large buttons in front.

Skirts of gowns of the rich and elaborate order are trimmed on the inside, about the foot, with ruffles, plaitings and lace.

The gown depicted is of pink silk with a black and cherry design. One flounce of lace over plain pink silk surrounds the foot, headed by a torsade of pink mousseline de soie. The bodice is fitted at the back and stretched in front and has a guipure yoke over pink silk, with a trimming of pink mousseline tornades. The sleeves have guipure tops, and the black velvet belt is fastened with ornamental slides. The pink straw hat is trimmed with green feathers and pink tulle.

ACCESSORIES.

Sashes, Wraps and Hats For Fashionable Wear.

Soft scarf sashes of crepe de chine, with fringed ends, are much worn with thin gowns.

Evening wraps are extremely elaborate and luxurious. The cape, which is long at the back and short in front, with the fronts much curved, is the favorite form and is lavishly trimmed both inside and outside, the lining usually consisting of puffs, fine plaitings and ruffles of lace.

Shepherdess hats are favorites for great occasions even, and to carry out the idea of their name they are decorated with heads of grain and such rural flowers as bluets, wild roses, periwinkles and poppies. Black and white plumes, however, are mingled with the flowers, and the hat is far from being of the simple order its name would indicate.

The directoire hat has established its position and will be much worn during the winter with the long redingote and the cape of the same period, which are to be revived also.

The picture shows a directoire hat which will give some idea of the fashion which will soon be seen in felt and velvet. This hat is of pink straw, the high crown being encircled by a brim consisting of five large tabs, lined with pink mousseline de soie. Black velvet ribbons are crossed around the crown, fastened at the side by jewels and crossed again over the hair, forming strings which are secured in front under a chou with long ends. Black plumes complete the additional trimming.

A Rise Grotto.

The famous blue grotto of Capri has a rival in Minnesota. It occurs in a lake on the shore of which there is a cavern of white limestone flooded with water. A swimmer enters the cave and, turning to look outward, sees the most beautiful shades of green and blue in the water and a silvery sheen over his submerged limbs.

WOMEN AND HOME

A Rare Honor.

Elizabeth Thompson, who died recently, was the only woman to whom the privileges of the floor of Congress were ever granted.

The honor was paid to her when she presented to the Government Francis B. Carpenter's painting, "Signing of the Emancipation Proclamation by Lincoln."

Mrs. Thompson was the widow of Thomas Thompson, a Boston million-aire and philanthropist. She started a town in the Rocky Mountains in which every resident received a free tract of land. Her own benefactions were numbered by the thousands.

The probate court if Kansas City recently decided she was insane, and her property was placed in the hands of a committee.

She was seventy-eight years old at the time of her death.

Danger in the Stamp Box.

A girl I know is betrothed to a young officer of the navy and as his birthday is near at hand, she has bought a pretty little stamp box in silver to give to him, but she is not going to give to him after all.

"Daughter," her father said to her, "if you write that young man will never give him a stamp box. You couldn't give him anything more dangerous. A man would better carry dynamite than stamps. One of the bravest officers in the navy has been for twenty years paying the penalty of his folly in carrying stamps. Everybody knows who he is. Years ago he received an order from the department which displeased him very much. He knew to whom he owed it, and at himself chiefly became slight and expressed himself frankly on paper to the man he blamed for the obnoxious order. He had a stamp, so he sent the letter off in the night's mail. If he hadn't had a stamp he would not have mailed the letter until morning, and if he had kept it till morning he'd might have sent it at all, and he would not have paid the penalty of 'sassing' the department. Don't send the young man a stamp box. The office I've been telling you about says that his experience taught him never to carry stamps, but the trouble about the wisdom of experience begins is that it usually comes too late to be of any use. Don't encourage the young man to carry stamps. It isn't safe."—Washington Post.

STRAIGHT HAIR.

The Young Lady Who Has It Is Now Quite In Vogue.

The miserable helpless young person who has been in the habit of feeling that it was a social iniquity to appear in public without having first tortured her every straight tress into some artificial curliness is released from bondage this fall, and may wear her hair according to Nature's own suggestion without the slightest sense of nervous apprehension.

The very slender-faced girl wears her straight locks in a loose pompadour that may part or lie flat or do anything that does not suggest "curl" or curling irons; and the girl with dimples and roses parts her straight set of straight hair in the middle, brushes it smoothly back, and does it in a braided coil at the back of her head.

It is absolutely essential that straight hair dressed plain should be beautifully groomed, which means frequent washing, brushing, and the utmost neatness of arrangement to bring about the crisp, fresh prettiness of which it is capable.

The straight-haired girl's hair is easily dressed, and it is removed that she is saved bother, for neither wind nor weather disturbs hair and in consequence her peace of mind.

Dangers of the Cold Bath.

A cold bath should be taken with the greatest discrimination, and delicate girls and women should never embark upon that enterprise without medical sanction. Cold bathing in the early morning is beneficial only to those who have sufficient vital energy and nervous force to insure good reaction, with no subsequent languor or lassitude. You may feel refreshed immediately after your bath, but should get up and languid two or three hours after it. When this occurs it is conclusive evidence against the practice, that the blood is in an imbalance of heat and blood ,who are lymphatic or sluggish in temperament, and whose nervous force is not depleted, can take the morning cold bath to advantage. Others, who are thin, and slight, whose hands and feet become cold and clammy on the slightest provocation, who digest fod slowly and assimilate it with difficulty, should avoid early morning bathing. For all such a tepid bath in the middle of the day (but not within two hours after a meal) or before retiring at night is far more desirable, and it should be followed by rest of body and brain till sguable conditions of circulation are re-established.

MEISSONIER.

Way in Which the Great Painter Did His Work.

The Contemporary Review has some reminiscences of the great French artist Meissonier, given by Verestchagin.

Everybody, says M Verestchagin, is aware of the conscientious way in which Meissonier executed his work, but few know the labor and expense he bestowed on the preparation for it. I remembered, for instance, his painting a horseman, dressed in the 16th century, passing along a deserted road in a strong wind. The cloak was flowing and the head of the rider, with its slender cloak, hat, and sparred boots were also miniature masterpieces, executed after drawings of the period. In order to get the folds of the twisting cloak it was dipped into thin glue, and that it stiffened in its proper pose. In this respect everything was ingeniously fitted up so as to insure the greatest possible perfection of the picture, and I showed, at any rate, very uncommon demands upon the artist's skill.

"But how did you paint the snowy road in your picture of Napoleon in 1814'?" I asked him. In reply, he picked out from under the table a low platform, about three feet and a half square, and said: "On this I prepared all that was required—snow, mud, and ruts. I kneaded the clay, and pushed across it this or that implement several times, up and down. With a shod hoof I then pressed the marks of the horses' feet; I strewed flour over it, pushed the cannon across it, and then continued to do so until I obtained the semblance of a real road. Then I salted it, and the road was ready. "What did you salt it for?" I enquired the brilliancy of the snow. Why do you smile? How else could you do it?" It was very ingenious," I answered. "Je vous l'accorde," he complacently. But, if I had been you, I should have gone to Russia, where nearly every road is dug up in the way you represented, and should have got ready from nature." "Yes! But nous autres Parisiens do not move about so easily."

The Arab Horse.

An Arab cannot dispense with food altogether, like the legendary camel of travelers' tales, but his needs are few, and he will perform great feats of fire and spirits under conditions which other horses would never be able to endure. Indeed, not only can he put up with hardships, but he seems to actually deteriorates under the generous regimen which is considered necessary for other horses. Everybody has known people who have refused to believe the usual three feeds of corn to be supererogatory and have persisted in making exercise insufficient. There is probably no being so obstinately conservative as an English coachman, and, even when he finds a horse grow utterly unserviceable, he is not to be convinced that the simple cause is lack of exercise and exuberance of feeding. The fact is, an Arab is generally high spirited and so difficult to tire that even a single feed of corn is excessive unless he is being subjected to exceptionally hard work. He will answer good management as a hunter if his diet be restricted to hay or even to grass, and in the summer time he is most satisfactory if he has the run of a paddock, where he can choose his own food and exercise. So far, the quality of the normal Arab is very like.

What a picked horse can do when put upon his mettle almost baffles belief. An officer, recently returned from the Soudan, relates that after a ride of 100 miles, his horse showed no signs of work, though he had cast all his shoes before accomplishing a quarter of the journey. Both his companion's horses had died, and the others had suffered severely. Again, it was an Arab of 14.2½, which carried ten stone six and covered a mile race at Fesrozepore in twenty-five minutes, a feat of endurance probably unequaled in equine annals. And Lord Roberts can bear testimony to the powers of the Arab which carried him through all his campaigns during twenty-five years and, alone among the horses of history, received official authority to wear the Afghan medal with four clasps. Such qualities are worth insisting upon at the War Office and should be cut to the solution of many problems of economy and dispatch in the transport service.—Saturday Review.

Nerves and Pianos.

Piano playing, particularly by young women of no special musical taste, sensitive, and not strong, is attacked by the Medical News and the British Medical Journal as the cause of many nervous troubles. Out of 1,000 girls devoted to piano practice observed by Dr. Waetzhold, 600 had grave signs of chlorosis, and of 1,000 others put into a similar environment only 200 developed such symptoms. "There is no doubt," says the official News, "that the foundation of many a persistent neurasthenia in after life can be traced to the nerve storms incident to musical training of the time when nature demanded rest, not excitement." Very many more girls have been broken down by undue attention to music than the college authorities think, for very young and very sensitive girls there is overwhelming medical evidence that the pernicious habit of requiring musical study of almost every girl does infinite harm.

TRUNK PACKING.

A Few Hints Concerning a Neglected Art.

First get together near the trunk everything that is to go in it, classified in piles, according to kind, shoes to one pile, hose in another, underwear in another, etc. After you have collected all that you desire, stop and think a few minutes to see if you haven't forgot to get out some very necessary thing that you will miss almost as soon as you arrive. It is a good plan after having taken out all your things to go over to your drawers and closets again, in case you have overlooked something that will catch your eye the second time.

A stack of tissue paper is necessary for complete and proper packing, as so many things require wrapping. All shoes should be carefully dusted, stuffed with tissue paper to preserve their shape and put in the bottom of the trunk, one next to the other in the art of packing away, stood her shoes and slippers—after wrapping—in the four corners of the trunk to fill up the space which is always to be found in the corners, besides, she asserted it held the centre in position better.

Put in first all the underwear, then all the heavy cloth skirts and suits, and underskirts, and silk petticoats as a third layer. Then after these put in the silk and gown, last waists. Dresses or waists of light dainty materials, such as organdy, mousseline de sole, lace, etc., should be packed last and go directly on top. After all is packed, cover neatly with a towel.

Everything should be folded as flat as possible. Bulky rolls or packages take up more room, look untidy and are apt to crush whatever they come in contact with.

Lay all dress hooks inside, so that when unpacking they may not catch in anything, and if not tearing, at least dragging them inconveniently from their place.

Care will repay you in packing as in everything else. Each frill, bow and fold should be laid just so. Put tissue paper in the sleeves, lay the same good friend of packers between the bows, and stuff out the loops on your hats. After the hats have been put in position in their compartment, tuck tissue paper around and over them.

Put all your trifling belongings in the tray of the trunk, and if your trunk has ground skeleton tray it is a good place for your best waists with a towel laid between each one. Hat pins may be more easily found if stuck into a piece of cloth or flannel.

The woman who really wants to look her best and will take the trouble to accomplish it, should put a small one inch wood sleeve and small iron in her trunk, particularly if going to sojourn at the seashore. These will keep your gowns, laces, ribbons and all trimmings in good condition yet take up little room. A small handled saucepan to make a cup of tea, heat water, etc., is another comfort in these days of economy to its size and the room it takes up.

Crisp Slices of Bacon.

The crisp, delicious slices of bacon that are the features of so many appetizing dishes may be had by turning each slice every minute over a hot fire in a pan large enough so that the slices shall not touch, and then as soon as delicately brown on both sides, lift from the pan on to a sheet of butcher's coarse wrapping paper (save it for the purpose when it comes from the market), clean, and allow the bacon to drain upon it in the oven for another minute.

Cooking With Sugar.

Some fruits never seem to get sweet when cooked with sugar. The trouble is ordinary brown sugar has been heated with certain fruit acids is converted to grape sugar. This sugar has only one-third the sweetening power of cane sugar, and so a real deal is required. This can be done by putting in a little baking powder with the sugar, and this will so neutralize the acids of the fruit as to prevent the conversion of cane sugar into grape sugar.

A MODERN COLOSSUS.

Proposed Monster Statue of Cadillac To Be Erected at Detroit.

IN HONOR OF FOUNDER.

City Council Considering the Proposal to Place the Gigantic Counterfeit Presentment on Belle Isle.

The Dome of the Head Will Rise Two Hundred and Fifty Feet Above the Ground—Will Have Elevators Inside and Numerous Rooms and Galleries.

A giant statue of Cadillac, the founder of Detroit, probably will be a leading feature of the exhibition which that city is to give in honor of its bicentenary. A plan is under consideration by the city's council by which the statue, 250 feet high, is to be erected on Belle Isle, a small island in the river just opposite the city. It is to be really a great building in the shape of a man.

The proposition is to put up a large building with the outward appearance of a man, a giant statue of Cadillac This giant would represent the ideal of man, if a man could grow physically in comparison with the progress and growth of Detroit. The style of the boots of the statue will make the smallest part of the figure at the ankle about twenty-five feet through, and would make practically a plan of elevator service through the center of each leg.

The style of dress represented would make it possible to have the first floor room on floor "A," and would be called floor "A," and would be seventy-five feet in diameter. The floor next above would be called floor "B," to be about the same size with an additional room in one arm about twenty-five feet in diameter. The main room on floor "C" is to be about the same dimensions as floor "A," but with the addition of two side rooms, one in each arm of similar proportions to the side room on floor "B." Floor "D" is to be a counterpart of floor "C," with rooms about twenty feet high. Floor "F" is similar to floor "E," except that the ceiling is arched. This may be used as a restaurant. Floors "G" and "H" will be in the head. These two rooms will be about fifty feet in diameter and about twenty feet high. These may be used as an observatory and contain telescopes on pivots.

The figure of the arm to be run from the base of the structure to the main room on floor "A," in which room will be placed other elevators at convenient points connecting with the floors above. One elevator, however, is to be run from this floor direct to the top floor.

On floors "A," "B," "C" and "D" are to be placed paintings of Detroit in its Colonial days and anything else pertaining to the city and its growth. The primitive scenes are to be placed on floor "A," each room above showing progress. Floor "D" is to be an art museum, and to contain the Detroit Museum of Art and the relics and antiquities now in the museum at the Public Library.

PROPOSED CADILLAC'S STATUE COMPARED WITH A SKY SCRAPER.

The center base will be twenty-five feet high and built in the form of steps. The base is to contain all the necessary machinery, heating and plumbing apparatus. A powerful searchlight, operated by the city electric light plant, will be thrown nightly upon the structure, giving the exposition a glow.

The natural facilities afforded by Belle Isle are adapted splendidly to the plan proposed. A long bridge will connect the city and island, and upon this bridge will be a Midway similar to that of Chicago, including eating houses, booths and all the essential feature. On the island itself, with an area of forty-five acres, exposition buildings will be erected, all after the Chicago style. The Detroit exhibition will be almost a reproduction of St. Mark's Cathedral and Square in Venice, and will be done in elaborate wealth of splendid detail. Beside it will be the Doge's palace, a water theater, permitting of aquatic sports if desired. Near by will be a Venetian arch and similar features, all surrounded by a triumphal arch on one side of the waterway. The buildings will be of staff, highly colored in Venetian tints and splendidly set off by the noble beauty of the Detroit River.

REVENGE WENT ASKEW.

Johnson Planned It Out All Right, but Was Too Previous.

Mr. Jobson got home from his office at 4.15 one afternoon last week and found a note from Mrs. Jobson saying that she had gone to hear the performance of a long-hair'd pianist, and that Jo'n'd find his dinner all ready for that girl to serve it.

"That's a good thing, too," mused Mr. Jobson sulkily, when he had read the note, "that's where I've been wasting treas-headed geniuses that come over here to this country and rake in American coin dollars. Why, I'll bet all the time, wouldn't call their game at an hour that 'ud permit a toiling man's wife to be on hand at home to give him something to eat when he wants it," etc., etc.

The opportunity was too good for Mr. Jobson to miss, so he declined to eat any dinner when the servant put it on the table. Instead, he slammed on his hat and went down town. He wanted to give Mrs. Jobson a lesson. He ate an unsatisfactory dinner at a restaurant, and then poked around until it was time for a variety theatre to begin, and there he sat for two hours of poorly played billiard games in order to put in this time, and to talk with a lot of bachelors from whose ways of thinking he had departed. He was bored exceedingly by theatre time. The show bored him still more. But he stuck it out, for he wanted to get home as late as possible, the better to rub it in on Mrs. Jobson. By 11 o'clock he reflected that he had had a pretty poor sort of an evening—that his paper was unread, his favorite pipe neglected for a lot of cigars that gave him heartburn, a poor dinner, dull talk with a slew of men that he didn't want to talk to, and, finally, a tawdry, cheap variety performance that might have got a laugh out of a Hottentot, but which to him was only so much rubidgry to him now. He took in a couple more billiard games, however, after the show, and then went home a little bit disappointed, not because he cared to drink, but because he wanted Mrs. Jobson to smell his breath and realize the awful consequences of her conduct.

Mrs. Jobson was comfortably tucked in bed when Mr. Jobson got home. She had left an hour after midnight. She had not even left a light burning in the vestibule or in the bedroom. She woke up very leisurely when Mr. Jobson stalked out of the door going. She didn't say anything, however. Mr. Jobson had expected to find her up, fully dressed and in tears. He was disappointed. He was more disappointed that she didn't greet him with repinings. Mr. Jobson saw that she was likely to go to sleep again, and that he was ceasing to be of use at all by being haughty and keeping still. So he cleared his throat and said:

"Well, I've been to the Grieg Concerto in C minor with his hair, and how was it?"

There was a lot of sarcasm in the way Mr. Jobson said that, but it was lost on Mrs. Jobson.

Mrs. Jobson didn't turn over at all.

"What are you talking about?" she inquired, sleepily.

"I want to know if that Dutchman that I'm giving a free front row party of serving a meal to your husband after his day of grinding labor gave you your money's worth; also if you think that's a square deal to do a trick with anybody by these methods, hey?"

"Oh, the recital—that's what you're speaking of, isn't it?" said Mrs. Jobson, sweetly. "Well, I didn't go. I had intended to go when I started out shopping in the morning, and left the note for you telling you so, but I thought it might please you to stay away from dinner, and so when I concluded my shopping, about 4 o'clock this afternoon, I decided not to go to the recital. The Fourteenth street car that brought me uptown passed the car that took you downtown. I saw you on the open platform, and wondered why you were going in that direction. I suppose you had to go back to your office to work. It's shameful the way they're overworking you, poor old thing," and then Mrs. Jobson, who knew that Mr. Jobson hadn't been working at his office, turned over and subsided into dreamy slumber.

"You can't beat 'em," thought Mr. Jobson, when he got into bed. He was thinking of women in general—Washington Star.

It Was Supremely Funny.

"Haw, haw, haw," laughed the Englishman. "Funniest joke I ever heard."

"What is it?" asked the American.

"Why, a man got up one morning and found that he was dead, so he asked his wife what had become of it, and she said it had disappeared at 9 o'clock."

"I don't see anything so funny about that."

"Don't you? Why—why—neither do I now. Thought it was awful funny when I heard it, too. I——. Oh, yes, now I know. She said it went off at 9 o'clock. Haw, haw, haw!"—Chicago Post.

It Talked Louder.

"Yes," he said in those deep, mellow tones which he knew so well how to enable in a roar; "yes, I have gone into vaudeville. I do an act with a sarbrette and a trained dog. I'm a ventriloquist you will say. It is debasing to my dreams of high art. I will not contradict you. But whither was my artistic fancy leading me? Think on that. High art is soul convincing in its way, but here is something that talks still more eloquently."

He put down with his open palm upon his pocket.

As he did so there came forth the pleasant jingle of many coins.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Boarding House Conundrum.

"When is a calf like a hen in hot weather?" inquired the facetious boarder, pressing nobody in particular.

"I don't know," replied the landlady, "please tell us."

"When it is a chicken stew," was the reminder. And a deep hush fell upon the assemblage.—New York Journal.

GEN. FORREST'S ABILITY.

Gen. Sherman Called Him the Greatest Man in the Civil War.

It is related of General Nathan Bedford Forrest that on one occasion a loquacious widow asked him why his beard was still black while his hair was turning gray. General Forrest answered that he could give no explanation unless that "he had used his brain a little more than his jaw." It was this quality that made General Forrest one of the greatest always to know what I was doing or intended to do, while I am free to confess I could never tell or form any satisfactory idea of what he was trying to accomplish.

Lord Wolseley, commander of the British army, wrote of him: "Forrest had no military education, and by sheer force of military genius, to teach him how he should act. He was entirely ignorant of what other Generals in previous wars had done under very similar circumstances. What he lacked in book lore was to a large extent compensated for by the soundness of his judgment upon all occasions, and by his power of thinking and reasoning with great rapidity under fire. Inspired with true military instinct, he was verily nature's soldier. 'In war,' said Napoleon, 'men are nothing; a man is everything!' It will be difficult to find a stronger corroboration of this maxim than is to be found in the history of General Forrest's operations."

In the firm belief that General Forrest was one of the great military geniuses of the century, Dr. John Wyeth has prepared a biography, which is not only the record of Forrest's memorable and picturesque life, but also a comprehensible narrative of his dashing raids in the most important campaigns of the war.

Milking the Reindeer.

With a good deal of running, gesturing, and, shouting the herd was finally brought into the inclosure, only a few of the wildest animals escaping over the fell, past some of the little children. Rushing into the inclosure in an unbroken stream of more than a thousand animals, the herd did not cease running—the reindeer is always on the move, except at its regular resting times—until the corral circle rested against the sun. The reindeer in these circular motions always runs against the sun; if it runs with it it is a sign of disaster. In the midst of the midst of the reindeer, leaping, bounding and butting in a friendly way, while giving out their peculiar grunting sound, the picturesque Lapps and their Scandinavian friends were seen, surrounded by a thicket of horns. Our hostess, having hung her baby to a birch in the middle of the inclosure, stood outside the camp or giving salt and angelica to some of the tamest animals. The most important work was on the scene, however, were the men moving slowly about in the midst of the herd, holding the lasso behind their back in the right hand and looking sharply at the running animals.

As quick as lightning a lasso whisked through the air, the frightened animals recoiling and then increasing their speed. When the lasso had left the mark the cow was hauled in, and tied to a birch while the milking was done. So they kept on for nearly two hours. The quantity of milk yielded by each animal is very small, at the most about a teacupful, but it is of very high nutritive quality. The milking, which is by no means regular, is done, if possible, once a day. In Winter time there is, of course, no milking. To prevent the calves from sucking their mothers pieces of bone are tied into their mouths, or the udders are besmeared with tar. Some of the Lapps consider it sinful to milk the reindeer, and thus deprive the calves of their food.—The Century.

Facts Known About the Body.

The idea that the body "changes" every seven years, or at any other period, is a popular delusion. It is only necessary to read any text book of physiology to find that while it is really a constant series of changes, which proceed every minute one lives. Changes of chemical and physical kind are always going on within the body, and the very fact that one requires food daily is a proof of this. Another curious thing is the effect of heat on the body. If you were put in an oven and heated to 122 degrees Fahrenheit, all that portion of your blood called fibrinogen would coagulate. Heated to 145 degrees, many other elements of your body would grow as solid as hard-boiled egg. At 173 degrees the egg albumen would coagulate, and muscle albumen would coagulate. At 178 degrees another form of body material called serum albumen would solidify. And all this would be considerably below the temperature of boiling water, your whole body would become as solid as a piece of wood.—New York Home Journal.

Lottery Luck.

"Donnelly had great luck in a lottery investment we made. He bought $20 worth of tickets, and then, just the day before the drawing, he picked up another ticket out of the gutter. It was so soiled it was a wonder it got to be sold.

"And the ticket he found drew the big prize?"

"No, they didn't any of them draw prizes."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Why Moths Fly to Flames.

Moths fly against the candle flame because their eyes can bear only a small amount of light. When, therefore, they come within the light of a candle, their sight is overpowered and their vision confused, and as they cannot distinguish objects they pursue the light itself and fly against the flame.

The ordinary folding fan was invented in the seventh century by a Japanese artist, who derived the idea from watching a bat closing its wings.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

THE KLONDIKE ROAD

A Scotchman Tells How He Bought a Yukon Boat.

I was agreebly surprised next morning to find that I could purchase a boat from an inmate of one of the fee tents that formed Linderman Camp. I was informed that it was in first-class condition, and just capable of accommodating us and our outfit. I was pleased to hear this, although I wondered why it had not been used earlier, and was prepared to find some secret defect in her. I delayed asking the price until I had seen what sort of craft it was. I examined it carefully, but could find nothing wrong. I went into the water. It floated all right. "How much do you want for it?" "Ah, well, a month ago I could have got $250 but I'll let you have it for $150." "That's very good of you, but suppose we say $100 and call it square." After some haggling I got it for the $100 and agreed to clear out our camp, intending to load immediately. Neither Mac nor Stewart had ever seen such a boat, and it did not look very much like one. We laid some branches on the floor of the boat, so that we might bale out any leakage that appeared before it had time to do any harm. Then Sandy Dave, had got into our positions among the sacks, and Mac and Stewart were ready to push off from the bank, when, without any warning, our boat tipped over the water's edge and emptied us into the water. It then righted itself quickly, and when the last extricated ourselves from the muddy shallow, we found our boat floating beside us, the very picture of innocence. Dave had swum for the shore, and was now barking loudly, evidently thinking that the whole performance had been for his edification.

We gathered around the boat and hastily beached her to examine the damage done. She had not shipped much water, and as all the sacks of provisions, etc., were watertight, nothing had suffered injury. I saw there was nothing for it but re-erect the tent and get a blazing fire started to dry ourselves, as the icicles were already beginning to form on our chins. By the time we had the tent fixed and the stove in working order, and had had a warming effected, I realized that we could not make a start that day.

I was anxious to know why we had been so unceremoniously upset, and we soon found that the rest of the day would be spent in overhauling our tricky boat and getting her into a more seaworthy condition. At the close of dinner—at least we called it a dinner, though all our meals were the same—we unloaded our boat, ran some ballast into her, placed some three feet, of stones on her flat bottom and loaded up again. She was no longer cranky, and allowed us to go from place to place unshipping; but it was not late in the afternoon, and we had no desire for an evening cruise in unknown waters. We therefore had her to a rock on shore and left her till next morning.—Alex. Macdonald, in "Blackwood."

A Strong Brownie.

There was a little Brownie
That lived down by the sea.
He was just as cute a Brownie
As ever he could be.

And early every morning
The Brownie went to swim.
And all the little minnows
Came swimming after him.

Yes, early every morning
Before the sun arose,
This Brownie could be seen a-swimming.
And put on his clothes.

And, looking to the Eastward,
Right gravely he would say:
"Now, dear old sun, you may arise,
Indeed, indeed, you may!"

And, sure enough, each morning,
When Brownie had his swim,
The sun obeyed his wishes
And rose and shone on him.

For, do you see, the Brownie
Certainly let the sun arise
Until he was all washed and dressed,
And dried his hair and eyes!

Anecdote of Dewey.

A Washington correspondent relates the following story of Admiral Dewey, told by one of the sailors who had returned on the "Raleigh." Just before the battle of Manila, when the order was given to strip for action, the smallest powder-boy on the flagship dropped his coat overboard. He asked permission to jump after it, but was refused. He went to the other side of the ship, dropped overboard, recovered his coat, and was promptly arrested for disobedience of orders. Dewey spoke kindly to the youngster, who broke down, and said that the coat contained his mother's picture, which he had just received, and that he would die if he lost it. Dewey's eyes filled with tears; he fairly embraced the boy, and ordered that he be released, saying: "Boys who love their mothers appear to risk their lives for her picture cannot be kept in irons on this fleet."

When Broth ir Fiddles.

When brother plays the violin,
Wee Tom begins to prance;
And to and fro, and in and out,
He leads the dance.
Now right foot back; now left foot out;
And now go down the middle.
A jolly dancing class we have
When brother plays the fiddle.

Cause of the Increase.

What is the cause of the rise in Plainfield's tax rate and just who is responsible for the increase in the taxes that will be felt by every property owner in the city? Naturally the people wish answers to these questions and they are justly entitled to them. From one of the leading city officials who is thoroughly conversant with the running of the city machinery and is prominent in forming new policy therefore comes a statement which, though informally made, may be regarded as an expression of opinion of the present Republican administration now in control.

He first calls attention to the fact that the Common Council, of which he is a member, is not responsible for all the increase of fourteen points in the city tax rate. There is an increase in the county tax of two points. The jump of three points in the library tax was the result of the increased appropriations by the trustees of the Public Library. The Board of Education was responsible for a rise of three points in the city school tax.

The Council, he points out, can really be held accountable only for six points of the increase, two in the fire tax and four in the city and city lights demand. Last year the tax rate, he says, was reduced from $2.50 to $2 42. It was too great a drop, he declares, and has resulted in the necessity of going above the old mark in order to put the city in a sound financial condition. Had the tax rate remained stationary, or dropped only a point or two, there would not have been the increase this year that has caused so much unfavorable comment of the local administration.

Furthermore, he points out the many advantages that Plainfield has over and above the surrounding towns and cities where the tax rate is just as high or even higher than $2.56. Many of these are vastly better than country villages, with practically no modern improvements at all, while Plainfield has many advantages that are not to be found outside of the great cities.

Interesting Comparisons.

The Borough Council of South River, a little municipality in the southern part of Middlesex county, has just fixed the tax rate there for the coming fiscal year. The tax rate is $2.51, or just five points lower than Plainfield's new tax rate. Taking into consideration a comparison of Plainfield and that little town, it justifies the remarks of Councilman Elliot T. Barrows that Plainfield is gating a great deal more for its money than other places that pay about the same rate are.

Plainfield is a modern city with paid fire and police departments, a system of sewers, the best public schools in the State, fine roads, and a hundred other advantages that were hardly thought of in South River. The Borough of South River, on the contrary, has no police nor fire protection worth considering, fair district schools, while a good share of its roads are in such a condition that wagons sink up to their hubs in sand. And yet there is only five points difference in the tax rate.

Two big factors in South River finances are the high county and the high school tax. Property owners in Middlesex county pay $.77 on $100, where each one in Union pay but $.54 for county expenses. The school tax there is $.81 as against $.65 in Plainfield. The other items of the tax rate in South River are the State school tax, the borough tax, the poor tax and the road tax. The poor tax is more than double the figure in Plainfield. All these taxes are figured on a taxable valuation of real and personal property of $415,460.

A Newcomer.

Pennington is growing. One of the unfailing signs of its growth is the appearance of the first issue of the Pennington Post, a bright newsy sheet which has just made its debut in the newspaper world. Its publisher and proprietor is W. B. R. Mason, who has so successfully directed the career of the Bound Brook Chronicle in past years. Mr. Mason will still continue in Bound Brook. His new venture with its alliterative title has a clean, attractive appearance, much in keeping with Mr. Mason's other publication.

A View of Somerset.

The Trenton correspondent of the Philadelphia Record takes the following view of the Republican fight in Somerset county:

In Somerset county the Republicans are yet in a snarl, much to the displeasure of the State leaders, who see danger ahead unless peace is very soon restored. It is known that Senator Reed was willing to retire in the interest of harmony, providing the opposing faction would also signify a willingness to quit the field. Mr. Reed's friends would like to have Mr. Fine and they believe that they will be in a position very soon to name the next Senator from Somerset. The present Prosecutor of the Pleas, Nelson Y. Dungan, it is generally predicted, will be the Democratic nominee.

A study of the terms which the Roselle borough Council has exacted from the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company for the right to build its line through the streets of that place, to form a link in the system between Plainfield and Elizabeth, shows that they are the most advantageous secured from any trolley company in New Jersey. After the franchise has been in existence for ten years it will pay tribute to the borough on a fair and square basis—ten per cent of the gross earnings. And at the end of ninety-nine years it will revert to the municipality. In all respects the borough's interests seems to have been carefully guarded by the terms, and the people of Roselle ought to feel well satisfied with the arrangements. There is one very instructive view afforded by the terms, however, and that is the benefit to be gained by deliberate and careful dealing with the trolley promoters. Plainfield now realizes this with the excellent terms secured for the Scotch Plains extension, which, if it had been granted in a hurry, as many urged, would never have been attained.

S. D. DRAKE RESENTS ASPERSIONS CAST ON HIS METHODS.

Asks to Have a Committee From Labor Federation Look Into the Charge Made That He is Nothing But a "Land Shark."

The offer of S. D. Drake of this city to assist in the establishment of a home at Lincoln for Union workingmen, has stirred up a breeze in labor circles. At a recent meeting of the State Federation of Labor, held at Orange, a letter was read from Mr. Drake, which refuted some statements alleged to have been made by Delegate George Gehling of the Buffers' and Polishers' Union, who had referred, to Drake as a "land shark, looking to his own advantage and using the home as a bait." Mr. Drake takes exceptions to the statements contained in the letter, and asks that a committee be sent to Lincoln to prove that the reason in his offer. The reading of the letter precipitated a hot discussion. There were a number of delegates who did not hesitate to also air their views of Drake's methods of doing business. Delegate Gottlob of the Typographical Union said that if the charges against Drake were true they should be substantiated, while if they were not he believed that the Federation should do justice to Drake. After considerable discussion it was the sense of the convention that a delegate should be sent to Lincoln to investigate the charges. Delegate Corry was selected.

CAME HOME VICTORS.

Plainfield Juniors Showed Up Well in the Field Day Games at Waverly Park.

At the field-day exercises held at Waverly Monday under the auspices of the Jr. O. U. A. M., Franklin Council, of this city, came in for a share of the prizes. They won the tug-of-war by default, the other team not showing up. In the cycle race of five-men teams they secured second place, winning a silver set. The Orient team of Scotch Plains came in first. They also won the baseball game and a hand-some rug. They played two games. The first resulted in a score of 14 to 0 in favor of Franklin Council, and they won the next game by a score of 5 to 1.

MILK GOING UP.

Newark Wholesalers Notified of a Half-Cent Raise.

The five States Dairy Association has notified the wholesalers of cities of an increase of half a cent a quart on milk. The producers have been constrained to furnish milk to the creameries at from 3 to 3½ cents a quart, and about October, it is said, they will demand 4 cents a quart.

If they succeed in pressing their demands so that the acceptance of the terms by the retailers becomes necessary, the local dealers say the price to the consumers must necessarily be advanced.

The association controls 15,000 cans a day, amounting to 600,000 quarts.

PROFIT AND FUN.

[A STORY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.]

"This is what I call fun, boys," said Frank Curtis, as he sat down with the other boys to their meal in the tent. They had been three days on the edge of the wooded hills on a pretty inland lake, but as their dishes had apt come before, they had just to-day gotten nicely settled. "Schools all right, but what a relief to be away from civilization where we don't have so many rules. We are free, free as the wind. Two weeks of fun, boys, whoop la!"

"Lots of fun came from no iron-tailed cow, that's sure. O, it's good!" exclaimed one of the hungriest, if one boy at camp would be hungrier than another. "Of course, you got it at the farmhouse, Stan."

"Yes," answered Stanley Clark, the steady, sober one.

The boys bought their milk and eggs and vegetables at the only farmhouse in sight, of Farmer and Mrs. Brown, a two year old baby and "Willy" would do anything for the boys but let them hunt in their woods.

"That makes me think," added Stanley, "Mrs. Brown asked me to-day if we boys would not like to give an entertainment or lawn 'fest,' as she called it, to raise money to paint their church on the yonder hill."

"They haven't any nerve, have they?" "What do we know about lawn fetes? The girls always get them up. We go and enjoy ourselves."

"I'll tell you, boys," began Joe Taylor, when the hubbub had subsided, "they've been mighty good to us, I'll admit. Don't know what we'd done if they hadn't lent us a frying-pan and a pail and what-not. But we are on a vacation at the time that's in it," as Frank says; getting up an entertainment is too much like work."

"That's what I say," assented most of the boys.

"But see here," said Stanley, "the idea stuck me as rather ridiculous at first, but as I was coming back from there I thought maybe it wasn't so far out of the question after all. Anyway, we ought not to be so busy having a good time that we can't do a good turn to someone else. And you know what we promised Miss Norton, boys."

On the Sunday before the boys had promised their Sunday-school teacher that they would try to do something helpful during the first week of their vacation.

"Why, so," said one of the boys thoughtfully. "Well, what could we do to amuse the assembled natives?"

"Why, you could play the mandolin, for one good thing," replied Stanley. "We'll revive the moonlight quartet, and Joe can please any crowd with his take-offs and impersonations. You know I told Farmer Brown I'd be a first-class party once, and I'll do that."

"That's so," said one of the boys thoughtfully. "Well, what could we do to amuse the assembled natives?"

"Why, you could play the mandolin, for one good thing," replied Stanley. "We'll revive the moonlight quartet, and Joe can please any crowd with his take-offs and impersonations. You know I told Farmer Brown I'd be a first-class party once, and I'll do that."

One by one the boys agreed to enter into it. It might be fun, too.

Mrs. Brown's face lit up with genuine pleasure when Stanley told her the boys would do what they could.

That afternoon while the campers went fishing, Mrs. Brown hitched up old Dolly and drove from house to house telling the neighbors that "them lads from the city is getting up a fine entertainment for the next night, and the proceeds is agoing for to paint the church. They can sing just beautiful, for I hear 'em evenings, and they is such polite and obliging lads, too."

The next day she was busy getting ready her thick maple syrup, which they would sell hot, and making popcorn balls.

Meantime the moonlight quartet had run over a few of its well worn harmonies, and had found itself in good voice. Frank was hard to tune up his mandolin and then say "greased he didn't need to practice." Roy Ellis even consented to go through some of his acrobatic gymnastics which had won the admiration of the boys at school. They hung Chinese lanterns in the tent and in the trees, which they had brought from home.

The moon having risen the people began to arrive; some on foot, some in wagons and others in two-seaters. They looked a little curious at the boys at first, wondering what they were going to do. But after Frank had played his mandolin and Joe had recited one of his comical pieces, the boys were sure their listeners were pleased, for they were generous with their encores.

"Here are your nice fresh popcorn balls, five cents apiece, two for ten," was heard in the familiar voice of George Wood, who had earned the name of "Stiff" at school on account of his usual dignity of manner.

"This way to have your fortune told, all for 10 cents. If they don't come true you'll have your money back."

"Hot syrup, hot, thick maple syrup, just one burn of sugaring, every third dish free," came a voice from the tent.

"I believe it's a go," said one boy to another, as the quartet came together to favor their audience with another selection. "And it's great fun for us, too."

When, with Mr. Brown, the boys counted up the money afterward, they could hardly believe they had cleared over nine dollars.

"I hope we can camp again next year," exclaimed Frank to some of the boys who had gathered in Joe's room one winter evening.

"So say we all of us. I often think of those jolly days when I am pegging away at this Latin," said Joe, as he threw the book on the bed. "But, do you know, I like to think of the lawn 'feet' best of all."—Ohio Farmer.

FOR A GOOD APPETITE

A FEW POINTS AS TO SECURING A RELISH FOR WHAT IS EATEN.

Things to Eat and How to Eat Them—The Breakfast Should Be the Most Substantial Meal of the Day—Three Meals a Day Necessary for Working Women.

A good appetite, and a relish for what is eaten, may be secured by regular living. The system will accommodate itself to the habit of eating two, three or more meals daily if taken with regularity and if eating between meals is scrupulously avoided. The stomach, unlike the lungs and heart, requires rest to recuperate from its imposed labor of supplying the necessary gastric juices for the proper digestion of foods, and the longer rest, between meals, it is allowed the better will be the work performed.

For the general working woman three meals a day are necessary, and would be eaten with appetite and relish if a little knowledge of the science of living were added.

In the first place, the morning meal should be the most substantial, because at this time of the day the vital force is greatest and digestion is carried on with least effort; the noon meal might consist of sandwiches and tea or milk, in preference to ice cream, eclairs, pies, etc., and the evening meal should be composed of nourishing, easily-digested food.

Second, the stomach should not be forced to gorge itself, and the appetite should interpret its demand, while regularity must be insisted upon.

And last, flour, butter, and sugar, foods rich in carbon, supply but a part of the necessary elements for making and keeping in good condition the blood, bones and muscles. Food containing lime, iron, phosphorous are equally necessary, and meals combining these elements would be enjoyed while being a variety of proper foods can be continually obtained.

Eat slowly, masticate your food properly, eat at regular times in cheerful company, and appetite and relish, though they may be strangers to you at present, can be readily cultivated and kept.

When On a Visit.

Don't object to pleasures given you during the visit.

Don't belate at meals or come down when the meal is nearly finished.

Don't correct the children of your hostess, nor resent this, and besides it is none of your business.

Don't give orders to servants in other people's houses or ask suggestions of an unpleasant character.

Don't leave umbrellas, overshoes, hats and coats everywhere. A visitor without order who neglects to keep her belongings in her own room is a trial of the worst sort.

Don't gossip, repeat scandals and tell anecdotes that disparage other women. Let no man or woman be a butt for your brilliancy, however interesting.

Don't when visiting, compare your children with other people's children. Every swan thinks its own the whitest.

Don't entertain your friends with the short comings of your family. It always becomes tiresome and dull. Every one, big and little, speaks for himself, and very often clever children are exceedingly disagreeable.

Don't fail in courtesies of any kind. There are maxims of good breeding and little rules which constitute the foundation of good manners.

Paste for Scrap Books.

A fine paste for scrap books can be made from alum water and flour, one and a half teaspoonfuls of powdered alum dissolved in enough cold water to make a pint of paste. Pour the water, when the alum is dissolved, on enough flour to thicken it as stiff as common paste. Bring it to a boil, stir all the time, and when done add a few drops of oil of cloves. The alum prevents fermentation, and the oil of cloves prevents or destroys all vegetable mold.

Cameos.

Popular favor is inclining toward cameos and women are hunting up old family treasures. The origin of cameo cutting is lost in antiquity, but it is thought to have preceded sculpture or painting. The Chaldeans used gems or stones for seals. Most cameos are cut from stones comprised of two or more layers much of which comes from India. If the stone is black and white it is called onyx.

Baby Carriages.

Baby carriages are changed into cradles by a new device, consisting of a pair of rockers connected by cross bars, with slots cut in the bars, in which the axles of the carriages are placed to prevent them from turning while the carriage is being rocked.

Dress-Suit Cases.

A dress-suit case has a distingue air that the leather lacking in a pasteboard box, but many a woman knows to her sorrow that her pride has made her rumple her frock in magnifying the virtue of the former and ignoring the possibilities of the latter.

To Remove Mildew.

Mildew is removed by rubbing the part with some chalk or salt, wetting and exposing it to the sun. This should be repeated several times and then the articles must be rinsed well in cold water.

Diamonds.

Of all the precious metals and gems mined the diamond still holds first place in value. Diamonds are worth from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 per ton. Sapphires are next in value.

FROLIC OF THE GERMANS.

Picnic Held at Emery's Pleasure Garden—Turning by the Athletic Section.

The Plainfield Geesang and Turn Verein held a picnic and summer nights festival Monday afternoon and evening at Emery's pleasure garden, Scotch Plains, and there was a large crowd in attendance. Music was furnished by Prof. Wendel's orchestra, of Bound Brook. The committee in charge that made the affair a success consisted of M. Menzenbach, Herman Klinsman, Lawrence Fahn, Chas. Myers, Sr., Charles Myers, Jr., Julius Sink and Augustus Wolfe.

ANOTHER CANDIDATE FOR COUNTY CLERK

Charles Halsey, of Elizabeth, in Line for Nomination.

CLAIMS ELIZABETH VOTES.

HIS NOMINATION IS SAID TO BE OPPOSED BY SENATOR KEAN.

Squier and Howard Are Still After It—Houston is Fighting for Promised Shrievalty Nomination—Elizabethan Says Plainfield's Best Show is for County Clerk—Should Have a "Dark Horse."

Rumors concerning the plans of the G. O. P. in Union county are so wildly entangled that it is next to impossible to tell what is going to happen in the approaching campaign. There's really only one thing that can be asserted with any confidence and that is that the county is likely to see a lively scramble for the nominations. Who the nominees are to be it is simply impossible to tell. Every day brings forth fresh rumors from the different parts of the county which affect some part of the ticket.

The latest happening in the political arena is the rapid growth of a boom that has for its object the nomination of Charles Halsey, of Elizabeth, as County Clerk. Halsey has come out in direct opposition to Squire and Howard and, rumor has it, is gathering fresh strength every day.

An Elizabeth politician of prominence says that Halsey can secure a majority of the delegates from the city of Elizabeth in the contest with Squire. Halsey is employed in the Elizabeth Bank which is controlled by Senator Kean. Rumor has it that Kean told his employe that he had better not run, but that Halsey refused to withdraw and that the Senator then threatened to throw Halsey out of his position in the bank. If he did that, said an Elizabeth man, Halsey will win sure and it would hurt Kean.

Meanwhile Elizabeth is giving voice to all sorts of stories concerning the various candidates. One authority has it that Squire and Houston have combined and are going in to win and will thus crowd Cross off the ticket. One story says that Plainfield doesn't want any nomination this year and that Elizabeth can have County Clerk, Sheriff and Senator.

It is difficult to tell just how the various candidates stand. If promises are kept, Robert Houston will be nominated for Sheriff. But it is quite likely that they will not be kept, and B. Frank Coriell, of this city, has a fighting chance for the office. Over the County Clerkship nomination there will be a hot fight. George Squier and Clerk Howard are generally supposed to be the strongest. Halsey may win out from both of them, however. An Elizabeth man says that the fight between that trio is going to give Plainfield a splendid opportunity to put up a "dark horse" who can be selected as a compromise candidate at the last moment.

Senator Cross is certainly entitled to renomination according to the understanding on which he was first nominated, but there appears to be opposition to him right in his own city. Who would be the choice if he withdrew, it is hard to say as no Senatorial booms with the exception of that of J. Martin Roll have been sprung as yet. Roll's boom is not a very powerful one, and there is little chance of his name appearing in that capacity on the ticket.

LAMP EXPLODED.

Accident Occurred in Room Occupied by Joseph Bolden—Flames Caused $300 Loss.

A lamp in a rear bedroom on the second floor of 539 West Fourth street, exploded and set fire to the house Sunday evening, and caused damage to the amount of $500 before the flames could be extinguished. The house is owned by Albert Wilson, colored, who occupies all but one room on the second floor. That room is rented to Joseph Bolden, colored coachman for W. J. Boome, of Sycamore avenue.

Sunday night a lamp was left burning in the room. The men of the household went to church while the women gathered in the parlor downstairs. Patrolman McCarty was passing along Liberty street and discovered the fire by the smoke. He went in an alarm from box 34, corner Liberty and West Fifth streets.

The loss to the house will reach $300, which is covered by $1,200 insurance. Wilson's furniture was damaged to the amount of $100. His insurance was $500. Bolden suffered a like loss to his furniture. His insurance was $300.

BEES FOUGHT THE BOYS.

They Swarmed on a Fence Post and When Meddled With Resented With Stings.

There was a lively time Friday in the vicinity of East Fifth and Sycamore streets, caused by a swarm of Italian bees that located on a fence post at that corner. The bees troubled no one until discovered by some boys who thought it would be fun to chase them out.

The bees kept everyone in the vicinity on the jump for awhile and among those who were attacked was Marion S. Ackerman, who was passing at the time. A bee stung him in the face and caused him much pain and inconvenience. Nearly every boy who was in the racket was stung, and is now sorry that he had anything to do with stirring them up.

Chief Grant was notified of the presence of the bees and he sent James Frisbie to the scene. The latter made use of a quantity of sulphur and eventually drove the bees out of the neighborhood.

DAMAGING INSINUATIONS

Made Against Nominated Member of Election Board By City Republican Committee.

Friday the Union county board of election met at the court house for the purpose of naming local election officers for the different wards and townships.

The board was presided over by its president, P. J. Ryan. The only member absent was William C. Carr, of Elizabeth, who is at present enjoying a vacation.

The lists of names which the board is asked to appoint were presented and read. Owing to the list being far from complete a request was made that for the present the names be not made public.

A protest was received from the city Republican committee of Plainfield, objecting to the appointment of one of Plainfield's citizens, against whom certain damaging insinuations have been made. The man will be summoned before the board and be given an opportunity of being heard.

How Somerville Views Reed.

Senator Reed has been spending a portion of this week at the county seat. The Senator's family are still at Belmar and he has spent considerable time along the coast during the summer. He looks very well and does not seem to be worrying as much about politics as the newspapers would have the public believe. Senator Reed would doubtless accept a renomination by the Republicans and his friends are urging him, but he says he does not want the nomination unless it is for the best interests of the party.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

BUSY SESSION FOR LOCAL CANADA SOLONS.

Many Matters of Importance Transacted by Council.

TO BUILD TELEPHONE LINE.

IT WILL BE USED EXCLUSIVELY FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

It Has Transpired That in Building Operations B. Mills Has Encroached on Seventeen Feet of Borough Property—Purchase of New Bicycle For Marshal Was Approved.

The September meeting of the Borough Council was held Friday evening with all the members present except Councilman Rogers. After the reception of two communications, one from the Board of Education asking for the permission to locate poles and string wires for two telephones for the schools, and another from the members of Warren Engine Company inviting the Mayor and Council to be their guests at the firemen's parade to be held October 12th, the report of Collector George F. Brown was received as follows: Taxes and interest received, $449.41; special school, $30; Board of Health, $1.04; Watchung avenue assessment, $3,549.45; rent 31 Fairview avenue, $27.50; 10 Craig place, $20; 106 Duer street, $16; 70 Manning avenue, $10; bills payable, note, $1,000; total receipts, $5,192.12; disbursements, $3,766.53; cash on hand September 1st, $3,288.32.

The report of Clerk Rowley showed that $1.50 had been received from Recorder Long as fines, and $30 from Mayor Smalley as fines. The sale of stone netted $13.52, and licenses brought in $38 70. The total receipts were $88.77.

Mr. Clark, chairman, of the street committee, presented his report which showed an expenditure of $319 80 for labor on streets during August, and the use of 280 tons 920 pounds of crushed stone. The total expenditure during the month was $408.15, and there is a balance of $882 36 to the credit of the department. The macadamizing of Orchard place will cost the borough $173.50, and the property owners on that street have subscribed $115 toward it.

Mr. Clark made a statement regarding the action of the Council at the last meeting in appropriating so much money to make certain repairs to Brook avenue in accordance with a request from B. W. Mill. He said that all parties interested had investigated the matter and had learned that a map owned by the township was on file at Somerville, which was made in 1876, and showed that Mr. Mills had not followed the correct lines and had encroached upon seventeen feet of land owned by the borough. He then offered a resolution that the borough engineer make a proper survey according to the map, and make a report at the next meeting of the Council. The Council will then be able to ascertain who is in the right.

Resolutions were offered by Mr. Valiant to the effect that $1,500 be borrowed for four months, that a warrant be drawn to pay three certificates of $3,000 on account of Watchung avenue improvement, also a warrant to pay interest on the same, and that the Council deduct the amount of rent paid on the property located at 31 Fairview avenue which was bought in by the borough.

At this time there was a discussion regarding the petition from the Board of Education asking for permission to establish a telephone plant between the two schools. A resolution offered by Mr. Clark provided that the fire, water and lamp committee be authorized to grant the permission to erect the necessary two wires on the poles of the electric light company for the purpose of establishing a telephone service between the two schools, on the condition that it was to be used for school purposes only.

In connection with this Dr. Cooley, a member of the Board of Education, stated that it was not thought safe for pole to string wires on the electric light poles on account of the high voltage of electricity. He understood that according to the franchise granted the electric light company the Council reserved the right to string telephone wires on their poles.

Mayor Smalley was especially in favor of this method, as he does not care to have any more poles erected in the borough if it can be avoided.

Dr. Cooley stated that in this city the Board of Education pays $30 for each telephone in the public schools. The private line in the borough would cost $140 to construct and in two years it would pay for itself. He said that the Board of Education was perfectly willing to use electric light poles if possible. The mater will be attended to by the fire, water and lamp committee.

Mr. Burtis offered a resolution appropriating $50 for a new bicycle purchased for Chief Marshal Campbell. Mr. Valiant objected and stated that he thought the consent of the Council should have been secured before the wheel was purchased. Mayor Smalley said that he was responsible for the act, that in the absence of the chairman of the committee on license and marshals he had purchased the wheel and had had the old one repaired so that one marshal could be mounted in the evening and thus do as much work as two men on foot. The action of the Mayor was confirmed.

Mayor Smalley called the attention of Mr. Clark, chairman of the street committee, to the fact that the gas and water companies had of late opened up several streets in the borough to lay pipes and had forgot to put the streets back in as good condition as when they found them. He asked Mr. Clark to see that the companies be brought to terms. It was also reported that the electric light company had not been giving as good service as usual, and several lights were reported out. In connection with this the proper amount will be deducted from the next electric light bill.

Mr. Coddington reported a bad condition in the road on Somerset street in front of the Mayor's house where a pipe is projecting out of the ground. He said that a few nights ago a woman riding a bicycle ran into this pipe and was thrown from her wheel, and narrowly escaped severe injury. This matter will be attended to promptly. This concluded the business and the Council adjourned.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

HAIR-RAISING EXPERIENCE THAT JOSEPH THYS WENT THROUGH.

Came Within a F.w Feet of Being the Fatal Spot Where the Bolt Landed—As it Was He Was Badly Dazed by the Shock.

Joseph Thys, of Terrell road, near Scotch Plains, had an experience with a thunder bolt during the heavy shower Sunday night, which he will never forget, Mr. Thys had retired early, not feeling well, shortly before the heavy shower at 11 o'clock. He felt so bad that he arose and sat on the side of the bed. Suddenly, as Mr. Thys tells the story, he heard a report as though one hundred cannons had gone off in his room, and all about him were balls of fire, snapping and spitting. He was thrown back upon the bed unconscious and remained so for a number of minutes. When he came to he was unable to help himself or realize what had happened. After a few minutes he collected his shattered thoughts.

As soon as he began moving about he found chimney soot and splinters. An investigation of the attic found the place where the bolt had wrought the most havoc and came near ending his existence, for only six feet above where he had been sitting a large rafter of the building was splintered into a thousand pieces and three lengths of the shingles from the peak to the gutters had been cut out as clean as though done by a carpenter. The bolt passed out of the house and caught a wire, which had been stretched over the top of a picket fence. It followed the fence for over seventy-five yards splitting pickets and post in its mad flight, at the end of the fence, the bolt was lost. Whether it had spent its force or not is not known. There is no signs in the ground of where it could have struck.

SWIFT CYCLE RIDERS IN A 15-MILE RACE.

The Course Was Over County Road Westfield to Fanwood.

1,000 PEOPLE WITNESSED IT.

RAY POOLE TIED WITH EMBLETON FOR SECOND TIME PRIZE.

Peter Simmons, the Speedy Colored Rider, Broke His Pedal and Was Practically Put Out of the Race—A. R. Greene, of Plainfield, Finished Second—Thirty-eight Riders Faced the Starter.

The first annual fifteen-mile road race run over the Westfield-Fanwood course took place Monday afternoon and proved a decided success. Forty-four men were entered but only thirty-eight faced the starter.

Although the race was advertised to take place at 2:30 o'clock it was five minutes past three when the limit men, who were given five minutes handicap, were set out on their fast journey. They were Herbert Burdock, William Hyslip and Frank Ricardo, of Westfield.

Although the course was lined by about one thousand people, all near the starting point in Westfield, the course was kept pretty clear and only one man was hurt, Louis Miller, of Westfield, but he recovered his place and won third prize. Peter Simmons, of Plainfield, who rode from the fifteen minute mark with Ray Poole, also of Plainfield, broke a peddle and dropped away back. He finished, although he was so far back that his time time was not taken.

Jack Townsend, of Cranford, and Frank L. Apgar, of Madison, the last by request, were placed on scratch. Townsend rode a great race and succeeded in getting the time prize. Charles Embleton and Charles LaMatty, who now holds the silver cup which is the first prize in a series of races being run off at Scotch Plains, started from the thirty-minute mark and swapped pace in a pretty fashion, Embleton tieing Poole, of Plainfield, for the second prize. LaMatty came in two seconds behind.

A. R. Greene, of Plainfield, starting from the two and a half minute mark, surprised his friends by finishing second. Hummer, of Plainfield, who got third prize at Westfield on the Fourth of July, had a handicap of one minute but failed to finish.

The officials of the race were: Referee, Dr. Fred A. Kinch, local counsel of the L. A. W.; starter, Joseph Vought; handicapper, R. M. Stickle; timers, John F. Dorvall, Addison Clark, Isaac Seeley; judges, William Bogert, Jr., Fred. Condit, William Goltra, George Sorter, Oliver Collins; clerk of the course, William L. Embleton; marshal, John M. C. Marsh. The race was arranged and run under the direction of William K. Embleton and William Goltra.

The first thirteen men to finish and their times are given below:

William Hyslip, Westfield	42:10
R. Greene, Plainfield	42:35
Louis Miller, Westfield	42:50
Herbert Burdock, Westfield	43:15
Jack Townsend, Cranford	42:46.30
James O'Donnell, Westfield	43:18
Frank L. Apgar, Madison	42:40
Charles Embleton, Westfield	39:20
Charles LaMatty, Plainfield	39:22
J. A. LeFlan, Morristown	41:35
A. R. Hummer, Newark	41:45
Jack Townsend, Cranford	39:24
Ray Poole, Plainfield	39:24

The prizes, which were delivered to the winners directly after the race, were: First, time, Spalding bicycle; second, time, pair of tires; first, place, gold watch; second, silver watch; third, camera; fourth, set of boxing gloves; fifth, necktie case; sixth, sweater.

If not, drink Grain-O—made from pure grains. Children may drink it freely. The first time I made Grain-O I did not like it but after using it for one week nothing would induce me to go back to coffee. It nourishes and feeds the system. The children can drink it freely with great benefit. It is the strengthening substance of pure grains. Get a package today from your grocer, follow the directions in making it and you will have a delicious and healthful table beverage for old and young. 15 and 25c.

OUTING OF UNION COUNTY DEMOCRATS.

Three Hundred Of the Faithful Went to Whitestone.

A VERY PLEASANT TIME.

LITTLE GOSSIP ABOUT PERSONEL OF COUNTY TICKET.

The Sail Was a Fine One, the Committee Arranging Every Detail For Pleasure of the Guests—State Chairman Gourley on Hand, and Delivered an Enthusiastic Talk For Democracy's Success.

The second annual outing of the Union county Democrats, under the auspices of the Elizabeth city executive committee of that party, was held Thursday, the programme being made up of a fine sail up the East River and Long Island Sound to Whitestone, where three hours were spent enjoying a dinner and a stroll about the grounds connected with Stimmel's hotel. The event was considered to be the opening of the campaign among the Democrats in Union county. Incidentally, it was assumed that there would numerous launchings of booms for candidacies at the hands of the county convention, but in reality there was but very little gossip about the personel of the local ticket this fall.

The start was made from Elizabethport on the steamer Isabel at 10:30 o'clock, the committee in charge of the affair and the guests having previously gathered at the Clark Pavilion in Elizabeth, going from there in special trolley cars. Major Collins, chairman of the city executive committee, and State Committeeman Peter Egenoff were in direct charge of the affair. They looked after the guests in a most hospitable manner, and allowed no detail to be passed that might add to the festivity of the occasion.

When the steamer pulled out from the dock there were fully 300 on board, mostly all from Elizabeth. Among some of the distinguished faces to be seen were those of State Chairman Gourley, of Paterson; Congressman Salmon, of the Fourth District; State Senator Barber, of Belvidere; former Congressman Dunn, of Elizabeth; James E. Martine, of Plainfield; former Senator Keys, of Somerville, and nearly every prominent office holder in Elizabeth.

Coming up the New York bay the yacht "Shamrock," which is to be in the international yacht race, was passed, and in order to give the guests a splendid chance to see the trim craft the "Isabel" made a complete circle around her, the band meanwhile playing "The Wearing of the Green" and "God Save the Queen."

The sail up the river to Whitestone was a very pleasant one, and after cruising around up in the Sound for an hour the landing was made at Whitestone. After the party had their photograph taken in a group, the dinner was served. Brief addresses followed, Major Collins being very felicitous as toast-master. The essential features of the short talks were the scoring of the present National administration and the need of a more thorough party organization in New Jersey.

Congressman Salmon spoke briefly and moderately against the idea of expansion, and was followed by State Chairman Gourley. Mr. Gourley dwelt particularly on the need of better organization for the Democratic party in New Jersey, and stated that the changing of four votes in every district in New Jersey last fall would have meant a Democratic victory. Mr. Gourley said that it was the purpose of the State Committee to bring about an organization that would marshal these few votes needed, and if every section could show as representative class of Democrats as he saw assembled together at the outing he felt assured that New Jersey would soon regain her old place in the Democratic column.

"Farmer Orator" Martine was next called upon, and in one of his enthusiastic talks aroused the Democratic ardor in all who heard him. Mr. Martine declared that the money question was still unsettled and would be one of the leading issues of the campaign in 1900.

City Attorney Connoly and Acting Mayor Ryan, of Elizabeth, followed in brief talks, after which the guests adjourned to the surrounding grounds where they whiled away an hour and a half in pleasant chat with one another.

The return trip was started at 6 o'clock, the sail to Elizabethport being exhilerating one at that time of night.

Those who went on the outing from Plainfield were James E. Martine, P. J. Reville, John Rafferty and W. W. St. John.

Elmer Cutting, of this city, has gone to New Hampshire, his former home, where he will visit for a time.

James Blair, of Somerset street, is recovering from his severe illness, and is now able to sit up each day.

Miss Grace Rowland, of East Second street, has returned from a visit with Hunterdon county relatives.

GEN. OTIS AT MANILA

He's Never Caught Off His Guard and When He Fights It's for Keeps.

Major-Gen. Elwell S. Otis, U. S. V., has a reputation throughout the army as one of the ablest all-around general officers in the service.

When the civil war began Gen. Otis, who was born in Maryland, had finished his college course and had just been admitted to the bar in New York. He went to the front as a Captain of the Eighth New York infantry, and that was in September, 1862. In a little more than a year he was Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment, and he was honorably mustered out on Jan. 24, 1865. In the following March he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers by brevet. During the war he had been brevetted for gallant and meritorious services at the battles of Spottsylvania and Chapel House, during the Peninsular campaign. In July, 1866, he was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Twenty-second infantry, and he served with that regiment until 1880, when he was made colonel and transferred to the Twentieth infantry. In 1893 he was made a Brigadier-General.

When the war with Spain began he was the ranking officer of the army in command of the Department of Colorado. When Shafter was ordered to Tampa, Gen. Otis was assigned to the Department of California, with headquarters at San Francisco, and there he remained until he sailed for the Philippines in command of the second expedition. All of his service shows him well tells how Gen. Otis happened to be chosen as Gen. Merritt's chief lieutenant. The work of the court-martial that tried Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, Corps of Engineers, had just been completed. Gen. Otis was the President of that court, having been selected both because he was a lawyer by profession and because he was known to have a judicial mind.

The President's choice of the man who was to be second in command in the Philippines might come into closer contact with the Spaniards than the commander-in-chief, wanted a man of tact and firmness, and he wanted a man capable of quickly whipping into shape the volunteers, who were to be majority of our army in the Philippines. He asked to have a man recommended to him. Gen. Otis's was the one name considered after several had been passed. Gen. Merritt was one of Gen. Otis's strongest supporters and Gen. Otis was selected.

Gen. Otis has been married twice, and has two daughters by his first wife, who died several years ago. One of the daughters is married. His second wife was the widow of Col. McAllister of the Quartermaster-General's department. Gen. Otis moves like a very nervous man. He appears, when walking, to be in a hurry. Yet when he has any question under consideration, he is a man of infinite patience and attention to detail. He has shown this characteristic particularly when sitting on court-martials. It is said of him that he has presided over more of these courts than any other officer in the army.

He is a man of great personal bravery and great determination. In 1877, when he was attached to the Twenty-second infantry, Gen. Otis was carrying on a campaign against Sitting Bull and the hostile Sioux. His headquarters were at what is now Fort Keogh, Montana. Otis, with 130 men, had been ordered to take up a supply train to Gen. Miles from a point several miles south of the General's headquarters. On the way and while passing through a ravine Otis and his train fell in with Sitting Bull and several hundred Sioux. The Sioux chief ordered Otis to turn over the train and surrender his command.

"That isn't what I'm here for," was Otis's reply. "My chief wants these supplies. I intend to take them to him, and if you don't get out of the way I'll remove you."

The Sioux outnumbered the whites about six to one. They began to surround Otis's little band. Leaving his train, with a few men as a rear guard, Otis advanced. The fighting lasted all that day and the next. Before sunset of the second day Sitting Bull had been driven back, but 100 of his braves had been killed and many others had been wounded. Otis lost about a dozen in killed and wounded. For this Sioux fight Otis delivered his supplies to Gen. Miles.

As a post commander, Otis was considered the most exacting man in the army. It can be understood that wherever Otis was in command, there would be the best "policed" or neatest post in the department. A department commander once said of him:

"That man Otis spends more time scrubbing and polishing and drilling his men than any officer in the service."

Owing to this characteristic, he was attached to the Inspector-General's office for a time, and so exacting was he in the matter of dress and personal appearance of officers and men that the regiments he inspected came to be known as "Otis's fighting dandies."

He is a man who does things sure. A friend of his said that Otis usually worked about nineteen hours out of every twenty-four. At his work, however, before he left for Manila was always completed each day before nightfall. He has a fine library, and is among his books he insisted upon spending his evenings. He has never given up altogether the study of law, and it was said of him that he is a better international and constitutional lawyer than many in active practice. On the literature of war he always keeps up with the times, and it is said of him that there is no work on tactics or the science and art of war with which he is not familiar.

Stonewall Jackson's Apology.

Jackson had occasion to censure a cadet who had given, as he believed, false reasons for being late to drill. On thinking the matter over at home he found that the pupil was right and the reason wrong. It was late at night and in the depth of Winter, but he immediately started off to the institute, some distance from his quarters, and sent for the cadet. The delinquent, answering with some trepidation the untimely summons, found himself to his astonishment the recipient of a frank apology.

Statistics show that fire destroys 6,000 lives and $125,000,000 worth of property in this country every year. This shows that the science of construction is still a perilously long distance from what it should be.

CARE OF THE TEETH.

Dyspepsia Almost Sure to Result If They Are Not Attended to.

One who has had no teeth is almost sure to suffer from indigestion. Why? Well, in the first place, without good teeth one cannot masticate her food properly, and without sufficient mastication the food will not be readily digested in the stomach, and an attack of indigestion is the inevitable result. It should be borne in mind that the digestive process really begins in the mouth; that is, during mastication the food becomes mixed with saliva, which contains a digestive ferment that acts upon certain kinds of food. When this substance is not supplied in sufficient quantity an additional burden is thrown upon the stomach and intestinal digestive apparatus, and the result, an attack of dispepsia.

In the second place teeth with cavities are liable to retain particles of food. These decompose and at the next meal time become dislodged and enter the stomach with food. Once in the stomach, the decomposition goes on there and in a short time such symptoms as belching of gas, acid eructation, a sense of weight and burning in the stomach, and vomiting of partially digested food appear. These symptoms are all indicative of one thing—fermentative dyspepsia. Those who suffer from this form of ailment will do well to observe the following directions. Have your teeth carefully examined, and, if cavities exist, have them filled at once; always brush the teeth carefully before and after each meal.

Famous Rings.

The smallest wedding ring was that used at the marriage of Mary, daughter of Henry VIII., to the Dauphin of France, son of Francis I. The dauphin was born February 28, 1518, and as a matter of state policy, and to bring about a union with England, he was married, according to the custom of the time, when 8 months old, to the Princess, who was two years old. She wore a cap of black velvet, covered with jewels, and a dress of cloth of gold. The Duke of Suffolk handed the ring and performed the mass.

The beautiful Miss Gunning, according to Horace Walpole, was married to the Duke of Hamilton with a curtain ring from the prayer book, in Mayfair Chapel, and at 12:30 at night. In Ireland, among the impoverished peasants hired wedding rings are often used. In this case the ceremony the priest gives a silver ring to the bride and a gold one to the groom.

Numerous persons claim to possess the gold ring given by Elizabeth to the Earl of Essex—the one which the Countess of Nottingham cruelly withheld—while he lay under the sentence of death. It is said that in 1564, when Mary Stuart married Darnley, her royal cousin sent her this very ring in token of her highest regard—regard which history proved worthless. The ring exhibited as that of Lady Francis Devereux, daughter of Essex, appears the most authentic. It was made for a lady's finger and subsequently enlarged, with a portrait of the Queen in sardonyx.

Lady Scroope dropped a sapphire ring from the palace window to announce the death of Elizabeth; her brother hastened with the greatest speed to deliver it to the Scotch Prince.

Rings as tokens or pledges for love were made for Queen Henrietta while in Holland trying to raise money and troops for her ill-starred husband. "Il. M. R." was done in filigree upon them and covered with a crystal. These were to have been redeemed by favors if the royal cause prospered. A topaz set in silver with diamond and rubies was given as pledge to the Penderell brothers for saving Charles II in the oak tree after the battle of Worcester. The jewelry pens, the £500 was conferred on the family forever.—Harper's Bazar.

land of blossoms and foliage encircles the upper arm, and below this is a cross trimming, which may be of velvet, satin or tulle, caught in the centre on the outside of the arm with a costly jeweled slide or buckle.

Peary's Temperament.

Louis Wain, the famous cat painter, professes to believe that a cat owned by a woman is the mirror of its mistress's temperament. He says that if a cat that has been comfortably with its mistress is suddenly removed from her society the creature will show the characteristics madam has displayed. If she has been snappish, pussy will scratch; if she has been sulky, pussy will sulk, too. If this were really true, it would pay a prospective husband to study the cat of the lady he is before taking the fatal matrimonial step. As the cat is about the most independent creature alive, one can't help being skeptical of Mr. Wain's theory.

High heels are announced from London. According to the report they are in demand for "ladies moving in the highest circles of society." As the heels are from 3½ to 6 inches in height there can be no question as to the elevated position of those who wear them.

RAISING SOUTH AVENUE

GRADE NEAR NETHERWOOD HILL INCREASED TWO FEET.

City's Men Are Making Improvement to Prevent Flooding of South Avenue—Street Now Undergoing Repairs

Under the supervision of Street Commissioner Gavett South avenue is receiving a much needed improvement. The grade near Netherwood hill is being raised in some places as much as two feet to prevent the flooding of that part of the roadway which has always been such a source of annoyance and damage to the roadbed.

Everytime this region is visited by a heavy rain storm, the water forms great puddles on either side of South avenue, just west of the hill, which gradually extend across the roadway. The same state of affairs has also existed just east of the hill. At the former place, however, a gang of the Street Commissioner's men are at work raising the grade. Great rocks have been put on top of the old roadway and filled in with earth and gravel. Then a new macadam surface is being built on top of that. At present the street is almost blocked for traffic, but when the improvement is completed it will be much appreciated by all who are called upon to drive or ride along South avenue.

The new road way that is being built has a crown to it so that drain off the water into the gutters. The grade has been raised in some places as high as two feet.

WILL THERE BE A RUN?

Savings-Bank Depositors Grumble at Passing of Interest.

State Commissioner Bettle's statement of the Perth Amboy Savings Bank's affairs shows that there is still a surplus of $1,528 93, and it is also officially announced that the institution will reopen next Tuesday. A new board of managers are in control, and while they have plenty of ready cash to meet all demands, many predict a big run on the institution.

Those who were caught in the Middlesex Bank wreck are pinched for funds, and besides this there is much dissatisfaction at the passing of the July dividend, which the depositors claim, is as certainly due them as their principal, because the institution did not close until July 14th.

One depositor has said he will sue for the July interest.

He had saved a score of lives at the Essex street crossing, but had never received any recognition for it beyond a "thank you."

CAUGHT AT HIS TRICKERY.

How a Flour Dealer Thought He'd Bunco a Shrewd Irishwoman.

"There are tricks in all trades but ours," remarked one member of a group seated in the lobby of a South Broad street Hotel "and I must add there are a few in ours." The speaker is the head of a well known firm of wholesale grocers. "Not so long ago," he continued, "when I was still in the retail trade, we had a shrewd Irish woman for a customer. One day she ordered a barrel of flour. I told the boy that we had happened to be out of the brand, but I told her we could send her a barrel of another brand equally good. She assented and the flour was delivered. A week or so after she came into the store and declared that she didn't like the flour and insisted on having it taken back and the brand she wanted sent instead. Well we hauled the flour back to the store, and being still out of the brand wanted, filled up the returned barrel, put in new head and delivered it back to the woman again. We heard nothing more about the matter for three days, when one morning I found her in the store in a highly indignant frame of mind. 'I want you to sent up to my house and haul that flour away she exclaimed. 'I told you that it was no good.' 'No good,' I replied. 'Why, you know it is the brand you ordered.' The woman glared at me. 'It is no such thing,' she asserted. 'You've been trying to palm the same barrel I had.' Of course I denied it, laying particular stress on her value to us as customer and how we would think nothing of such an account of a measly barrel of flour. 'Why, madam I ejaculated, eloquently, 'how could you think such a thing? Ours is too honorable a house to cheat its customers or to ask them to accept a substitute for something they like.' Then the woman grinned. 'That's all right,' she said, 'that's all very fine. But I had two bakin's out of the first barrel before I sent it back.' 'Yes' I assented, and you got a full barrel, but that in no way improves—' 'Prove nothing,' she interrupted. 'The first two bakin's out of the barrel I got the second time were all right. But the third bakin' was sour. I'll take my flour out with a saucer. When I got down to the third bakin' out of that barrel I found—' 'Yes' I interposed, weakly, 'what did you do?' 'I tasted the saucer,' was the answer. Then she swept out and it was well she did, for I was fairly falling in a faint. It was months before the woman would condescend to trade with us again.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Extending His Sphere of Affluence.

The young physician was tired when he returned from his evening's calls, but as he sank into his own easy chair, and his pretty wife of only a month or two took a seat beside him, he asked affectionately:

"And has my little wife been lonely?"

"No, no," she said animatedly: at least not very. I've found something to busy me, dear."

"Indeed?" he said. "What is it?"

"Oh, I'm organizing a class. A lot of young girls and married women are in it, and I'm exchanging experiences and teaching each other how to cook."

"What do you do with the things you cook?" he asked, interestedly.

"Oh, we send them to the neighbors just to show what we can do. It's great fun."

"Dear little woman," he said, leaning over and kissing her, 'always thoughtful of your husband's practice. Always anxious to extend it."—Tit-Bits.

He Had Reason to Run.

The man came out of the office building on the run and started down the street.

"Here! Here!" cried the policeman on the corner. "What's your hurry?"

"There's a man back there trying to sell me a book on twenty-eight weekly instalments of $2.33 each!" cried the victim.

The policeman instantly released his hold.

"Run!" he cried. "Run like a whitehead! Maybe you can get away from him yet!"—Chicago Post.

He Had Been There.

Blimbus—Well, here's another housecleaning joke. This is the sixteenth housecleaning joke that I've seen in this paper within a week.

Just a Gentle Dig.

The Consistencies.

"Accordeon plaiting went out of style long ago," she said severely.

"Of course," answered the man who calmly displays his ignorance; "a quiet little thing like an accordeon wouldn't stand a chance with the riotous loudness of current styles. It ought to be something in the orchestrion or brass band line."

HIS BLACK RECORD

A Pious Criminal Whose Skill and Daring Were Boundless.

Within the walls of the Philadelphia Hospital the curtain is slowly falling on the life drama of a man who for more than half a century has figured in the police annals of the country as a criminal whose skill and daring knew no bounds. At sixty-two, bent, bowed an crippled, "Jimmy" Logue, who in the heyday of his career counted his money by the thousands and drove his coach and pair like a gentleman, has come back to his native city to die. His ill-gotten wealth has taken itself out of the kindness of Philadelphia's Mayor has saved him from ending his days in the Almshouse. As it is, there is but a shade of difference between the hospital and the Almshouse. Both are under one roof, but as an inmate of the hospital Logue is able to escape the stigma of the city pauper.

When the old man first came back to his former haunts, about two weeks ago, nothing was left but to throw himself on the mercy of his former enemies—the police—who sent him to the Almshouse. His pride rebelled, and the first day he was able to get out he tottered downtown and into the Mayor's office. Mayor Ashbridge, who knew him in other days, was moved by his pitiful story, and believed that the old man should be given a cot and medical treatment. Sobbing his thanks "Jimmy" Logue went back to the institution which he will probably never leave alive.

Logue's life story is a wild romance of crime, and one who sees the old man to-day can hardly believe the things the police records tell about him. His personal character has been as odd as his career. Down in his breast pocket, in the lining of a vest, was one who never forgot the lessons he had learned at the knees of a Christian mother. True, he did not heed them, but the memory of them lived in his memory. To-day he speaks reverently of his mother as a God-fearing woman, and to-day this crime-stained veteran has been known to kneel down without a fervent prayer to the Almighty. It has been his life's custom, and the detectives used to tell of him that "Jimmy" Logue would never set about to crack a safe without first asking Providence to guide him in his work. Logue himself, in speaking of his devotions, says epigrammatically;

"When I am awake I can look after myself; when I am asleep I need God's protection."

Logue, too, has been a good husband and father—a good husband to three successive wives; a father to a son who is to-day a respected, hard-working, law-abiding citizen. Of his sixty-two years thirty-four have been spent behind cell doors in various parts of the country. His criminal career must have begun early, for at the age of ten he was sent as an incorrigible to the House of Refuge.

Much of the romance of Logue's life lies about his marriage to his third wife, Johanna Gans, with whose murder he was once charged. Logue had previously been married twice, his last wife being a sister of Johanna. The third wedding was one of the most romantic in local history.

Logue had just been sentenced to seven years' hard labor for one of his many misdeeds and he asked permission to be wedded before he went to jail. Johanna Logue, his sister-in-law, was in court, and the law soon made her and the convict man and wife. She was a faithful wife and waited patiently until her new husband stepped from the doors of Cherry Hill in 1878.

Fought For a Young Women.

George Russman and Roy Lewis, two employes in a lumber camp near Middletown, Md., have long been desperate rivals for the affections of a pretty young woman who lives near the camp. She was unable to choose between them, and finally told them they could fight it out, and agreeing to become the wife of the victor. The combatants, after going through the forms lilies of selecting a referee and time-keeper, met in the other. In the third and last round Russman came up much refreshed and made a dive for Lewis. The latter, finding his strength failing, let out, and on the seconds to take Russman away and he would give up.

Hence the referee was obliged to declare Lewis knocked out and to award the championship and the young lady to Russman.

How She Disposed of Her Legacy.

Some time ago a woman died at Dendermonde, near Ghent, leaving the whole of her property to her neice, Rosalie Verly. The latter was considerably worried by the other members of the family, who had been excluded from the inheritance.

Recently the young woman received the amount of the legacy, consisting of twenty-five 1,000-franc notes ($5,000) and the deed of a house. In the afternoon the disappointed relatives again visited her, and worried her to such an extent, that, losing all control over herself, she picked up the deed and the whole of the bank notes and threw them into the fire.

In a few moments nothing remained of the little fortune but a few ashes.

COL. MOORE IN A BIG TROLLEY ENTERPRISE.

To be Operated From Newark to Lake Hopatcong.

IT WILL BE 30 MILES LONG.

NOW ENGAGED IN SECURING THE RIGHT OF WAY.

When Built the Line Will be a Great Boon to Farmers, as it Will Enable Them to Get Their Crops to Market Easier—Col. Moore Also Interested in the Promotion of New Rail.

Col. Charles K. Moore, formerly a resident of this city, and the original projector of the present system of water supply in Plainfield, is now engaged in another big enterprise—that of building a trolley line from Essex Falls to Boonton and Lake Hopatcong. Mr. Moore has been, for the past year, engaged in promoting a company manufacturing a new trolley rail, said to have superior advantages over any other, and it is doubtless in this connection that he is engaged in the present project. Col. Moore has just returned from spending several weeks in Boonton where he has been pushing the enterprise.

Mr. Moore says the road will be thirty miles long, with a branch running to Morristown. The road will touch the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western at three points—Lake Hopatcong, Morristown and Boonton. At the latter place it will cross the D. L. and W. on an overhead bridge.

Mr. Moore is enthusiastic over the project, which, he claims, will boom the value of property greatly along the line of the traction road.

"The work of constructing the line," said Mr. Moore, "will not be undertaken until we have the right of way all secured. Up to date we have signed contracts made with the land owners for eighty per cent. of the entire distance, and we do not anticipate any trouble in securing the balance. We have all the money we need for the enterprise, and can get plenty more if we want it. Why, five different capitalists have offered us the money on learning of the undertaking. Who the parties are back of the scheme is something I cannot disclose at present. We don't want the public to know that part of it just yet.

"The road will prove, when built, a great boon to the farmers, as it will enable them to get their products to market at a much lower rate for transportation than it costs them at present, and they will be able to get better prices for their crops. I have invested some in land for myself along the line of the railroad, and expect to make considerable money out of it."

Mr. Moore had to hurry back to Boonton Thursday, as he was desirous of completing as soon as possible the work of securing the land required for the railroad, so that the work of construction can be commenced this month.

Mr. Moore's presence in Elizabeth was required in a will case as a witness before Surrogate Parrot, who took the testimony.

Mr. Moore is a son of the late Col. James Moore, who constructed and for many years was chief engineer of the New Jersey Central Railroad.

Delightful Salamagundi Party Given at Mountain Home of Voehl.

The sum mer home of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Voehl on the mountain near Mt. Bethel, known as "Sunset Cottage," was the scene of a very enjoyable salamagundi party August 30th. It was arranged by the Misses Voehl and Miss Addie Carney in return for the many pleasant receptions tendered them by their friends during their stay at 'Sunset Cottage." The cottage and grounds were prettily illuminated with colored Chinese lanterns and flags.

After the games the young people enjoyed a dance and light refreshments were served. The following guests were present: Edward F. Nuse, M. D., Harry A. Nuse, of New York; Chas. A. Coddington, Clifford Schorb, Albert Coddington, Rufus Giddis, Chauncey Martin and Eugene Giddis, of Mt. BANK HAS NO CLAIM ON MORTIMER ESTATE.

Plainfield Creditors Unable to Force Their Agreement.

JUDGE RUSSELL SO DECIDES

THE PRINCIPAL POINTS IN THE DECISION OF THE COURT.

He Says That It is the Duty of the Court to Effectuate the Intent of His Mother, Who Left the Property in Trust, and Therefore He Rules That Trust Fund Cannot be Touched.

Justice Russell in the New York Supreme Court August 30 decided that creditors of John Mortimer cannot establish a claim upon a trust estate of $50,000 left by his mother, the late Frances R. Mortimer, to Mortimer and his family. He dismissed a suit brought by the First National Bank, of Plainfield, against Mortimer and the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company to establish a lien both upon the principal and income of the trust fund. Justice Russell said in part:

"It is argued with diligence and ingenuity that by the scheme of the will John not only has the beneficial enjoyment during life of the share bequeathed and devised in trust, but the same power of disposition which any owner would have, and therefore the combination of the entire benefits of his share, with the power of transmitting it by will, gave to him in the theory of the law absolute estate, at least so far as the claims of creditors are affected. . . . It must be remembered that the effort of the courts of this State is to ascertain and effectuate the intent of the testatrix, who has the power of disposition accorded to all owners of property and construe the provisions of her will in accordance with such intent, unless they transgress some rules of public property. She had the power to say that John Mortimer, her son, should receive no part of her estate. She was mindful of the situation of a son brought up in an affluent family in the city of New York, accustomed to the liberal receipt of money for his own uses, and at the time of making her will, with a wife and three children dependent upon him for maintenance. Knowing him full well, she may have had entire confidence in his intention to honorably conduct his life and make a just disposition of the property she gave, to take effect as he died, while at the same time she may not have felt the same assurance of his ability to deal with business judgment with the income as to make such a wise provision in the future as to the corpus of the estate during his life."

In defending the suit against the estate trust fund Mortimer entailed something over $400 expenses, and for this he got a personal judgment against the plaintiff—the First National Bank. But inasmuch as the bank is protected against loss by the fact that the syndicate of creditors endorsed his note, which was discounted to raise the money to distribute among them in the liquidation of the debts that Mortimer had created, the final loss will fall upon the creditors who will now be in the position of not only losing the amount of their credits, but will also be called upon to pay a share of the court expenses entailed in the case.

Four Generations Met Together.

It is seldom that four generations of a family meet together, but such an instance was recorded in the gathering at Wm. Runyon's home Thursday afternoon, when Mrs. Brokaw, aged 93, Mrs. Daniel Randolph, aged 76, and Mrs. Lillie Runk, the latter a daughter of Mrs Randolph, and her daughter, Miss Lille, all met for a social visit.

Malady That Seems to Spread.

During the past few days a number of men employed at Aluminum Press and Plate Works have been ill with stomach trouble, which seems to be infectious. Several of the employees were obliged to quit work. The men cannot account for sudden outbreak of the trouble. There does not seem, however, to be anything dangerous about it.

A Small Klondike.

The workmen who are laying the new flagging at the North Avenue station are finding considerable money, in small amounts, which from time to time has fallen between the old boards that are now being replaced. Yesterday the digging in this local Knondike yielded about $2 in small change.

Night Central Men.

There was recently a gathering in this city of the young men who are night operators for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company at New Brunswick, Elizabeth, Bloomfield, Plainfield and a few other places, and while here they had their pictures taken by a local expert. The picture is an excellent one, and is highly prized by each one who has received a copy.

A REAL TREASURE ISLAND

Romantic Spot of Unusual Interest Which Is Located Near Porto Rico.

THE HAUNT OF PIRATES.

An Ideal Spot for Freebooters to Hide Their Booty—Caves Galore, Intricate and Inaccessible.

Some of the Caverns of La Mona in the Vicinity of Cape Caigo Present Still the Undoubted Traces of Pirates—Walls Are Graven With Sinister Designs—$120,000 in Coins and Jewels Unearthed.

At the centre of the sea of the Antilles, in the middle of the passage which separates St. Domingo from Porto Rico, there raises itself above the waves a steep rock, to which the navigators have given, as a table, to thirty or forty metres above the sea. The waves, always agitated in these seas, have shaped the rock into a pedestal of pointed cliffs, and, except in two or three points, where narrow stretches of shore advance, the island presents no beaches. Ships are kept at a distance, as much by the violence of the waves as by a chain of rocks which surround it, and where alone open a few passages for small vessels.

At the southern point of the island an enormous rock seems miraculously to have stopped from the crest of a cliff. The sailors have named it "Cape Caigo," which means, "Shall I fall, or shall I not fall." In spite of its perilous position, the rock in equilibrium has resisted for many ages the attacks of storms and waves.

But one of the most curious particulars of this island, and strange from many points of view, is that its chalky mass is throughout pierced by immense caves, innumerable grottos, which rainify in all ways, and, having their entrance under the face of the cliff, conduct by sinuous passages to the very summit of the plateau. These grottos, inhabited by bands of seabirds, were but lately in part obstructed by guano, which has been nearly all taken away.

The adventurer who should attempt to engage himself in this formidable struggle soon finds himself arrested by two very unexpected obstacles: in effect, among the tangles of plants are hidden swarms of immense wasps, which, at the least rustling, precipitate themselves upon the intruder, can lay their dangerous stings put his life in danger; again, if he escapes from these guardians of the jungle, he has to combat dangerous stings put his life to dwarf cactus, which in many places stud the earth, and the pricks of cactus, which, as those of the wasps, are very painful, and cause a high fever.

One can understand that this rocky isle, which is inaccessible by the forces of nature, may have offered a refuge to the daring filibusters, who have been during many years the terror of the Antilles. After having passed by secret passages in the belt of rocks, they sheltered their vessels in some inaccessible cliff and established themselves in these grottos which formed impregnable natural fortresses.

There no one could reach them, and the bandits of the sea, when pursued had succeeded in forcing an entrance to their haunt, the bandits would fly through the caverns of the inextricable labyrinth and would gain the impenetrable thicket of the upper plateau, where it would be impossible to track them.

Some of these caverns in the vicinity of Cape Caigo present still the undoubted traces of pirates. Two of them called Cueva Negra—Black Cave—from the thick coat of soot which covers its vault, is a vast chamber, around which open the entrance to other chambers and passages. The walls of this chamber are still graven with sinister designs, representing gallows supporting rows of bodies and above which are inscribed the names of the victims, names where are found represented Jews of all races. Among which these rascals recruited their band, and which are doubtless those of traitors or rebels executed by their companions, or those of the unfortunate captives sacrificed by these wretches. Some cannon balls, still entangled in the rock near the entrance, also prove that the place was besieged, without doubt, by some war vessel sent in pursuit of the pirates.

These grottos did not serve as places of refuge merely; the pirates used them as storehouses and kept in them the products of their captures. So, when at the close of the last century, France and England had succeeded in destroying this refuge, it was thought that the island must contain some of the immense treasures which the pirates had hidden there during many years. Searches were made, but the extent of the caverns to be gone over was so great that no result was obtained. Several years after, a party of Negroes, an American, guided, it appears, by a mysterious document, landed on the island with a troop of negroes from San Domingo and succeeded in unearthing in one of the grottoes an iron box containing $120,660 in ancient golden coins. This success, assured by this result, an American company was formed in 1880 and undertook to search methodically while taking up the thick bed of guano deposited by the rainfalls on the floor of the grottoes; but outside the precious guano no treasure was gained.

The Samoan at Home.

When native Samoans are not at war they seem to foreigners to have a very easy and agreeable life. There is never very much to do, and what there is is not arduous or tiring. The old woman, for instance, braid mats or sit upon the rocks and beat and strip the bark for making tapa, the native cloth. The brewing and perfuming of cocoanut oil is another industry in which women play a prominent part. The men spend much of their time in making fishing sets and tackle.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN AT THE BIG CLAMBAKE

The Affair a Great Success in Every Respect.

PRAISE FOR PLAINFIELD.

BRIEF TOASTS RESPONDED TO BY PROMINENT GUESTS.

About 250 Present, Making It Necessary to Serve a Second Table—Plenty of Everything to Eat and All Enjoyed a Very Pleasant Time—Names of Some of the Prominent Guests.

The long looked-for clambake, given under the auspices of the Plainfield Advancement Association, came off August 30 at the Mountain Park Inn. Probably never before was there such an assemblage of representative citizens of Plainfield and surrounding towns and cities together on a similar occasion. The committee, of which Mayor Smalley, as president of the Association, was chairman, ably assisted by W. F. Williams, City Judge Wm. V. Runyon and Assessor Elston M. French, evidenced to the satisfaction of all present that the bake was arranged and given in true style. There was an inconvenience experienced for the fact that provision had been made for about 150 people and there were nearly 250 guests present. This the committee could not help, but they did all in their power to overcome it, and provided a second table.

The bake was called for 1 o'clock in the afternoon, but it was nearly 2:30 o'clock when the festivities commenced. In the meantime the guests arrived and made free use of the spacious hotel rooms and broad verandas, and found the cooling breezes welcome.

In the parlor Rogers' orchestra was stationed and from the time the affair started until the close popular airs were discoursed. As an extra attraction Fred Sebring was stationed on the veranda, where he manipulated one of the latest phonographs from the store of W. H. Rogers. While all this was going on and guests were becoming acquainted with each other, preparations were rapidly being made to serve the dinner. Back of the hotel in the woods several men were employed under the direction of William Brown, who had charge of the bake, and when the various things in the bake were ready a corps of waiters served the dinner.

First came the clams in abundance, then sweet and delicious green corn, followed by crabs, lobster, chicken, watermelon and plenty of soft drinks. Everything seemed cooked to suit the taste of all, and the guests partook of a feast worthy a sultan, for it was late for dinner, and most of these present had had nothing to eat since breakfast. All could not be seated at the first table and a second table had to be set, where the remainder was provided for.

Among those who helped to make everyone feel at home was James E Martine, and he did his best in this direction and gave all a cordial greeting, while he made it a point to see that all were introduced and became thoroughly acquainted.

After the inner man had been provided for all gathered around the veranda, where the dinner was served, and listened to some good speeches. That most excellent toast-master, Col. John I. Holly, presided, and in his usual happy manner brought forth the talent that was to entertain the guests. J. E. Martine called for attention and after introducing Mayor N. B. Smalley, of the borough, who made a few happy remarks, Mr. Holly took charge and opened the speech making by saying that if Plainfield did not advance all would move into North Plainfield.

The first toast was "Plainfield's Interests," and Mayor George W. Rockefellow responded in a pleasing manner. He said that Plainfield wished to advance and he congratulated all upon the earnest effort made to help the movement. "Our Neighbors," was the subject assigned to Hon. J. J. Bergen, of Somerville, former speaker of the Assembly, who thought Plainfield such a beautiful place that she needed little advancement. He said that neighbors do not usually quarrel, their only difference being a feeling of superiority. He remarked still further that it was Somerville that granted North Plainfield her licenses, built her bridges, punished her criminals, furnished her with courts, but he was a little fearful lest Plainfield swallow the borough up. He understood that the hat industry was the principal one until commuters came here from New York with swelled heads.

"The Combined Interests of Plainfield and North Plainfield" was the toast handled by Senator Reed in his usual masterful manner. He thought the interests of both places could be advanced if there should be two or three first-class funerals, but then there would be a question as to who should take the principal part. "There is too much fault finding," continued Mr. Reed, "and the residents should praise instead of decry."

"The Sanitation of Cities," was the toast given to Col. Chas. W. Fuller, of Bayonne, who is a member of the State Sewage Commission. He considered it a dry after-dinner subject. He said Plainfield has fine roads, fine women, healthy location and a magnificent attempt at sewage disposal. He spoke of the appointment of the commission, and told how the Legislature had conveniently forgotten to make an appropriation for it. However, the commission is endeavoring to solve the difficult problems assigned to it. He felt sure that with Plainfield's wealth brains and energy she would overcome the sewer trouble.

District Attorney Hiram Steel, of Kings county, Brooklyn, was the next speaker on the subject of 'Suburban Interest and the Trolley." He extolled Plainfield to the skies and said he thought it was the finest suburban place within easy reach of New York. He thought so well of it that he had built a house here. He did not believe that trolleys should be given the best roads, and he said he would like to see a fountain where horses could water.

In connection with the latter remark, Frank Bergen, of Elizabeth, the next speaker who responded to the toast "Plainfield's Prospects," said a few plain things and remarked that the Plainfield Water Supply Company would furnish water free for a fountain and give a handsome subscription for the fountain. This offer brought forth hearty applause.

Editor Chas. McBride, of Elizabeth; Councilman Walter L Hetfield and Former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., of the borough, failed to be present and respond to their toasts. Mayor Silas Dewey Drake, of Lincoln, spoke on the subject of "How to Build Greater Towns and Cities." He offered a number of original suggestions and created considerable enthusiasm. He was followed by J. E. Martine, who spoke on the subject "What can be Accomplished for the Advancement Association." The "Farmer Orater" received a hearty ovation and his spirted talk awoke great enthusiasm. He informed Mr. Bergen that Plainfield would soon control the water works and supply and would not pay tribute to President Bergen or John Kean. He also said that the city would own its gas works and supply it at a minimum price.

The last speaker was Lawyer W. A. Codington, whose toast was "The Judiciary and the Law." His remarks were pointed and apropos. City Judge Runyon who was to respond on behalf of the ladies, was unable to speak owing to a sudden illness, and after a few closing remarks by Mr. Holly, the joyous affair came to an end.

In the midst of the festivities Mayor N. B Smalley furnished a little excitement by arranging for three blasts at his stone quarries. The blastswere successful and the guests were interested in watching the explosion on the distant hills from the Inn.

Among the distinguished guests present were: District Attorney Hiram Steel, King's county, Brooklyn; Frank Bergen, Elizabeth; James J. Bergen, County Clerk Frank Somers, Sheriff Selah Schoonmaker, ex-Sheriff W. H. Wyckoff and Postmaster Cooper, of Somerville; Hon. Charles A. Reed, of Washington Park; Col. Charles W. Fuller, of Bayonne; Mayor G. W. Rockfellow, of this city; Mayor N. B. Smalley, of the borough; Hon. W. A. Codington, Postmaster E. B. Bird, City Clerk MacMurray, Councilmen F. H. Smith, J. F. Buckle and Henry Leifke, City Judge Wm. N. Runyon, of this city; ex-Assemblyman VanDoren, of Millstone; Surrogate H. N. Spencer, Collector G. F. Brown, Borough Physician Dr. J. E. Buchanan and Clerk Frank Bowley, of the borough; ex-Sheriff and Mayor George Kyte and Assessor William B. Stanbery, of Fanwood; Mayor S. D. Drake, of Lincoln, and many other greater and lesser lights of this city, borough and vicinity. Responses were received from Editor McBride, of Elizabeth, and Former Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., of the borough, stating that owing to unavoidable circumstances they could not be present.

A commendable feature of the bake was the absence of any intoxicating liquor in connection with the clambake.

Young People Enjoyed Themselves.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bodine, of Jackson avenue, gave a party Thursday at their home in honor of their daughter, Miss Laura Bodine, who was assisted in celebrating by her friend, Miss Stella Mang. The evening was passed in playing games and in having a general good time, and at a late hour refreshments were served. There were about thirty guests present.

KISSED WIFE THEN TRIED TO KILL HER.

John Kuckio Shot His Wife and Afterwards Himself.

MARRIED SINCE JULY.

BULLET STRUCK HER BEHIND THE EAR BUT WAS NOT FATAL.

Kuckio Locked Himself in Another Bedroom and Fired Two Shots Into His Mouth—Trouble Over the Fact That He Married Under an Alias—First Gave Name of Smith But Wife Discovered Deception.

An attempted murder and a possible suicide, which took place Thursday morning caused a sensation at the West End of the city. The scene of the tragedy was at 24 Clinton avenue. The principals were John Kuckio, alias John Smith and his wife, who was the widow Childs. Kuckio made a desperate attempt to kill his wife about 6:30 o'clock.

He arose early and did the deed. His wife was still in bed when Kuckio fired at her. The bullet hit the woman behind the right ear. She jumped from the bed and a desperate struggle for the possession of the pistol ensued. The woman finally escaped from the unfortunate man's clutches and ran from the room and out upon the roof of the porch, clad only in her night clothing.

Her screams for help aroused the neighbors and a Mr. Beaton ran into the house. When he reached the stairs two pistol shots were distinctly heard, the sound coming from a front room upstairs.

The woman had been shot by her husband who, she said, had chased her upon the roof. The police were notified and Acting Roundsman Matter hastened to the house. The officer burst in the door and found Kuckio lying upon the floor unconscious. Blood was streaming from his mouth and a small pistol lay beside him. The ambulance was sent for and the injured man was removed to the hospital.

In the meantime the neighbors had given their attention to the woman, who was also bleeding from a wound back of her right ear. Later Captain Grant sent Dr. Curry to the scene of the tragedy. The woman was afterwards removed to the hospital in a carriage. She is not believed to be seriously injured. The physicians at the hospital have removed the bullet.

The couple lived in a cozy two-story cottage, comfortably furnished. Mrs. Childs, who was the widow of John Childs, married Kuckio last July. He represented to her that his name was John Smith, and it was not until some time after they were married. The ceremony was performed by a minister in New York.

Recently Mrs. Smith learned that her husband had deceived her and that his true name was John Kuckio. When she intimated to him that she was going to look up his record, Kuckio flew into a rage and destroyed the marriage certificate.

August 30 Mrs. Smith, as she was known to the neighbors, went to New York for the purpose, it is understood, of procuring a marriage certificate. She did not return until late.

It is believed Kuckio intended to murder his wife and then leave town. Before shooting his wife the fellow had darkened the room by drawing the shades in the bedroom, after carefully dressing himself.

Then Kuckio approached the bed and leaning over kissed his wife. The next thing the woman knew was when she heard the report of the pistol and felt a sharp pain on the side of her head.

She then realized that her husband was attempting to take her life, and she made efforts to protect herself. It was in another bedroom that Kuckio shot himself. The weapon was a small affair of 22-calibre.

Mrs. Smith or Kuckio is a respectable woman, and has a son 14 years old. She has lived on Clinton avenue but a few months. Her first husband, John Childs, was a florist, and the firm of Childs & Stanley was well known in this city and Nether wood, where they had a greenhouse. Mr. Childs died last September.

Kuckio or Smith also followed the business of a florist, and had partially constructed a small building in the rear of 24 Clinton avenue to be used as a hothouse.

Mrs. Kuckio is now out of danger. The physicians succeeded Thursday in extracting the bullet that entered her head behind the right ear. Her husband is in a more serious condition. He has not been conscious since he shot himself, and the hospital physicians have been unable to remove the bullet which is lodged in the back of his head. In fact they do not know where it is. The ball entered the roof of the mouth, and there is nothing discernible but the small hole made by the ball. In the opinion of the physicians there is little hope for Kuckio.

ONE SHIP THAT HE LOST

How His Plans Were Completely Foiled By the Elements in Corpus Christi Bay.

PIRATE SHIP AND SPANISH GALLEON.

The Sailors of the Ship He Was in Pursuit of Sailed Behind Mustang Island, and After a Long Fight, Scuttled Their Ship and Swam Ashore.

As far back as the memory of men still living goes the hull of an old ship has been seen in Corpus Christi Bay on the west side of Mustang Island off the coast of Texas. When the wind blew from the shore and forced the waters of the bay through the Pass Caballo and Pass Corpus Christi enough of the wreck could be seen every year ago to enable a sailor to make out a good deal about the old ship. Sea dogs said that she had been a swift sailor, and that she had carried cannon, and some of them would shake their heads and intimate that they had serious doubts concerning her good character and her business in these shoal waters when she met her doom. A dozen or more Italian fishermen say they have seen gold enough taken from the wreck to sink a fishing smack.

An enormous amount of treasure has been taken from the old wreck by the crew of a strange craft that visited the bay a short time ago. The stranger was a trim little steam yacht, plentifully supplied with bright flags and pennants, upon many of the latter was the word "Veloce." The treasure hunter took a notion to show her heels to several fast fishing smacks.

The wrecked ship was a Spanish galleon that had sailed in 1820 from Matamoras loaded with treasure. Her name was Senada. Lafitte was at that time on Galveston Island. He was at peace with all the world except Spain. He had letters of marque and reprisal from Venezuela against his old enemy, and he never lost an opportunity to capture the richly laden galleons that sailed from Spanish Main. Old Lafitte. He had set up a republic on Galveston Island and gathered about him at least 1,000 of the most desperate characters that ever sailed under the scuttled ship. He owned a fleet of twenty swift sailing vessels, and with these he rapidly drove the commerce of Spain from the southern seas. Tomas Vasquez was a spy in the service of the great pirate, and he happened to witness the loading of the rich cargo on the Senada. He learned that a revenue officer was returning to Spain with more than $1,000,000 in gold for his services, and that on a long train of burros loaded with silver bars arrive at the pier. This belonged to a rich old miner, whom a political conviction had secured a home in the interir. Tomas calculated that the Senada would sail away from the coast of Mexico a little less than $2,000,000 in gold and silver bars beneath her decks, and he lost no time in carrying the news to his chief.

When Lafitte was informed of the rich prize that was boldly preparing to sail almost within sight of his stronghold, he at once dispatched three vessels to intercept her. He would doubtless have commanded the expedition in person, but the American Commissioner had been sent to Galveston Island with instructions to warn the pirate to leave the waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

Tomas Vasquez sailed with the pirates, and he says they first sighted the Senada off the southern end of Padre Island. The pirates at once spread all sails and pursued the rich prize. The captain of the Senada evidently recognized the character of his pursuers at a glance, and, realizing that the pirates with their swifter sailing ship would easily overhaul him in a short time, he traded and ran through Pass Corpus Christi into Corpus Christi Bay, behind Mustang Island. Only two of the smaller vessels of the pirates' fleet were able to follow the Senada on account of the shoal water in the bay. The Spanish vessel barely slipped into the bay without grounding, and sailed north. The pirates soon came up with her, and a desperate fight ensued. The Senada's crew fought with the courage of despair, and after the masts of their vessel had been shot away they jumped overboard and swam ashore.

Tomas thinks that they scuttled their ship, for he says that she sank out of sight quickly. The pirates were so enraged over the loss of the rich prize that they ran in close to shore and sent showers of grapeshot after the escaping crew. They sailed back to Galveston Island, with the intention of returning and raising the prize or rescuing the treasure with divers, but their chief had become so much alarmed at the warning given him by the envoy of the United States that he abandoned the island and sailed away to other seas.

TINGLEY FAMILY GATHERS ONCE MORE.

Annual Reunion Held On the Blackford Farm.

SEVERAL HUNDRED GUESTS.

TALKED, ATE AND HAD A GOOD TIME.

Uncle John Tingley Was on Hand to Welcome the Guests—Dinner Served on the Lawn — Speeches Followed Feast—Guests Present From All Over —Picnic Broke Up at 5 o'Clock.

The annual reunion of the Tingley family was held on the David Blackford farm at South Plainfield, yesterday, and despite the threatening weather there was about 100 people present and everything passed off with the usual good time. The members of the family began to arrive during the forenoon and continued to come until late in the afternoon. "Uncle" John Tingley, upon whom falls the burden and pleasure of arranging these annual affairs, was on hand to welcome the members and he gave all a cordial greeting. It had been a year since most of those present had seen each other and it kept all busy talking over what had happened during that time.

It was just 12:30 o'clock when "Uncle" John called the families together and bid them sit down to the long tables bountifully laden with everything good that the market affords, and after Rev. Mr. Cubberly, pastor of the South Plainfield Baptist church, made a short prayer the dinner was partaken of. While this was being enjoyed sociability reigned and everyone had a good time.

Following the dinner there was a continuation of sociability and about 3 o'clock "Uncle" John again called the family together and for about twenty minutes he kept all in a roar of laughter. This was his welcome speech, and although not his maiden one he acquitted himself with credit. He then introduced Rev. Mr. Cubberly, who spoke along a more serious line, but occasionally brightened it with some humor.

A special attraction for the afternoon was the phonographic concert given by Whitfield Frazee, of this city, and he gave some of his best selections.

Among those present was Prof. Jeremiah Tingley, of Pittsburg, Pa., who is compiling a history of the family. Thus far he has found 2,000 members. He expects to complete the history next year. There were also present the Misses Boylan, of White Plains, Ga., and Miss Erving, of Denver, Col. There were also many other guests from distant points, while Plainfield and surrounding towns were well represented. During the past year there has not been a death in the family and one birth was recorded. There is a general feeling of congratulation on the part of all, and when the happy affair came to an end all expressed a strong desire to meet each other at the reunion next year. It was about 5 o'clock when the last of the guests departed, and a long line of carriages could be seen wending their way along the country roads on their homeward journey.

RAIN DROVE THEM INDOORS.

Inclement Weather Interfered With Church Lawn Festival.

The ladies of the Monroe Avenue Methodist church made preparations for a lawn party Thursday, but the shower in the early part of the evening disarranged their plans. The cakes had been baked and the ice cream prepared and there was no use letting the good things spoil so it was decided to hold the festival in the Sunday-school room. The inclement weather prevented many from attending that otherwise would have been present. However, the ladies were well pleased with the attendance, which was fairly representative of the members considering the circumstances. The young folks had a delightful time and the receipts, though not as large as they possibly would have been, were quite satisfactory.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

Martino Was Looting the Orchard of Halsey Compton.

The trouble experienced by Halsey C. Compton, who has been annoyed for a long time by men and boys stealing his fruit and vegetables, culminated Thursday in the arrest of one Patsey Martino, an Italian. The arrest was made by Acting Roundsman Matter, who caught the fellow in the orchard filling a bag with apples.

Martino was arraigned before Justice Nash, who held him to await the action of the Grand Jury on the charge of larceny.

Miss Mabel Davis, of Somerville, has been visiting Plainfield friends.

Commencing with next week Miss Lou Crosson, of the telephone exchange, will be assistant to the chief operator, and her place as operator will be taken by someone else.

NO WAY TO EVADE THE CEMETERY ASSESSMENT

Counsel Reed Says That the Money Must be Paid.

DISCUSSED IN THE COUNCIL.

MAYOR SMALLEY EXPRESSES HIS REGRET THAT SUCH IS THE CASE.

William Shotwell, Representing the First Presbyterian Church, Says That the Church Will Not Pay the Money—J. A. Haynes Said That the Trustees Had Been Misled by the Commissioners.

As was expected, the matter of selling the Presbyterian church cemetery on Chatham street by Collector George F. Brown, was brought up Friday evening at the regular meeting of the Borough Council. William H. Shotwell and Joseph A. Haynes, representing the church and cemetery association, were present to intercede in its behalf.

Mayor Smalley introduced the subject and stated that yesterday he had received an opinion from Borough Counsel Reed in which was clearly set forth the fact that the matter is now out of the hands of the Mayor and Council and that they have nothing to do with it, and are powerless to act either way. The Mayor said that he regretted the intended action, and if it were possible he would like to revoke the action and remit the amount assessed against the property, and place the $210 on the borough at large.

Mr. Clark also regretted the action, but thought it would be wise if those in charge should circulate a petition and let all contribute something toward raising the amount desired.

Mr. Valiant disagreed with the previously expressed opinions and thought that cemeteries as a rule were conducted for revenue to make money, and as he was) without the necessary information to change his mind he thought the money should be paid as assessed.

W. H. Shotwell was then given the privilege of the floor and stated that there is no income from the cemetery. In 1839 the property was purchased by the First Presbyterian church. All the lots have been sold, the money being used to keep the property in repair, lay sidewalks and maintain the fence around it. Mr. Shotwell said that the public sympathy was on their side, but that does not pay the assessmen. He said that the church would not pay it.

Joseph A. Haynes also made a remark. He said that when they first received notices to appear and make objection to the assessment they went to the Council rooms and met the comissioners. They were told to keep quiet and the amount of assessment would be taken off. They decided to do so, but now think that they were misled.

Mr. Swackhamer said that if the trustees of the cemetery had been informed that the amount would be taken off by the commissioners, they have good grounds to contest the payment of the $210.

Mr. Burtis wanted to know who said the amount would be taken off. Mr. Shotwell said he could give his autority, but did not care to at that time.

William N. Pangborn said that his property adjoins that of the cemetery, and he was assessed $300. His lot was a great deal smaller than the cemetery property, which was assessed $210. He understood that the latter assessment had been reduced a great deal. He thought there was inequality somewhere.

As Mayor Smalley thought further discussion useless he asked for an adjournment, and the meeting closed.

LAST TROLLEY LINK WELDED BY ROSELLE.

After an All-Night Session Ordinance is Passed.

IT IS TO RUN FOR 99 YEARS.

EXCELLENT TERMS SECURED FROM RAILWAY COMPANY.

It Gives the Company a Clear Way From This City to the City Limits of Elizabeth—After Ten Years Company Must Pa Five Per Cent. of the Gross Earnings to the Borough.

Roselle, Sept. 2—After months of consideration it required an all-night session of the Borough Council of Roselle last night to finally pass the ordinance granting a franchise to the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company through that town to complete the last link in the line from Plainfield to Elizabeth.

An executive session of members of the Council, together with Chandler W. Riker, of Newark, president of the road, and H. C. VanEmburgh, of Plainfield, took up the time till midnight, and after that the ordinance was taken up, read and passed upon section by section, the work not being finished till the early hours of the morning.

The route provided for through Roselle is as follows: Starting at South avenue at the Cranford borough limits it will pass over this street to within 100 feet of the Roselle Club stables, thence over a private right of way to Second avenue, which is to be widened from sixty to eighty-one feet, to a street to be known as Sheridan avenue, thence over Third avenue to the city line of Elizabeth, where it is expected connections will be made with the New Jersey Traction Company.

The franchise is granted for ninety-nine years, beginning January 1st, 1900. The road must be in operation by April 1st, 1900. The expense of widening South avenue will fall upon the company, it being estimated at $15,000. In consideration of the granting of the franchise the compensation to the borough will be $100 per mile of street railway in the borough for the first five years. For the second five years the company will pay the borough three per cent. of the gross earnings, or not less than $250 per mile of track per year. After ten years the company agrees to pay ten per cent. of the gross earnings to the borough.

The company is placed under $20,000 bonds to perform their contract faithfully.

HAIR WAS PULLED.

Jealous Woman Fought Tiger-like Over a Man at Scotch Plains.

Scotch Plains in the past has endeavored disgraceful fights in the streets between men, but Saturday night about 11:30 o'clock two members of the gentle sex became engaged in an altercation over a man, and in a few minutes their was a great deal of hair pulling and scratching done. The combatants were separated and spirited away towards Plainfield upon the trolley car.

NEARLY KILLED AT THE MERRY-GO-ROUND.

Engineer's Blouse Caught in Fast Revolving Machinery.

TAKEN TO THE HOSPITAL.

JAMES SMITH, OF NEWAR , THE UNFORTUNATE V.CTIM.

Bones Broken, Gashes and Bruises and Six Teeth Knocked Out—In a Serious Condition, But Physicians Hope to Save His Life—Was Visited at the Hospital by His Uncle Saturday.

James Smith, of 82 Chambers street, Newark, lies at Muhlenberg Hospital in a serious condition, and if he survives it will be a miracle. Smith is sixteen years of age, and is the engineer for the merry-go-round now located on Chatham street. About 9 o'clock Friday evening he was standing close to the gas engine which runs the affair, and in reaching over the cable and flywheel to adjust some part of the machinery, his blouse caught in the flywheel, and before he could save himself was dragged into the revolving wheel. He made one trip over the cable, when his weight and size stopped the machinery. The proprietor quickly learning the trouble, hastened to assist Smith, and finally he was taken from the machinery in an unconscious condition.

The ambulance was sent for and he was removed to the hospital, where an examination of his injuries was made. He had a compound fracture of the right arm, which was also crushed badly, and had a deep gash in his side. He also sustained a deep cut in the chin and one on the upper lip and there was a bad laceration on his head. There was other bruises about the body, all of which made the suffering more intense.

Proper treatment was given to Smith and the physicians do not believe that he will die. He is doing well today and unless other complications arise he is in a fair way to recover in time. Word was sent to his father in Newark, but owing to illness he could not come. The injured man's uncle came in his place and saw the young man Saturday.

RODE TO THEIR HEARTS' CONTENT.

Children's Home Tots Guests of the Merry-Go-Round Man.

About fifty little ones from the Children's Home were given a jolly time Thursday afternoon. The proprietor of the merry-go-round, with commendable forethought, invited the children to be his guests on the occasion of an afternoon's outing. From 2 o'clock until 5 the juveniles were given free rides. It was a generous act on the part of the proprietor of this most popular of amusements among little folks. The children were accompanied by an attendant, who patiently waited until all her charges had enjoyed themselves to their hearts' delight. And what a time the little folks did have. Round and round they whirled for fully two hours, and it did not cost them one penny. The children wish, through The Press, to thank their benefactor for his generosity.

CURIOUS LODGE ROOM

An Historic Cave Used by an Odd Fellow Society.

Probably the most curious meeting place in the world is the lodge room of Gap Creek Lodge, No 72, Independent of Order of Odd Fellows. The lodge for five years has been meeting in Hyder's Cave, near Gap Run, Tenn. The cave, in Carter county, five miles from Elizabethtown and seven miles from Johnson City, was discovered by the first settlers of Tennessee. Earth taken from the cave has long been used for the manufacture of saltpetre. During the Civil War the cave was worked by the Confederate Government, and thousands of pounds of saltpetre were made there. Some of the powder used in the battle of King's Mountain was manufactured from saltpetre dug in this cave.

The cave lies due east and west, and at any time during the day there is light enough to read. The antercom of the lodge room is twelve feet square, arched over by variegated limestone. It is separated from the main hall by folding doors.

The hall proper is much lower than the anteroom. The main floor is 20x36 feet. At one end is a platform 12 feet square, elevated thirty inches above the floor. The roof is an arch, the top of which is twenty feet from the floor. During the summer season the sun shines in the face of the Noble Grand from 3 o'clock until evening.

Since the lodge, which has fifty-five members, began meeting in the cave it has had no deaths. Frequently picnics and occasionally preaching services are held in the cave, which is so light that pictures can be taken sixty feet under ground without artificial light.

NIAGARA AFLAME

The Seething Torrent to be Lighted by Electricity.

Buffalo's big exposition—and if only one-half of the promises of the management are realized it will be in every respect a big affair—will be the occasion of what will doubtless be a most brilliant and startling electrical illumination.

Niagara Falls will be transformed into a flood of fire. The seething, roaring torrent will be ablaze with all the hues of the spectrum. The superlative natural grandeur of the scene will be so enhanced that the projectors of the striking novel enterprise contend that its success will make the exposition an event in history.

The idea is to erect a series of tall towers on both the American and Canadian sides of the river. On the top of these lofty spires, huge electric lights will be placed in such manner that they may be played on any part of the falls. The illumination may picture the dazzling effect that will be produced when a score of these powerful instruments of illumination are brought to bear upon the rushing waters as they tumble irresistibly over the rocky ledge into the depths beneath. A constant change of colors will be used in the manipulation of the searchlights, so that now the falls will be like molten silver, again a flood of crimson, again as green as old ocean among its many cubby-holes, and so on through the whole gamut of the painter's palette. The astonishing fact will be still further heightened by the use of electric arc lights in the Cave of the Winds, which will given to the water as it falls in front of it a weird, phosphorescent glow. The power for this record making illumination will be all within easy reach, as Niagara will itself be made to do all the necessary work.

The plan is certainly a daring, spectacular arrangement, but scientists hope to discover something new about the effect of light in water. This has been done to a slight extent with electrical fountains, but Niagara will offer an entirely new field.

An Exploded Myth.

Dutch cleanliness! Another common fallacy. Truly enough, scrubbing and washing appears to be the whole occupation of the Dutch housewife. Women and children are always spotless in their attire, bright and clean as far as their persons are exposed to the public view; but it is a fact, that this cleanliness is only on the surface, so much so that artists are positively afraid of taking a model to their studio.

That sea water could be used for bathing never seems to strike the inhabitants of Holland. And what is the use of washing and cleaning linen and household utensils from morning to night, if the water used for the purpose is of the nature of Voisdam Canal—a stagnant pool, the receptacle for the refuse of the whole village? Milk cans, table linen, spoons and forks and plates are dipped indiscriminately into this evil-smelling, grimy liquid, which cannot but nourish germs of typhoid fever and other infectious diseases. That is the much-vaunted Dutch cleanliness.

A New Umbrella Idea.

"Here is what I believe to be the only umbrella of its kind in Ner Orleans," says a lawyer who has an office in the shopping district. "I bought it many a year before last, and nobody can open it except myself. Do you notice that little keyhole in the handle? Here's the key on the other end of my watch chain, and until it is inserted and turned the thing is absolutely immovable. Anybody else would find it harder to raise than a Kansas mortgage. On at least a dozen different occasions the umbrella has been stolen, or taken by accident, if you prefer that term, but it always found the way home. You see, my name is cut on the handle, and the umbrella itself is well known to all the attaches of the building. When they see a stranger struggling with it on a rainy day they promptly confiscate the property and bring it back. It's such a good scheme. I'm surprised the idea hasn't been generally adopted in this country."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

ON LETTER-WRITING.

Be Sure Not to Write Too Often and Don't Effervesce.

In writing to men, girls—especially girls past 25—don't say too much, and don't say it in many words. Men all have latent, inborn cruelty under their waistcoats, and it all comes out when they get documents—over four pages long.

Don't use more than one "darling" per page, even to your fiance. Gush if you must, when you are together, but don't effervesce upon paper. Why should you, really?

If you hunger for warfare, write to your lover a sweet, loving postal card, directed to the office. Try it and wait.

No matter if he does want you to write every day—don't. A few days' waiting for a letter from you will be much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who supported to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the born fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficient deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

"Yes, indeed," was the reply. "Our sales are increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the born fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any cases of liver troubles or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what I needed and were recommended. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month."

"Do you have much call for these?" objected to their mother's testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There are many I could take tabules to, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the telling begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the born fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles." decided she was quite right.

A new style packet containing SIX RIPANS TABULES, packed in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at many drug stores—FIVE FIVE CENTS. This low priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical, who cannot afford the high priced glass vial containing SIX for SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. Or, if you prefer, a single carton containing six will be sent for five cents by mail, if your druggist refuses to supply you. Address RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton of RIPANS TABULES will be sent free of charge to any one sending their name and address, with the price of five cents, to the above address. Druggists, newspaper, or we agents and all some liquor and tobacco habits. The given freely.

MAD WOMAN TENANT SHOT LANDLORD DEAD.

Terrible Tragedy Enacted at Somerset Park Tuesday Afternoon By a Woman.

PAUL ROEHRICHT KILLED ALMOST INSTANTLY.

THREATENED WITH EVICTION FINGERHUTH HAD GIVEN HIS WIFE A REVOLVER.

When He Left in the Morning He Told Her to Shoot Anyone Who Tried to Disturb the House They Occupied —Force of Men Appeared in the Afternoon—Forced Door Open and Then Followed the Shooting—Coroner's Inquest.

With calm deliberation, Mrs. Theodore Fingerhuth shot and almost instantly killed Paul Roehricht, the proprietor of Somerset Park, in front of one of his own houses in the Park, Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The fatality resulted from the attempt by Mr. Roehricht to forcibly eject the Fingerhuths from the house which they refused to vacate. Robert M. Clark, of 49 Jackson avenue, general manager and attorney for Mr. Roehricht, escaped a similiar fate through the failure of one of the cartridges to explode. Mr. Roehricht was a prominent New York business man, besides his interests at Somerset Park, and had a large jewelry story at 2155 Seventh avenue, New York

A year ago Roehricht purchased the William Spencer farm which lies just north of Washingtonville. He also bought several smaller properties adjoing with the intention of making a great suburban resort for New York business men. This spring he began active operations toward opening up Somerset Park to the public. He wanted a landscape gardener and employed Theodore Fingerhuth who came here from Long Island early in the spring. He was to be paid a salary and have the use of the old Aaron Allen homestead on the valley road, free of charge. The Allen homestead is a mile to the north-east of Washingtonville and on the edge of the Park.

Fingerhuth brought with him his wife and son, a young man of twenty years, and settled in the Allen homestead.

It is alleged that Fingerhuth's work was very unsatisfactory. He was instructed to plant 150 maple trees along Empire avenue, one of the new thoroughfares cut through the Park. He made a mistake and put in hickory-nut trees instead. Finally Roehricht became very much dissatisfied and discharged Fingerhuth. He ordered the gardener to move away from the house, but Fingerhuth refused, claiming that he had a contract with Roehricht for a year. That happened three months ago and every effort was made after that to persuade them to leave, but without avail.

Roehricht and his general manager, Lawyer Clark, whose law offices are located at 109 East Front street, brought every possible influence to bear but without avail. Then, on Clark's advice, a warrant was sworn out before Justice Mattison, in the borough, for Fingerhuth's arrest on the charge of trespass.

Monday morning Constable Francis Bartell, of Washingtonville, and Lawyer Clark went to Fingerhuth's place to serve the warrant and demand possession of the premises. Fingerhuth, it is alleged, threatened Clark and the constable with a revolver, and defied the law.

He finally agreed to send for his lawyer, William G. DeMeza, of this city, and take his advice. DeMeza went up to the scene of the trouble and promised Clark that Fingerhuth and his son would appear before Justice Mattison next day at 3 o'clock. It had been Clark's aim to get the father and son away from the house by some strategy. So he went back to Justice Mattison with the warrant which Constable Bartell had not served and withdrew the complaint against Fingerhuth and his son. He afterwards swore out another warrant against Fingerhuth on the charge of assault, which he instructed Constable Bartell to serve on father and son as they returned to Washingtonville late in the afternoon.

Early in the afternoon Fingerhuth left his home and started for town. It is rumored that he instructed his wife to shoot any intruder who tried to obtain entrance during his absence. It is alleged that on his way down town he stopped a few minutes at William Demler's store at Washingtonville, and told Mr. Demler that he had left the well prepared and that she would shoot Roehricht or anyone else who should attempt to eject her.

Fingerhuth and his son then came to North Plainfield and appeared in Justice Mattison's court at 3 o'clock with their lawyer. There they learned that the charge of trespass against them had been withdrawn. Young Fingerhuth returned to Washington ville, where he was arrested and locked up in the borough jail, while the father remained for some time in the borough saloons drinking freely. He was arrested just as he started for home and also lodged in the borough jail.

Lawyer Clark decided to make another attempt Tuesday afternoon to secure possession of the house. He sent his brother, Edward O. Clark, who is studying law at his office and at the University of New York, to demand possession from Mrs. Fingerhuth. While it was recognized that Fingerhuth was a dangerous man, Clark did not believe that Mrs. Fingerhuth would offer any active resistance The younger Clark was accompanied by Thomas Quinn, Lawyer Clark's clerk, Emil Dembowski, foreman for Roehricht, and Harry Ryan, Clark's coachman, who drove them to the old Allen residence.

Edward Clark told Mrs. Fingerhuth that she must give up the house or else he would be compelled to take possession forcibly. She refused to accede to the demand and flourished a revolver threatening to shoot the young man if he attempted to cross the three hold. Clark then sent Ryan back to the superintendent's office where Lawyer Clark and Roehricht were, to tell them that they could do nothing with the woman. Young Clark and his companions then withdrew a short distance from the house and waited until the carriage returned. Roehricht, Clark and William Titus, of Washingtonville, came back in it.

Mrs. Clemens, who lives on the old Bullman farm on the valley road, had been in to see Mrs. Fingerhuth but left the house before the party arrived. She was a witness of the fatality that followed.

As soon as Roehricht arrived on the scene, he hastened to the kitchen door. It is a long frame house, consisting of a one story and attic main part with a one story addition at one end which is used as a kitchen. There are two doors in the main part of the house. Both were bolted. Mrs. Fingerhuth guarded the kitchen door.

Roehricht attempted to reason with the woman.

"I want nothing to do with you," she kept saying. "Wait until my husband comes back."

Seeing that the effort was useless, Roehricht turned to the others and said, "Go ahead, boys,"

Then Lawyer Clark sprang forward and ran up to the kitchen door. Mrs. Fingerhuth was on the other side. His weight pushed the door inward. Suddenly she stepped aside and allowed it to open. She pointed the revolver at Clark's breast which was barely two feet away. She pulled the trigger but there was only a click. For some reason the cartridge failed to explode. Clark jumped back. She then closed the door.

The snapping of the revolver led the party to believe that the threat to shoot was a bluff and that the revolver was not loaded. Clark called to his brother to hold the door and not let Mrs. Fingerhuth out while he forced a way in at one of the other doors. Ed Clark responded and grasped the handle of the kitchen door. Meanwhile Lawyer Clark had nearly succeeded in gaining an entrance.

Suddenly Mrs. Fingerhuth gave the door a sudden jerk from within and pulled the door knob out of the grasp of the younger Clark. She stepped to the door and pointed the revolver at Roehricht who stood some five feet away. Clark sprang back as the revolver was stretched out over his shoulder and fell backward from the piazza into a narrow space between the house and fence.

The revolver was pointed at Roehricht and the trigger was pulled without a word. There was a flash, and a bang and a cloud of smoke.

"I guess I'm not shot!" exclaimed Roehricht as he unbuttoned his vest and felt in the direction of his heart. "I guess not. I guess not."

He was examining his shirt on which a tiny spot of blood appeared. Suddenly he straightened up. "My God, I am shot." Those were his last words, and he fell backwards into the arms of Harry Ryan. He died five minutes afterwards. Mrs. Clemens went into the house and obtained a pillow from Mrs. Fingerhuth, on which the dying man's head was rested. Mrs. Fingerhuth withdrew into the house as soon as the fatal shot was fired and closed the door.

There was great excitement. Edward Clark drove to North Plainfield after medical aid. He took Dr. Zeglio and Dr. Pittis to the scene. They arrived ten minutes after the man had died. The ambulance was also summoned and was used after the arrival of Coroner DeMott to carry the remains back to DeMott's undertaking establishment on Somerset street, where it awaited the action of the coroner's jury.

The news of the shooting spread with great rapidity. Constables Geo. Stewart and Frank Bartell, of Washingtonville, Constable Will Emmons from North Plainfield, and Constable John Gjettlesen from Plainfield, gathered and went to the house to arrest Mrs. Fingerhuth. She made no resistance and opened the door to them. She showed no signs of emotion and was perfectly self-composed when she climbed into a carriage with the constables and was driven to the borough jail. Her son was arrested on his way home and Theodore Fingerhuth was locked up later in the afternoon when the officers found him in North Plainfield.

It was arranged by Coroner Henry DeMott that an inquest should be held that evening at 10 o'clock, but it was not until 9:30 o'clock, when County Physician Wagoner and Assistant Prosecutor Reger, of Somerville, appeared at the morgue, and informed him of the wrong course he was pursuing. He was told that it was his duty to notify the county physician at once and he would give the coroner proper authority to go ahead with the inquest.

Dr. Wagoner and Mr. Reger viewed the remains, after which the former drew up the necessary official paper giving the coroner the proper authority. Constable Wm. N. Pangborn was then found and he was instructed to draw a jury for the inquest.

An adjournment was then made to the Manhattan Hotel, where the coroner held the preliminary session. Constable Pangborn called the following jurors: Andrew Love, Sr., foreman; Albert Runyon, Wm. J. Conroy, Philip H. Currin, John T. Case, Theodore Zeller, Wm. H. Engleman, Michael Koller, Andrew Lutkins, Geo. Watts, Joseph A. Blatz and George Egel. Wm. Demler was called but asked to excused, owing to certain knowledge he has of the affair.

After the jury was called the constable took them to the morgue where they were sworn over the body of the dead man, as prescribed by law. They then returned to the Manattan Hotel, where more trouble followed.

Ex-Senator Hetfield, to the opinion of the coroner that it was for the jury to decide whether they would like a post mortem, and he put the question to them. To this Councilman Hetfield counsel for Mrs. Fingerhuth, the so closed, objected. The objection was received, but the coroner insisted upon knowing whether a post mortem was necessary as to the care of the body.

Dr. Wagoner stated clearly that when the proceedings of the jury went before the Grand Jury that body would want to know every detail and he thought it very unusual to omit a a post mortem. After wasting a lot of time for Mr. Reger, who had gone to the Fingerhuth residence to look over the ground where the shooting occurred, the coroner thought that an adjournment would be in order and he so decided. He then instructed the jurors to be present at 10 o'clock this morning when a post mortem would be held.

As soon as the body of the murdered man and the Fingerhuths had been brought to North Plainfield Lawyer Robert M. Clark took the train for New York to tell Mrs. Roehricht of her husband's sudden death. It had been Clark's intention to leave for Washington last evening to push forward the project for a postoffice at Washingtonville in the interest of Mr. Roehricht. Mrs. Roehricht, who was well acquainted with her husband's plans, knew that Clark was going there.

The Roehrichts live in a flat above Roericht's jewelry store at 2155 Seventh avenue, New York. When Clark arrived there Mrs. Roehricht was sitting in the parlor with some friends.

"Why, Mr. Clark, what are you doing here?" exclaimed the surprised wife. He had come to tell her, he explained, that her husband would not be home that night. The company departed and Mrs. Roehricht wanted to know the reason for her husband's absence. There had been a little trouble out at Somerset Park, Clark explained, and her husband had been hurt. He was in good hands, however, the lawyer hastened to add.

"Was it with Fingerhuth?" demanded Mrs. Roehricht, who had always feared that the trouble with the erstwhile employe would end seriously.

Clark said yes. Gradually he admitted that Mr. Roehricht's injures were more and more serious until, after threequarters of an hour's talk, he told her all.

Mrs. Roehricht became hysterical and was greatly affected by the news. Leaving her in the hands of friends Clark returned reaching this city at 1 o'clock next morning. The train on which he arrived carried the Fingerhuths to Somerville to spend the night in the county jail there.

Paul Roehricht, the murdered man, was of medium height, rather stout. He was born in Germany fifty-three years ago and has been in this country most of his life. For the past three years he was interested in the tract of land called Somerset Park. He had a long beard and moustache of black curly hair.

Mrs. Fingerhuth, who fired the fatal shot, is an ignorant German woman. She was short and stout, apparently fifty years old, and had a very determined expression. Her face was of the German type.

The post mortem ordered that evening by Coroner DeMott took place yesterday and was conducted by Dr. Wagoner, county physician, assisted by Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, and the course of the bullet was traced through the heart near the spine.

At 10:30 o'clock Coroner DeMott called the inquest at the Manhattan Hotel, at which time the jurors and Prosecutor Dungan, of Somerville, were present. Lawyer Hetfield and Lawyer Wm. DeMeza were also present in the interest of the defendants.

Prosecutor Dungan called the first witness, Attorney Robert M. Clark, manager for the late Roehricht. His testimony given regarding the shooting and the trouble between the proprietor and the Fingerhuth family is substantially the same as printed in the story today. There was one point brought out in the examination of this witness, and that was that the party who went to the premises to eject the family, went there without the proper official authority. Mr. Clark stated on the stand that he advised Mr. Roehricht to begin action for ejectment, and the latter said he would think it over. He did so, and finally told Mr. Clark "Let's put them out today, Tuesday, and don't be a damn coward." To this Mr. Clark replied "All right we will."

Mr. Clark also stated that on several occasions Mrs. Fingerhuth threatened to shoot when he, and others in company with him, went to the house. Mr. Clark did not actually see her shoot Mr. Roehricht, but saw the revolver in her hand. His testimony gave in every detail the trouble between the parties concerned.

The prosecution called Harry Dreier to the stand, hoping to prove that the revolver used to do the shooting was purchased at his store on West Front street. Mr. Dreier stated that he sold an ordinary American bulldog, double-action, 32 calibre, together with fifteen cartridges. He could not tell who made the purchase other than it was a young man.

Emil Dembowski was sworn and told his story. He heard the shot fired but did not see Mrs. Fingerhuth do it. Mrs. Augustine Element gave her testimony in French and it was interpeted by Mrs. Wm. Demarest. She did not see the shot fired but saw Roehricht fall. Edward O. Clark, Thomas Quinn and William Titus also told their versions of the affair, after which the inquest was adjourned until tomorrow.

WILL PREACH FIRST SERMON AT YALE.

Special Honor for Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards.

HIS SON ENTERS COLLEGE.

DR. RICHARDS WAS COLLEGE CHUM OF PRESIDENT HADLEY.

His Name Was Suggested by New York Independent for the Presidency of Yale Then Vacant—President Hadley Has Invited Him to Preach Opening Sermon to Freshman Class in Which Son Will be.

Although it was not generally known in Plainfield at the time, it is nevertheless a fact that Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church of this city, was mentioned as a possibility for the then vacant presidency of the faculty of Yale University and his name was considered by the board of trustees of that institution. The suggestion was first made by the New York Independent.

Dr. Richards and the man who was finally chosen to be president of Yale, Rev. Dr. Hadley, were old chums in college together. They both attended Yale where Dr. Richards was one class ahead of the present president of the faculty. Although in different classes, they participated in many of the college larks together.

In remembrance of those days as well as in regard for his eminent position as a leading Presbyterian divine of New Jersey, President Hadley has invited Rev. Dr. Richards to preach the first sermon of the year to the Freshman class at Yale. The honor is considered a great one. Besides having the pleasure and honor of preaching the first sermon under the administration of his old chum, Dr. Richards will have the opportunity of speaking to his own son who graduated from Leal's School last June and enters the Freshman class at Yale this fall. The sermon will be preached the first of October.

TOOK FORBIDDEN FRUIT.

Wife of a Well-Known West End Resident Stole Apples Several Bu hels at a Time.

The most stupendous and daring case of apple stealing which has recently developed in this city, where the robbing of orchards is of almost daily occurrence, was committed on the morning of Labor Day. The orchard to suffer was on the estate of S. Q. Lawson at Grant avenue and Seventh street. The Press has it upon excellent authority that the trespassers are none other than the wife of a well-known resident of the West End, who was seen to drive to the orchard with her hired man and a boy and deliberately proceed to help herself to the products of the orchard. The woman was seen to carry away in her buggy several bushels of the apples and take them to her barn.

The place is in charge of Officer Lungar, who has been given authority to arrest any persons caught trespassing upon the premises. The matter has been placed in the hands of a well known attorney of this city. Efforts are being made by the woman to effect a settlement. Her husband is a well-known manufacturer, whose place of business is not in Plainfield. Some startling developments may be made in a day or two.

TO IMPROVE CEMETERY.

WILL RAISE NECESSARY FUNDS BY SALE OF PART OF PROPERTY.

Have Grouped All Vacant Lots on Seventh Street Side by Exchanging for Others—Advertising for Missing LotOwners

A strong effort is being made by the the trustees of the First M. E. church to improve the condition of the Methodist cemetery on Plainfield avenue, which has long been in such a delapidated state that many believed that the city would soon take steps to close it. The improvements contemplated include a new fence and a keeper's lodge which, the trustees hope, may give permanency and safety to the cemetery.

To meet this expense, a number of occupied lots in the cemetery are to be exchanged for unoccupied ones of equal or greater value, the church paying all the expenses of removal of remains and necessary deeds. This arrangement will gather all the unoccupied lots on the Seventh street side of the cemetery and make room for several building lots, from the sale of which the necessary funds will be raised to make the desired improvements.

All owners of these lots who have been found have consented to the arrangement. Former Assemblyman W. R. Goodington, as attorney for the trustees, made application before the Court of Common Pleas at Elizabeth this morning to have the court act for those owners who cannot be found after due advertising. This movement has the active support of the various lot owners who wish to make the cemetery permanent.

SPEEDWAY IS ASSURED

INTERESTED ONES DECIDE TO CONSUMMATE THE PROJECT.

A Meeting Held This Morning—Row of Shade Trees to Divide Speedway and Boulevard—Civil Engineer Engaged.

A meeting of the property owners interested in the Woodland boulevard and speedway project, which contemplates the widening of the present Woodlawn avenue from sixty to 110 feet, was held yesterday and steps taken to consummate the idea. The plan is to have two driveways, leaving W. R. Goodington, of Maude trees on the western side of the avenue in the middle of the widened street. Then on one side would be constructed a macadamized boulevard and on the other a speedway.

It is proposed to carry this width from Prospect avenue on the north to the Hillside Golf links on the south. It would make the most beautiful driveway in this section, affording a fine view of the surrounding country for miles around.

A committee was appointed to secure engineers to begin the work at once. They have employed Frank J. Hubbard to do this work.

AND NOW A WIFE TURNS UP FOR HERMIT GOULD

More Complications in Trying to Find His Fortune.

SHE HAS THE STRONG BOX.

IT IS SAID THE WOMAN TREATED THE OLD MAN BADLY.

Important Letters Received by Lawyer Harry C. Runyon, Who is Working for the Heirs in the Case—The Couple Were Married Near Barnegat Bay—The Wife Is Said to be Dissipated.

Further developments regarding the death of William Gould, the eccentric hermit, who formerly lived at Scotch Plains, have elicited the fact that the old man was married about two years before he died to a woman at Bayville, this State. It is believed that this woman has some knowledge of the old fellow's money, which his heirs have been unable to locate. Lawyer H. C. Runyon, who is looking into the affairs of the deceased at the request of A. H. Martin, of Chicago, a nephew, has in his possession a number of letters which have been forwarded to him by Mr. Martin. These letters convey the information that Mr. Gould was twice married. His first marriage took place in Delaware county, where he at one time lived near DeLancey. But that was long before he came to this section to live. His first wife died about thirteen years ago. It appears that after Mr. Gould sold his place at Scotch Plains he went down to Barnegat with a view of benefitting his health. The climate appeared to agree with him and he leased a house at Bayville, a small settlement on Barnegat Bay. This was in 1891. While there he became acquainted with a woman who had formerly been employed as housekeeper for one of the oyster men.

One day the oysterman died and the woman, who was known as Sarah, went to keep house for Gould. Being aware that the old man had considerable cash the woman induced Gould to marry her. The marriage was performed by a local justice of the peace.

From what can be learned of Gould's married life by reading the numerous letters in Mr. Runyon's possession, it appears that the old man was badly treated. His wife was very dissipated and is alleged to have treated him shamefully. She ruled the old man with an iron hand and even refused to allow him to communicate with his sisters. It was always necessary for him to have a neighbor who lived about two miles away write his letters.

These letters told of his ill treatment and of the drinking habits of his wife.

Gould died in 1897 and was buried in Dover Chapel Cemetery at Toms River.

What ever became of his money cannot be learned. It is believed that the woman whom Gould married knows more about it than she has developed. The strong box in which Gould is known to have kept his private papers is in the possession of his wife. There is a belief in Bayville that the woman in the case had a husband living at the time she married Gould. Efforts are being made to find this man and also to obtain possession of the strong box.

Both Mr. Martin, the nephew, of Chicago, and Miss Mahala Gould, William Gould's malden sister, who lives in Monson, Me., have requested Mr. Runyon to use every effort to clear up the mystery about the old man's marriage and the disposition of the large amount of money he was supposed to have at the time of his death. The full name of the woman whom Gould married at Bayville has not yet been ascertained.

William Gould's age at the time of his death was 87. The woman he married was about 45 years old. It is the opinion of many people living at Bayville that the woman inviegled Gould into marrying her that she might gain possession of his money.

The search for the missing money will be vigorously prosecuted by Attorney Runyon.

TAKING WATER.

How It is Done While Engines Go At Full Speed.

On many of the railroads it is no longer necessary for a train to top to allow the engineer to replenish his bottom with water. All travelers have now become accustomed to seeing the narrow troughs, 1,200 to 1,400 feet long, at various dead level points along the road, and they know that the strip of water that it contains is scooped up by the engine as it speeds over the tracks. But people from foreign countries often ten and twenty times about the water between the tracks and marvel when they hear the story about "drinking" the engine on the fly.

What seems a marvelous mechanic contrivance is an extremely simple thing. A pipe with a scope end is fastened to the tender. It is C-shaped, with the top end pointing into the water tank and the bottom curled under the body of the tender. If any of levers this end may be dropped until it reaches the level of the ties.

When the engine reaches the trough the lever drops the scoop end, which is 3½ inches high and 12 inches wide into the trough, into which it sinks a distance of about six inches or within an inch of the bottom. It may wobble slightly without doing any harm, because the trough is twenty-four inches wide.

Dropping the end is all that is done, for the motion of the engine does the rest. The water rushes into the pipe and fills the tender with a fresh and force that suggests to the uninitiated the use of powerful engines.

"The most remarkable thing about the whole affair, so far as the rail road official, "is the fact that the speed of the train must be reduced when the water is taken on. It reaches the bend in the pipe with such force that if the train were allowed to go at its regular speed the metal would be seriously strained, so we reduce the speed to about thirty miles an hour and have the best results."

While the engine is passing over the trough at the rate of thirty miles an hour it takes up about 4,000 gallons of water—about as much as would be contained in 100 spirit barrels.

A THIEF CATCHER.

He Is a Person of Great Importance In the Tyrol.

The odd figure seen in this illustration is not an escaped patient from some lunatic asylum, in spite of his bizarre appearance. On the contrary he is a personage of great importance in his own country—the neighborhood of Meran, in the Tyrol. He is known as a Saltner, and it is his duty to guard from thieves the grapes and other fruit. These Saltners are generally men of stalwart specimens of humanity, being chosen from among the young men who bear the best reputation. Their dress, as can be seen from our photo, is highly fanciful, and dates back many centuries. It consists of a three-cornered hat, decorated with a profusion of feathers, not to mention squirrel and foxes' tails; a leather jacket, covered with wild boars' teeth and metal chains, and short leather breeches, which leave the knees bare. The Saltner's armament is somewhat peculiar, consisting as it does of a medieval halbert and a modern air-shooter. The work is very hard, the men being on duty day and night all the year round. They are even debarred by the exigencies of their employment from attending church. Their dwellings—called "Saltner's huts"—are made of reeds, chairs made of straw, these being their only shelter against the inclemencies of the weather. All night these grape guardians wander about, each man having his own district which he may not leave.

Just for Spite.

"One of the strangest incidents that I ever witnessed," replied Col. Lyle," occurred in Washington, D. C."

"How was that, Colonel," interposed a Gazette reporter, and the crowd drew their chairs nearer.

"It was early one morning," continued the Colonel. "Several years ago while I was in that city a gentleman arrived at the hotel in the early one morning, and while making some requests of the landlord who rented the hotel received a short reply. Thereupon he inquired as to who owned the hotel. After receiving the information he went out and succeeded in finding the owner and actually paid him $10,000 for the building, and in less than one hour returned to the hotel with the keys and the deed to the property and locked up the hotel, with the remark that 'if the hotel couldn't be run decent he'd just close it up.'"—Henderson Courier.

"Why are camp meetings always held in the warmest weather?"

"That's the time people are afraid of hot climates."

AMONG SAVAGES.

Adventures of a Castaway That Are Stranger Than Fiction.

The adventures of Louis de Beaumont recently stirred England with a sensation not to controversy, and it was pretty conclusive proof that this traveler could not have been cast away among the aborigines of Australia quite as he said. The result was a general belief that most such claimants were impostors. But there were those who were ready to point out, did have very much the adventures which M. de Rougemont claimed as his.

Narcisse Pierre Pelletier was a native of the town of St. Gilles, near Ile d'Yeu, on the coast of France. sailed as cabin boy in the Saint Paul of Bordeaux, which was wrecked in 1858 on the reef in the Louisade Archipelago. In the endeavor of the crew to reach an English settlement in an open boat, they were driven out, did have very much the adventures which M. de Rougemont claimed as his.

red color and had a glazed appearance produced by some sugar-like substance. His breast was adorned after the custom of the tribe among which his lot had been for so long cast, with raised figures. He had the thickest of an ordinary leadpencil, and the lobe of his right ear was ornamented with a piece of wood over an inch and a half in diameter and four inches long.

Says a paper of July 31, 1875:

"The sailors of the John Bell who found him set off ere under the impression that he came willingly, and that the savages understood he was being ransomed with 'trade.' Narcisse states, however, that neither did the natives wish him to go, nor did he himself wish to leave them, but that they feared resistance would have caused the sailors to fire upon them.

"For the first few days after his return to civilization he was described as being restless and uneasy, and at having sat upon a rail like a bird, watching every one in a frightened manner. The most extraordinary feature of the case is that so much a mere boy when deserted, he has retained his knowledge of reading and writing, and can now count up with ease to 100, although on his first arrival he do so he failed when he reached eighty.

"His account of life among the savages is necessarily meagre, partly because he has still some difficulty in expressing his ideas in French, and partly from a natural reticent disposition. He like that of the rest of his tribe, appears to have been principally passed in fishing and hunting, with an occasional brush with a hostile tribe."

The woman was taken by Indians and was there put into the hands of the French Consul, who sent him back to the land of his birth. Among his family and friends he quickly regained the knowledge and love of civilization, and lived as a fisherman with them until his death, years ago.

A Staong Child.

There is a physician in West Philadelphia who has an one year old, and this boy is probably the strongest human being for its age and weight in the world. Its father will hold a cane in his hand and the baby will grasp it, will draw itself up to its chin three times. That is but one of its numerous feats of strength. The physician says that the little fellow, under regular development is due to a daily massage treatment. Every morning he lays the little fellow, naked, on a blanket, and kneads it unsparingly for thirty minutes. Once a month he weighs the baby and measures its height, and the result is a monthly increase of weight and girth are remarkable. The baby has never had shoes or stockings on its feet or a hat on its head, and in the summer it wears only a little sleeveless dress that comes to its knees. It gets a cold bath every morning. "There is nothing goes wrong," the physician adds, "with this child will be one of the strongest men the world has ever seen. He will never get sick, and he will never lose a tooth. As for his muscles, with massage and a course of exercise that I have laid out, they will be big and supple all over his body. At his man will be, when tense, as hard as steel, and when relaxed as soft as the flesh of a young girl."—Philadelphia Record.

Matrimonial.

In four hours recently a Paris court granted 294 divorces, a little over a divorce a minute. All of the parties received state assistance in their cases, so that their divorces cost them nothing. Now it seems that an effort has been made to balance matters, as in the little village of Plougastel, the other day, thirty-two marriages were celebrated at one stroke by the priest of the parish church.

I didn't go to the circus, bein' a church member and a deacon, but I seen the menagerie. I was in town all day, but I didn't drink nuthin' but some hard cider and some stomach bitters. Long about six o'clock I started for home, drivin' my mare. We was goin' along at a pretty good clip—they ain't many hosses can beat that mare, if you want to know—when jest ez we come to the corner of Jim Simmon's pasture lot the mare shied. "I had an uncle, ma'am, who had just the same affliction."

"Yes," continued the angular man; "he couldn't pronounce any word beginning with 'th' to save his bleased life. The stout lady was dark-red from vexation. "You are insulting," she snorted.

"Well, I don't wonder you hate to have anybody refer to it," said the angular man, with great cheerfulness. "But I couldn't help noticing it when you took my seat and weren't able to say 'Thank you.' SILK HAT CAUSED A RIOT.

It Was the First of Its Kind Seen on the Streets of London.

Jan. 15, 1797, was the date fixed by Mr. Hetherington for the first appearance in public with the new hat, the silk hat of to-day, says the Hatters' Gazette. He relised that in the natural course of events he would create a sensation, but he was not prepared for the commotion which followed. It was with no little trepidation that, about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, Mr. Hetherington emerged from his shop in the Strand, a half a mile distant against it, but he was determined, and forth he sallied.

The Strand, as now, was one of the busy streets of London and Mr. Hetherington had not walked ten feet before merchants and others, attracted by the unusual sight, stepped and gazed in wonder. Mr. Hetherington, however, moved on, but men who had only stopped to look now followed after him and in less time than it takes to tell it the street was packed with a howling mob. Those on the outskirts of the crowd did not know the nature of the trouble, but, on the corner of Jim Simmon's pasture lot the mare shied. looked around to see what was wrong, an' right opposite the road I seen a little green monkey. PRAYING IN STREETS.

Impressive Mediæval Spectacle Witnessed in Vienna.

The annual processions of Corpus Christi, in which the Emperor takes part, are like the proverbial peas in a pod for family resemblance. But the pageantry of the ceremony is a perennial attraction, and many English and Americans go to Vienna every year to witness it and to get a glimpse of that unique sight—an Emperor praying and kneeling in the streets. The monarch passes in state to the cathedral as early as 7 in the morning. He was driven in a state carriage drawn by eight white horses. The heir apparent drove with him. Behind him came the magnificently accoutred Hungarian and Austrian bodyguards.

The first service was held in the church. In the meantime the route which the foot procession takes was laid with boards, over which grass was strewn. Here and there were placed altars, at which priests in cap and cowled monks reciting paternosters in sotto voice, with hands crossed on the breast. They looked sadly out of place in the bright sunlight—these the real rulers of clerical Austria. Near came the vicars of the various parishes, displaying their respective banners, like temporal knights of old; then the civic corporation, then the officers of the household, the holders of the various Austrian orders, and the military staff. Lastly there appeared the magnificent palanquin of state, under which walked the cardinal bearing the host, before which the soldiers knelt and men reverently uncovered. Behind was the solitary figure of the Emperor. He was bareheaded, and, as the members of his court, bore a lighted candle. He seemed in splendid health, and at the altar in the garden walked with the step of a stately pridden under the canopy. The archdukes took up their position behind him. His Majesty wore a full general's uniform—cocked hat with green plumes, red trousers and the distinctive tunic, with its pale lambent sheen of delicate green. A wonderful scheme of color was this bright green, dotted with the uniform of the guards of the household, and representative of all the chivalry and nobility of the dual monarchy. The hall the dual monarchy. There was certainly a strange incongruity in this mediæval display amid its garish modern surroundings. The pious minded might have regarded it as nothing more or less than solemn mummery, but the sight of the monarch and his suite worshiping under the canopy of heaven kept back the irreverent smile. The moment was deeply impressive when as at the Angelus bell the whole of the court and soldiers knelt and the Kaiser devoutly crossed himself in a silence that was almost audible.

Peculiarities in Eyesight.

Few Climb Stairs Properly.

If one would avoid fatigue in climbing stairs, he must learn to do it properly. A physician of repute tells how this should be done. He says: "Watch a person will tread on the ball of the foot in taking each step. This is very tiresome and wearing on the muscles and it throws the entire suspended weight of the body on the muscles of leg or climbing stairs seek for the most equal distribution of the weight possible. In walking upstairs your feet should be placed squarely down on the step, heel and all, and then the work should be performed slowly and deliberately. In this way there is no strain upon any particular muscle, but each one is doing its duty in a natural manner. The woman who goes upstairs with a spring is no philosopher, or at least she is not making a proper use of her reasoning faculties. The habit, too, of taking two steps at a time when ascending a flight of stairs is exceedingly reprehensible. In any exertion of this kind, which fills the lungs naturally and to a more rapid action, it is desirable that the lungs should have full play. The crouching position in two steps at a time, the blood is imperfectly aerated, and there is trouble at once. Give the lungs a chance to do their work everywhere and at all times."

Is Asphalt Liquid or Solid?

Down in Trinidad, where most of the asphalt used in paving the streets is produced, a question has arisen as to whether the substance may be classed as a liquid or a solid. Upon this issue a recent trial in Trinidad turned. The strata of pitch lies from 100 to 150 feet usually from four to seven feet below the surface, and when cut through, the pitch melts and oozes out. So if a man log down and cut off his head, it would be able to collect pitch coming from under his neighbor's land. The plan was described by one of the witnesses as "boring a hole and when you want to dig your neighbor's pitch." It "bulges out," he explained, "and you shave it off each morning." But suppose the bulge of your neighbor whose pitch had thus been shaved off in adjoining land. The defense was that an underground flow of pitch was like so much water, no man's property until appropriated. But the court held that pitch was a mineral, and that you had no more right to take it from your neighbor by the oozing process than you would have to tap his deposit of iron or silver.

May Be True.

The story is told that when General Ludlow was stationed at Detroit, in charge of the river and harbor work, a contractor came to him with a plan to do some government work. With his visiting card the contractor put on the table a fifty-dollar bill. General Ludlow drew forth two cigars and gave the contractor one of them. Then turning to the table, and not seeing a match, he took the fifty-dollar note, twisted it into a lighter, lit it at the flame at the open grate fire, and lit his cigar with it slowly and carefully. Then he handed the burning stump of the bill to the contractor.

CAGED BEAUTIES.

Exposed for Sale to the Passer-By in an Algerian Town.

Mr. William Shark describes in London Literature a visit, while in Algeria, to a street of caged women. It seems it is forbidden to Europeans after dark, but he wandered in, partly through incident, partly through curiosity. He writes:

"Some women were in barred rooms and some in cages, offered for sale.

"The woman in the first cage I passed was rather pretty, and, though her hair was dark, she had pale blue eyes. Her dress, whose trousers were very wide, clasped with little blue brooches, and I noticed that her lips, the end of her ears and her finger tips were stained a dull red. She accosted me in Moorish-French, and asked me if I would not like to take her away from these jackals of Moors and Arabs. I said I was a stranger, and that if I bere to-day might be far to-morrow. She told me she was not an Arab ('Allah be praised!') and not a Moor, either, but a Koulourli—that is, the child of a Moorish woman by a Turkish father.

"One girl's face and manner impressed me greatly. She was not beautiful, hardly pretty, but she had a singularly winsome face, with large, fine eyes and delicate lips. She was a European, a Spaniard from one of the Balearic Isles. Strangely, she was very fair, with blonde hair full of a dusky gold effects. She had been taken to Oran, at the extreme western end of Algeria, by a Spanish naval officer, and there in a few weeks been deserted. For her child she had a fond affection. Her old Hispano-Mauresque town. After her child was born she had gone inland, to hill-set Tlemcen, the old Moorish capital, on the very edge of the frontier of Morocco. There a rich Moor had taken her to his harem. On his death a few months later, she had been purchased by a friend of Algiers, and straightway sold to a young Turk at Bona. The Turk, when tired of her, sold her to a friend of Algiers, an Arab Sheik, who had grown tired of her in turn and placed her in the street cage, an article for sale. For some minutes I stood talking to the poor imprisoned creature, when a passing guard took notice of the incident and whispered to me in French to move away at once and return to the foreign quarter. He had passed on before I could see his face. The next moment I descried the dark countenance of a Jewish-looking Moor, behind the cage of the Oran woman. He was her owner, and had been listening to our conversation. Then he discovered that he had not a purchaser to deal with he came forward brusquely.

"Do you want her or not?" he demanded, speaking in the purest Parisian French. "No!" Then be off with you, infidel dog, and by the way you came if you value your skin!"

Fly Casting.

In your angling notes, says a writer in the London Standard, you mention the capture of a swallow by a salmon fisher in the East, the striking hook, and fowl, and remark that, though the story is true, the incredulous will find some difficulty in swallowing it. The following story is true, and still more remarkable. I was fishing on the Wily, on the Boyton Manor water, in Wiltshire, some years ago. In casting across I got "hung up" on a tree on the further bank, and in trying to disengage my line broke off the greater part of the cast and fly, which were left in a tangled condition, quite visible on the tree. While considering how *to recover it, I noticed a swallow hov*ering close by in a curious way, and then saw that it has taken the fly, a quill gnat, and, after a few struggles, flung there suspended with beak open. I was not wading, and could not get over the river without going a long way round, so there I had to leave the poor bird.

*But I was destined to have other ex*periences that afternoon. The swallows were flying in great numbers near the surface of the water, and in casting, as my line was at its full extent behind me, it hooked a swallow fowl, and I found the fowl on two of the cast wrapped round and round its body. A few minutes later, just as I was casting forward, I felt a violent check, heard a scream, and found I had hooked another swallow some feet above the ground, and this time the shock had broken my top. I disengaged the bird, put on a spare top and fished on with some trepidation. But though the swallows were still numerous, the experience was not repeated. Of course I am not prepared to say that I have several times hooked bats fowl when fishing late in the evening on the same stream, and very nasty customers they are to deal with, but have also struck them with my rod when casting forward.

I will relate one more chapter. This time it was on the Gloucestershire Coln, at Fairford, some five years ago. I saw a water vole, swimming across stream, fully carrying a trout, to my astonishment and consternation he dived, and my fly caught in his hind leg as he did so. He gave me a lot of sport—for I like playing a good trout—and the fun was not all over when I got him to land, for before I could use the landing net he set off across the country, and it takes my line through two hedges before I could check him. On this occasion I had a friend with me, who will bear witness to the truth of this story. The records of tauromachy in Spain and Portugal yield the names of many women fighters who became comparatively eminent. The great woman fighter Teresa Bolsi, in her prime was a torera of high repute. Lisbon, too, had a famous woman toreador long ago. Most of the gentler sex fight only with bulls that have their horns covered; a few, Teresa Bolsi among them, used to face animals fully armed.

WOOD MANTELS.

They Have Driven Out Marble and Are Both Cheap and Handsome.

Mantels nowadays are almost exclusively made of wood. Marble is used occasionally, but only for the most costly of all mantels, costing perhaps thousands of dollars. The marble mantel of the kind so familiar years ago is no longer in use, and sometimes marble mantels of fine quality that cost from $200 to $300 are taken out to be replaced with mantels of wood costing perhaps $100. Slate mantels, so widely and commonly used a few years ago, are now rarely set up. They also have given place to wood.

Wood mantels may easily be costly. They are made in hundreds of different styles and at all sorts of prices, from $1,000 down to a few dollars. Many of them are beautiful, not a few of them are of great beauty, and even the cheapest may be tasteful and graceful in design and finish. There never was a time when so much art and skill went into wood mantels as now.

The woods used include mahogany, curly birch, quartered oak, and other varieties of oak, white wood and pine. Perhaps more are made of white wood than of any other one material. The various woods are finished in great variety. The oaks, for instance, are stained in seventy or eighty different shades, to match, if it should be desired, any furniture. Many mantels are painted and enamelled. In the fireplace fittings of the more costly mantels it is not unusual to find marble or onyx matching the wood in color, with the result of producing a beautiful harmony in effect.

In styles wood mantels are made in colonial, Elizabethan, empire, classical, renaissance, and other styles, colonial being now most in demand. Some colonial mantels are copies of mantels in old and, perhaps, familiar houses. While mantels in hundreds of styles are to be found already designed, many are made to order from architects' designs for single houses. It is not unusual to make mantels to order to match furniture; it might be that a mantel would be made to match a bureau or dining room table. New styles of mantels are constantly being added to the great number regularly produced.

will and craving for pleasures and frivolities. It also shows love of music and dancing. It is a sign that its possessor is a good manager, good natured, not altogether unpractical, but capricious and sulky."

Of the small, mobile, daintily protruding chin (second figure) he says it "denotes a strong but capricious will. It shows more imagination than heart, a little of taking a prominent part in the vanities of the world. It is a mixture of sentimentality and good sense. It is whimsical and jealous. It will make unhappy the lives of those with whom it has to live, but it will do well for an ambitious man's wife, as its owner will fascinate and make a good hostess."

Anti-Worry Pads.

Among sure preventives for gray hairs and crow's feet a certain busy woman sets down what she calls an anti-worry pad. She keeps an ordinary note-size writing pad on her dressing table, and on this she jots down a list of engagements, letters to be answered, business to attend to, &c. She has ruled for boxes or for personal use, convenience, charities and all the other interest that enter into a busy life, as they come to her mind. By this means she relieves herself of the worrying sense of something forgotten, which is apt to haunt the woman who knows she says are filled with a multiplicity of demands, and who has no secretary to keep him or her remembering details. For such, the anti-worry pad is recommended as a nerve and temper tonic.

A BRACER FOR WOMEN.

It Can Be Found In a Homemade Turkish Bath.

After a round of strength consuming business and social duties, when the nerves are screwed up to snapping point, when all the world seems upside down —in short, when you have arrived at a past rest period, try a Turkish bath.

It is a bracer above reproach, a restorer par excellence for an exhausted frame and low spirited mind. When a Turkish bath is out of the question, try this one, for it is a most excellent substitute and quite luxurious.

Perhaps you have come in from a shopping expedition, where in a jostling crowd you sought in vain the bargains that meant a world of economy to you. Company in the evening stares you in the face, and here you are completely exhausted and at swords' points with yourself and the world with its manifold deceits, the bargain counter in particular. Forget the busy old world and its many foibles. Strip body and mind and go to your bath, like that first woman created in the garden of Eden, innocent of all things worldly. But after you arrive there send up a little prayer that modern appliances make your bath not a little different from that of Mother Eve.

Turn the tub full of water as hot as can be borne. Then scrub the body all over with white castile or any other nonirritating soap, get into the bath and lie down to soak and steam, and dream of that blessed place far away in the blue skies where we shall all go in the happy future when these pain racked bodies of clay shall be left behind.

In 10 or 15 minutes the hot water will have extracted all soreness from aching joints and overtaxed muscles. Get up and while standing in the tub give your face a dash of cold water.

Then shower your whole body completely with it from shoulders to feet. If the bathroom offers no shower bath, this cold douche is easily managed by having ready beforehand a supply of cold water in a large vessel.

Do this showering quickly and rub dry at once with Turkish towels; follow with a fine dry towel or soft flesh brush, rubbing briskly until the skin is a rosy red and you feel the blood tingling through your entire body. Don a soft flannel bath robe, take down your hair, that it may fall about your shoulders for a little airing, and lie down for a half hour's nap.

The blood will be thrown into perfect circulation, and when you arise you will feel yourself a new creature ready to cope with life in all its complexities. The inward sun will come out in your eyes and shine gayly on your bit of this busy old world. Happiness will be all about you, and the rest of your day will be a pleasure to you and yours.

The Problem of Gray Hairs.

It is always difficult to prevent the hair turning gray when it has once begun. It generally loses its color from ill health, lack of proper nourishment at the roots of the hair, or from age. If the first case you may do something for it if you grow strong and well again, and the same remarks hold good in the second instance. But where the gray hairs appear from age, nothing will prevent it becoming white as time goes on. Where there are infrequent gray hairs found it is said that to wash the head with claret and take iron and burgundy as a tonic may accomplish some good.

Doing Up Muslins.

Wash colored muslins in cold soapsuds. If black, add a little salt; if pink or green, add vinegar; for lilac, a few drops of ammonia, and saltpeter for blue. Rinse in cold water and do not use the starch when it is in the least warm. Fine muslins are best ironed twice, in opposite directions; laces and embroideries by the thread of the material. Hamburg edging looks nicer if ironed over flannel. Remove the irons from the stove as soon as the ironing is done; rub them well with a soft cloth and keep them as dry as possible.

She has been studying in America for five years, and when she is graduated she is going back to her people as a missionary.

A professional picture hanger is the way Miss Josephine Pentland describes herself. She makes a living, and a very good one, too, by hanging pictures for rich people who have not the artistic taste to do it themselves.

CHILDREN'S FASHIONS.

Frimmings and Materials Employed For Little Folks.

Irish guipure is the favorite lace for children, as it is substantial as well as elegant. Costumes otherwise plain are often enriched by its use in the form of collars and cuffs or, in the case of little girls, trimmings of the frock. For very little children, 2 years old or so, entire dresses are made of it, worn over a slip.

Fashions for small girls follow ours—that is, the sleeves are close, the skirts flaring and finished with a circular flounce. A soft sash is often worn, with a bow at the back. The materials employed are veiling, etamine, wool grenadine, cashmere, thin cloth and embroidered linon, as well as foulard and similar thin silks. Guipure, ruffles, ruches and similar furbelows are the decorations. White, gray and beige are the tones for tailor made dresses.

For party dresses for children veiling or cashmere in white, cream, pink or blue is pretttiest and most suitable, richer fabrics placing the beauty of the child at a disadvantage.

The picture shows a dress for a little girl. It is of pastel blue cashmere, and the circular skirt is gathered at the waist. The blouse bodice is trimmed with lengthwise bands of guipure, the bands falling on the sleeves, and the collarless neck is surrounded by guipure. The full sleeves extend only to the elbows, where they are gathered in and form a ruffle. The sash of white silk is tied at the back. The hat of white straw is trimmed with blue taffeta.

VARIOUS NOTES.

Young Girl's Evening Dress—Care of the Hair.

The first low cut bodices of a young girl are usually square in form, and the decolletage is moderate. Nothing is an worse taste than a really low corsage on a young girl, and those who understand how to dress properly never wear one.

The hair is worn on the top of the head —at least that is what fashion decrees—but the mode of wearing the hair has always been modified more or less accord- ing to individual taste, as nothing has so powerful effect upon the appearance of the face as the coiffure, and what is becoming to one person is often fatal to the beauty of another.

Regimen plays an important part with respect to the hair. An excess of animal food has a tendency to cause baldness, while abundance of fruit and vegetables has a contrary effect. Exposure to air and sunlight is also highly beneficial, and the use of the brush is recommended rather than the comb.

The pale blue silk crepon gown illustrated has a demitrained skirt embroidered with blue silk and spangles. The embroidered bodice has a yoke of guipure de venise, and a scarf of lace is fastened by a knot in each shoulder, carried down the front in bretelle fashion and shirred in at the waist, the long ends falling upon the skirt. The close sleeves are tucked horizontally at the top and embroidered at the wrists. The belt is of moss green velvet, with a gold buckle. The hat of tulle over blue silk is trimmed with pheasant feathers and wall-flowers

THE MODE.

Latest Developments of Fashionable Fancy.

All bosques of jackets are cut in short, round tabs. The tailor made dress for autumn wear is as simple as possible, consisting of a plain skirt without even a circular flounce and a plain, buttoned jacket with small revers and a coat collar.

Foulard skirts are not made in one with the lining, as that destroys the character of the material and makes it appear thick and heavy. The lining of taffeta takes the form of a separate skirt, attached to the outside nearly at the waistband.

Some fashionable wedding gifts are a parasol handle of crystal with gold arabesques or of steel with a gold cipher, the skin of some valuable fur bearing animal, which the recipient can have made up according to fancy, and a bit of costly old lace, fragile with age, but highly acceptable.

The cut given today shows a princess gown of light blue foulard. The skirt has a flounce of lace at the left side, and two circular flounces of foulard, lifted at the left side, give a tunic effect. The skirt extends over a full corsage of mousseline de soie, draped like a fichu, the top of the corselet being cut in large scallops and edged with bias folds. A short bolero is similarly bordered and has a wide collar embroidered with white chenille. The half length sleeve is finished with a circular ruffle. The round hat of ivory straw is trimmed with tulle and black and green irises.

ACCESSORIES.

Latest Additions to the Details of the Toilet.

Antique silver rings are worn. They are large, heavy and elaborately wrought. The coral hair ornaments are again combined with spangles and feathers, are much worn. For example, a star shaped ornament of coque aigrettes over wires is elaborately spangled and decorates the front of a hat. There are butterflies and immense pansies and other flowers made in the same way. Another idea is an ornament made of white feathers to imitate a peacock's plume. In place of the brilliant eye of the feather there is an imitative eye composed of crystal.

At one time the Spanish fan, large and comparatively plain, was the fashionable type, but now we have gone to the opposite extreme, and the tiny, elaborate fans of the last century are preferred to all others. They are marvels of workmanship, with carved, painted and lacquered sticks and illuminated parchment covers. Real jewels are often used in the genuine antiques, but very artistic and attractive modern reproductions are made, in which the gems are replaced by imitation jewels and spangles.

The illustration given in today's issue shows a fall hat of black straw. It is bordered with two rolls of black straw, and the crown is encircled by a turban drapery of white gathered tulle. At the left side a band of black gauze lace embroidered with gold spangles is twisted in with the tulle. The left side of the hat is lifted, a trimming of black feathers, black velvet and a jeweled buckle being placed below it. White feathers adorn the front.

German Epitaphs.

Continental graveyards are full of quaint and humorous epitaphs, as a citizen of Regensburg, Stahl by name, can testify. Partly in his own travels, partly by the operation of tourists, he has collected a scrapbook full of funereal quips. Here are a few:

On a tablet fixed to a mill in Tauferer-thal:

"In Christian remembrance of ——, who without human help lost his life here."

In Stubaithal:

The way to all eternity
Is not so far, as you may see;
He drove a wee bit wrong,
At night he was in heaven.

In Oberinthal:

Here Jacob Rosenknopf fell
From the house roof into eternity.

On a gravestone in Herren Island:

Here rests in God J. K——
Twenty-six years he lived as a human being
And thirty-seven years as a husband.

THE PIANO.

Its Proper Placing and Appropriate Decoration.

The piano is primarily intended as an instrument of music, but this fact seems often to be forgotten, to judge from the placing and general arrangement of it frequently seen. It is placed flat against the wall, smothered in draperies, loaded with books and bric-a-brac and treated as if it were a simple piece of furniture like a couch or cabinet. Of course only a small proportion of persons owning pianos can afford a separate music room, appropriately arranged, and so the piano must be placed in the drawing or sitting room, where cushions, curtains, carpets and furniture deaden its tone to a great degree. To make the best of it in an unfavorable situation is not difficult, however, first by placing it properly—that is, at an angle with the wall or away from it altogether—and then by using only a small amount of light drapery and never permitting any object to stand upon the top of the instrument. Moreover, there are small glass sockets which are to be obtained in which the feet of the piano may be placed, thus insulating it completely from the floor and securing a clearer tone.

Today's picture illustrates a loose traveling cloak of thin cloth. It is straight, with a slight curve under the arm and no seam in the middle of the back. The front is cut in deep points, the little pelerine being cut to match, and both being trimmed with stitching. Down each side of the front are large buttons and frogs, placed close together. The collar is flaring and is cut in points. The toque is of straw bordered with black velvet and trimmed with large roses.

THIN FABRICS.

The Various Ways In Which They Are Employed.

Plaited and tucked skirts are often used for the thinner class of materials. Sometimes the upper part of the skirt is entirely tucked, the lower part being left free to form a flounce; sometimes there are groups of tucks, or the tucks alternate with bands of flat trimming, such as insertion or embroidery. The tucks may be straight or oblique.

When wide insertion is used as a decoration, a new idea is to run a band of velvet ribbon in and out of each side of it.

A great many foulard gowns are seen. They are of light or bright color, with small but attractive designs, and rose and blue are favorite colors. Lace and very narrow black velvet ribbon are the usual trimming.

Nearly all bodices now have a guimpe of mousseline de soie or taffeta, adorned with plaitings, incrustations or applications. If this arrangement is not adopted, the upper part is still lavishly decorated in some way, that being at present the decree of fashion.

A picture is given of a wrapper of pink surah. The upper part is trimmed with two bands of insertion, which are applied in V's and simulate a bolero. A deep flounce of surah reaches midway up the skirt and is bordered by a ruffle of lace and a band of insertion and headed by a band of insertion. The sleeves are trimmed to match the flounce. A frill of lace encircles the collar and forms cuffles down the front. A bow of pink ribbon is placed at the throat.

AUTUMN STYLES.

White Still Holds a Foremost Position in Favor.

White is so immensely fashionable that tailor made costumes of white pique will be worn much later in the season than would ordinarily be the case. A bolero of black or colored silk or cloth will afford extra protection when the air is chilly, but pique is in itself a substantial fabric and not specially cold. Revers of black velvet are the latest addition to white pique jackets or boleros, and black cords, pipings or braid often serves as a trimming.

For those who prefer a worsted fabric as fall approaches there are gowns of white mohair or of tones just off white. Pearl gray is also a favorite tint. With these gowns a vest of white silk is worn, but when the costume is darker the vest is usually of a contrasting color instead of white. The vest buttons are small and are of crystal, dead gold, turquoise, garnet or steel, and the vest itself is cut high, showing just the knot of the cravat.

The attractive bodice illustrated is of white satin, richly embroidered with pale green silk and gold spangles. It has a guimpe of puffed mousseline de soie over white satin, and the top of the sleeves is of the same material. The mousseline portion and the fronts are bordered with three little bands of velvet, and three green satin bows fasten the fronts. The sleeves are embroidered like the bodice and are finished with a mousseline frill and a green satin band and bow. The belt is also of green satin.

FALL FASHIONS.

Ideas For the Wardrobe of the Demi-season.

Dark costumes for women of mature years are enriched by a vest of Louis Quinze or Louis Seize brocade, which gives value and dignity to an otherwise plain gown.

Simple hats are often very effective. A straw shape, trimmed with a drapery of tulle and a knot of black velvet, is sometimes more elegant in aspect than a far more elaborate creation.

A novel idea is seen in straw hats in which the brim is stitched with heavy silk of a contrasting color.

Now that fabrics are tucked, embroidered and puffed in the piece and sold by the yard many odd ideas in decoration appear. The latest consists of narrow bands of oblique tucks, the bands being 1½ or 2 inches wide, a band of the stuff of the same width being left untucked between the bands of tucks. The untucked bands form puffs because of the fullness taken up by the tucks. Only very thin silks can be thus employed.

The cut illustrates a shirt waist of cream foulard, with a pointed pompadour design. It has lengthwise clusters of tucks and a full plastron, with a yoke of white surah trimmed with bands of lace. The collar is also of white surah, trimmed with tucks and lace. The sleeves are tucked horizontally at the top and are gathered into tucked cuffs. An embroidered collar and black satin stock are worn, and the belt is of white kid, with a gold buckle.

PARIS FLASHES IN JET.

There Is to Be a Rage For This Trimming This Fall—The New Hats.

The sights to see in the magazines are bewildering, and at night there is a glitter before one's eyes that fairly dazzles one. The most of this is due to the inordinate quantities of jet. There are velvet jackets, capes and coats of all imaginable description nearly covered with jet, and there are dresses of every kind trimmed most lavishly with it.

Some elegant house gowns have wide stripes of passementerie, hand wrought, some of these stripes costing as much as 40 and 50 francs a yard. They are put on a costume from neck to feet. In many cases they are graduated in width, being narrower at the waist and wide at the bottom.

Some rich evening dresses have lace ruffling or all over lace where the design in the lace is picked out with fine beads. Brussels net has designs of flowers and foliage wrought in fine beads of different colors. Where there is a rose, for instance, it is made of shades of pink pearl beads. In some cases the leaves and trailing vines are made of green spangles. The French call these paillettes and the English sequins. Some of the lace bands of beaded work have a line of spangles along each side.

All Paris says that black velvet will have a vogue this season beyond comparare. The princess shape for such robes will be favored on account of the possibilities in trimming. No trimming looks so well as beaded passementerie in long lines from top to bottom. I may say with authority that the princess gown will be the great style with many slight variations.

The Longchamps coat is to be forced upon us. Forced, I say, because I do not believe that any one would willingly choose one. This coat is not unlike a directoire redingote in some respects, is made of everything from silk to plush, through all the intermediary stuffs. It is not dressy, nor is it even graceful.

The box coats are also in the list of stylish fall wraps. These are loose around the body and tight around the bottom. In fact, they look like men's fall overcoats and are usually of light covert or cloth. They look rather boxy. But so do the three-quarter driving coats. These will be affected by many ladies who never drove or can hope to drive. But with a pert little felt derby and a coaching whip the fair wearers make the ludicrous think they do. This is an essentially English style, and the French have adopted it, as they do the English "bonie dogue," as they write bulldog.

The McPherson is a sort of lengthened golfing cape coat. The coat fits snugly around the hips, but nowhere else, and over it is a cape which can be detached if desired. The cape is lined with plaid silk of the McPherson tartan.

Capes for visiting and for promenade are made in infinite variety. A long close cape, reaching nearly to the knees and hanging from a yoke, is a favorite model. Capuchin hoods are seen on many, even the velvet ones.

The new fabrics, of course, can call them new, the same old standard weaves, are produced in very rich and beautiful colorings and combinations. Light tints are much in favor, the bands being exceptionally handsome in tailor gowns, but they are hardly firm enough for outside garments. Corded velour where the cord is one color and the underpart another or of different shades is very rich. Some have in addition little raised silk dots. Pretty suiting is of light colored close woven wool, like whipcord, with satin stripes forming small checks. The young French girls affect these checked dresses. In given them that air of child like and angelic innocence inseparable from a French maiden.

The new hats are anything you like. The gypsy and the 1830 poke are favorites. Strings are used as often as not. Velvet is the choicest of all materials for hats and trimmings and will be all the style for fine occasions. Felt is made very soft and velvety, and both velvet and felt are frequently bordered with fur. The ostrich plume, curled into various forms, will be favorites, and aigrets and birds of paradise sweeps will be very much in fashion; some flowers also. Malines will be used as strings to many hats. Plaid ribbons with heavy cords marking the design will also be used as trimming for felts.

AN EXPEDIENT.

And it Caused the Young Man to Change His Mind.

There is a rich man living out Hoyne avenue way, and he has a promising son whose only weakness is an inability to get into the house in the even hours of the night. He is the correct boy the two heads of the family and who object to letting him set a fresh time of his own.

The rich man has had a good deal of trouble with that son, and at last he hit upon a rather odd expedient of sending him on a pleasure trip to Europe. He gave the boy all the money that would be needed for the journey, provided him with letters of introduction to men in and out of official life who might be useful to him, and told him to have a good time, but not to get gay; and then he sent him out of town on the night train.

(He Told His Mother Next Day That He Had Changed His Mind.)

And the rich young man had a boy friend who had always traveled with him, and had shared all the mischief which the rich boy had seen, and this boy No. 2 concluded he, too, would have a good time on the continent. For about three weeks he behaved himself in a manner to drive all his friends and relatives to the faith cure, and then his father asked him one night what he was trying to do.

"Oh, I'm playing for a trip to Europe," said the smart boy No. 2.

"So?" said the father. "Well, come down here in the basement till I talk it over with you."

And when they came up out of the lower regions the old gentleman was very much out of breath and boy No. 2 had a serious not to say convenient look on his face. He told his mother next day that he had changed his mind and was going to start into Sunday school; and he did.—Chicago Chronicle.

Pie Made Him Crazy.

"Here," whispered Judge Goldfogle to the waiter, "is an officer from New York. This man (pointing to Mr. Blumenthal, who was reading a newspaper) is my prisoner. He's a lunatic. You would not think that he is quite rational now, but for Heaven's sake don't give him pie or coffee. That sets him wild. There is no telling what he will do then."

"Very good, sir," replied the waiter, bowing very low and pocketing the fifty cent piece Goldfogle had given him.

"Now, let us have pie and then a small cup of French coffee," said Mr. Blumenthal to the waiter.

"I will take the same," said Judge Goldfogle.

The waiter brought a portion for the Judge, but none for the Assistant-District-Attorney.

No coaxing could induce the waiter to serve Mr. Blumenthal. Then he became angry and told the manager that he must discharge the waiter.

"Why, that fellow's crazy!" said the waiter. "His keeper there told me so."

Mr. Blumenthal paid the bills. He is now trying to get even with the Judge.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

A Republican View.

A Somerville political writer sums up the situation with reference to the rivalaries for Senatorial nominations in both parties in an article on the New Jersey page of the New York Tribune Monday. After declaring that the situation in the Republican party is one of hesitation, the correspondent says that "The bitter fight between the Reed and Thompson factions is at the ebb tide and the chances are that it may not result in any harm to the party. Senator Reed has announced his intention of making no effort to get a renomination. He says that if a compromise candidate can be agree upon who will be satisfactory to the party he will be satisfied."

In the event of former Sheriff George A. Dilts becoming an out and out candidate for the Senatorial honor The Tribune writer thinks there will be a strong fight against him by the Reed faction because he has always been allied with the element that has opposed Mr. Reed.

In a modest way Joseph S. Frelinghuysen is suggested as a good compromise candidate. He has never held an office, which, indeed, is a strange thing for a Somerset county politician in these days. He declares that if he is nominated he will "go before the people without an alliance of any kind."

The Democratic situation in Somerset is viewed by The Tribune article, as might be expected, in a sorry way. It opines that James J. Bergen will secure the nomination for Senator.

Mr. Fowler's Chances.

The chances of Congressman Fowler being able to secure the chairmanship of the important committee on Banking and Currency in the next Congress are said to be excellent. The Congressman has been pulling the wires in that direction, and he feels confident that things are coming his way. Of course, the Jersey delegation in the House of Representatives is expected to be as a unit in demanding this position for the Representative from the Eighth district.

In what is undoubtedly an inspired article on the subject, the Tribune says this morning that "the custom of precedent, which more or less largely prevails in committee promotions, would seem in favor the appointment of Congressman Brosius, but in this instance the friends of Mr. Fowler are relying upon the notable services which he has rendered to the sound money cause. The fact that his last speech in the House on this subject, made on March 31, 1897, met with a popular approval almost unprecedented, and that it is still in great demand, is given as one reason why Mr. Fowler would meet the demand for the placing of a strong man at the head of the committee. It is a fact that Mr. Fowler's secretary in a single day received requests for eight thousand copies of this speech."

Will Hobart Decline.

After everyone thought that it was settled once and for all that Vice-President Hobart would be a candidate for renomination at the hands of the National Republican convention, the New York Sun yesterday came out with a story that set aside such plans. According to the Sun tale it is the old question of Mr. Hobart's health interfering with the plans—if he wanted a renomination he could have it, but he doesn't want it because his health would not permit.

It is said that in the event of the retirement of Mr. Hobart President McKinley might consider it advisable to make a draft on the New York State Republicans and request the nomination of Governor Roosevelt for Vice-President. In that event, it is said, the wishes of the President would be taken into consideration, even though the Republican party in New York should find it difficult to nominate a candidate for Governor who approaches in political availability Theodore Roosevelt.

Col. Henry C. Page, editor and proprietor of the Bayonne Herald, contemplates starting a daily paper in connection with his present prosperous and influential weekly. Bayonne, with a population of 30,000, has no daily paper, and the Colonel believes that there is a good opening in the town for a first-class up-to-date newspaper published every day in the week. The Colonel was a pleasant caller at The Daily Press office Saturday. Though the Herald is a sterling Democratic organ he intends making the daily an independent journal.

called Grain-O. It is a delicious, appetizing, nourishing food drink to take the place of coffee. Sold by all grocers and liked by all who have used it because when properly prepared it tastes like the finest coffee but is free from all its injurious properties. Grain-O aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. It is not a stimulant but a health builder, and children, as well as adults, can drink it with great benefit. Costs about ¼ as much as coffee 15 and 25c.

Comparative Tax Rates.

Councilman Barrows, chairman of the street committee, and leader of the majority in the common council, has had the following prepared and presented to The Daily Press as tending to show Plainfield's tax rate in comparison with other New Jersey towns in this vicinity:

"Referring to Plainfield's tax rate, $2.56, it is of interest to note those of our neighbors. From the "State Comptroller's Report" for 1898 we find Westfield, $2.95; Cranford, 2.48; Summit, 2.92; Rahway, 2.81; Elizabeth, 2.86; New Providence, 2.48.

"These comprise the principal cities and towns of Union County, and are on the same basis of assessment, excepting perhaps Elizabeth, which is slightly lower.

"In seeing how the money is spent, it is interesting to note that while Plainfield spent for police $4,500 and fire $16,183, (less $4,000 for hydrants) to fully protect her citizens, Summit spent for police $4,000; fire $1,000. Westfield, police, nothing; fire $672.72. Cranford, police, $633; fire, 465. Rahway, police, $3,600; fire, $750. New Providence, police, nothing; fire, nothing.

"In neighboring cities we fine Montclair, $3 08; Bloomfield, 3 63; Passaic, 2.78; New Brunswick, 2.60.

"Those who know the character and condition of municipal life in these cities will certify to the fact that Plainfield gets more for her money than any of the above."

New Jersey's War Claims.

W. W. Erown, auditor for the War Department, has just received from Governor Voorhees additional war claims to the amount of $104,000, which makes the total the Governor claims in behalf of the State from the United States, for preparing troops for the war with Spain, $2 0,387.70.

This sum is represented by four installments which have been at the War Department since early in September, 1898. The auditor has thus far made but one actual allowance, that for $13,808.24, and this was credited to the first claim presented, which was for $93,875.54, leaving a balance of $80,067.30.

The auditor says that he has been unable to allow further credits because of the delay of New Jersey officials in supplying him with the papers to prove the correctness of the claims made. Had these papers been at hand, the auditor said, all of the claims excepting the last one presented, would have been disposed of long ago.

What would be the sense of having a Dewey celebration without Dewey, and how many people will be able to see the hero of Manila if he is to remain on the reviewing stand? asks the Newark News, and then adds: The place for Dewey is at the head of the parade in an open carriage, so that he may be seen and cheered by every man, woman and child along the entire route. Dewey is the central figure of the whole affair. It is to do him honor that millions of people, coming from every part of the United States, will congregate in New York September 29th, and how can they do it if they don't get an opportunity to see him? The parade and the decorations and all the rest of the programme are only incidentals, the main object is to give the victorious Admiral a greeting which will show in a limited way the esteem in which he is held in the hearts of his countrymen. This cannot be done if he is put on a reviewing stand somewhere. The parade without Dewey in it will be ten times worse than "Hamlet" with the Prince left out.

One of the most important changes in New Jersey journalism in some time is just announced in the sale of the Patterson Guardian and the retirement of its veteran editor, Carleton M. Herrick, from active newspaper work. The Guardian is eighty-three years old, and for years has been one of the chief exponents of Democracy in New Jersey, being particularly friendly to Bryan since his candidacy for the Presidency three years ago. In that campaign Mr. Herrick was a candidate for Presidential elector on the Silver ticket. The paper has been purchased by a syndicate of capitalists, and Albert S. Stevens, for a number of years editor of Bradstreet's, will be the new editor. What an awful shock it must be to the serenity of mind possessed by the Prosecutor of Monmouth county to read that suit against Hank Wrecker Valentine suing the proprietor of a Long Branch club to recover $10,000 lost at gambling in his resort. A virtuous spasm came across the Prosecutor a short time ago and he caused the arrest of a man who owned a nickle-in-the-slot machine, but when his attention was called to the existence of the gambling hells of elaborate and fashionable form in Long Branch, where thousands are made and lost every day in the summer months, he seemed struck with astigmatism. Perhaps the action of Valentine may open the official eyes of the Monmouth Prosecutor.

Among the guests were President and Mrs. Cobb, and Vice President and Mrs. Hill, of the American Tobacco Company of which Mr. Browne is secretary, and also Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Lee, Councilman and Mrs. E. T. Barrows, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Ladd, Jr., and Councilman and Mrs. F. H. Andrews.

WILL MAKE CITIZENS.

G. O. P. Prepares to Take Delegation To Secure Papers.

Only a little routine business came before the Republican city executive committee at a meeting held Monday.

There was a good attendance and the business was dispatched quickly. There was very little talk about the political situation.

It was followed by a meeting of the sub-committee on naturalization of which William Newcorn is chairman. It was decided to take a number of the would-be citizens to Elizabeth Thursday evening on the 7:06 train to make application for the necessary papers.

Harness Broke and Started Horses on Run.

A spirited team of young horses attached to a light runabout, in which was seated two strangers in the city, caused some excitement Saturday afternoon on East Front street. The strap holding the pole in position broke and this started the horses on a dead run. One of the occupants jumped from the wagon and escaped injury. The other remained and through good horsemanship succeeded in bringing the horses to a standstill in front of Marshall's laundry. The wagon was upset, but the driver was not injured.

Borough Streets Submerged.

The heavy rainfall Monday caused the water to overflow the street and crosswalks corner Jackson avenue and Somerset street to a depth of several inches, and people were unable to get across that thoroughfare without getting their feet wet. The street commissioner or a person appointed by him should be on hand and relieve the water pipes, which were choked up with sticks and leaves, during a heavy rainfall like today.

A Real Cuban Barber.

W. J. Pride, the Somerset street barber, has engaged a real Cuban barber to assist him at his place. The stranger is C. C. Roomcey, and he hails from Trinidad, Cuba, where he was born, and educated. Mr. Roomcey is a bright young man and talks English fluently. He left his home six months ago and is delighted with this part of the country.

Attended Watermelon Social.

A party of young people of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church met at the home of Miss Ernestine Smith, of Madison avenue, Saturday night, and went by trolley to New Market where they attended a watermelon social given on the lawn of the Seventh-Day Baptist church in that place.

Young Minister In the Pulpit.

A very interesting sermon was preached Sunday evening at the First Baptist church by Rev. Ernest Crane, of this city. Mr. Crane will return this week to Crozier Theological Seminary, where he will complete his studies.

Dr. Yerkes In His Pulpit Again.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, who recently returned from his vacation, occupied his pulpit at the First Baptist church Sunday morning and evening and was greeted by large congregations. His sermons were powerful and interesting.

Not Enough Consents.

It is claimed that the Borough Board of Education has not secured a sufficient number of consents to permit them to build a private line between the two schools. There are two or three who will not consent to have poles or wires placed on their property.

GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is a most like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, ruins the digestion effects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

MUST STAY IN LOCKUP.

Fate of Prisoners Sentenced in Borough Recorder's Court in a Very Tough One.

Borough Recorder Long's time was occupied Monday for a time with several cases. Wm. Moore, of Grandview avenue, and Wm. Day, of Summit avenue, were found in an intoxicated condition on Greenbrook road Sunday afternoon, by Marshal Emmons. Moore was fined $3, which was paid. Day decided to take ten days as he could not pay a $5 fine.

Charles Braynton, colored, residence unknown, was picked up Saturday evening by Marshal Kliner, who found the man drunk and disorderly on Somerset street. He was given his choice between $3 or five days. He took the latter. Frazee Connett, of Dog Corner, was also found in the same condition and he decided to spend five days in jail in preference to paying $3.

Those who did not pay their fines will remain in the borough lockup, and will not go to Somerville. Mayor Smalley is convinced that by adopting this course it will have a tendency to lessen trouble among those who are inclined to break the law.

TO MANUFACTURE PAINT.

A Company With $50,000 Capital Back of George D. Naylor.

Elizabeth, Sept. 10.—The Naylor Paint, Color and Varnish Company, having an authorizing capital of $50,000, filed its articles of incorporation with County Clerk Howard Friday afternoon. The company purposes to manufacture, sell and deal in paints, colors and varnish of all kinds. Its main office will be in Plainfield and John D. Runyon is named as resident agent. The incorporators are John D. Runyon, Charles L. Moffett and George B. Naylor, all of Plainfield.

Thousands Upon Thousands of people in both Europe and America are being restored to health and strength by the use of Speer's Port Wine.

This Wine is a little higher in price but worth five times as much as others for invalids on account of the iron derived from the soil of the expensive vineyards in which the Oporto Grape vines from Portugal are grown in New Jersey. Speer's Port Wine has been adopted by the most scientific and experienced physicians.

Medals for Jersey soldiers.

Trenton, Sept. 13—The medals to be presented by the State to the New Jersey volunteers of the Spanish-American war have been completed and will be delivered to the State this week. Although the matter of distribution has not been definitely decided, it is likely that the medals will be handed to the commanders of the former companies and by them given to the men entitled to receive them.

Bid Them a Fond Adieu.

The Misses Shott, daughters of Rev. Gideon Shott, Miss Johnson and Miss Marsh, of Scotch Plains, left Plainfield Tuesday on the Royal Blue Line for Lauray, Va., where they will enter a college. A large number of their friends assembled at the North Avenue Station to give the young women a good send-off and wish them to God-speed in their journey and in their studies.

An Approaching Marriage.

Announcement is made of the approaching marriage of Miss Sara Keys, of Ashville, N. C., and William C. Baker, of Stelle avenue. The event will take place Wednesday, September 20th, at the home of the bride.

To Make a Good Roadbed.

It is the intention of the councilmanic street committee to begin operations on Park avenue between Fourth street and Front street, and give travelers a good roadbed.

Choir Resumes Work.

After a vacation of five weeks, the choir of the First Baptist church resumed their work Sunday at the regular church services, and the selections were finely rendered.

ARLINGTON AVENUE TROLLEY DELAYED.

Property Owners Not Agreed on Angle of the Tracks.

OFFICE OF CITY SURVEYOR.

THAT POSITION TO BE COMBINED WITH STREET COMMISSIONER.

It Will Give the City Better Service Without Extra Expense — Temporary Notes to be Issued to Provide for Sewage Bed Outlay—City to Lay Sidewalks Where Notices Were Ignored.

There was an adjourned meeting of the Common Council last Monday and it was expected that the ordinance granting the Plainfield Street Railway Company a franchise to locate a line through Arlington avenue would be introduced. It was not, however, owing to the fact that beyond Randolph road on Arlington avenue there is a difference of opinion among two or three property owners along the line as to the angle the trolley tracks should be laid. They are little matters, but must be settled before an ordinance is adopted and the work commenced. On a motion offered by Mr. Barrows the hearing was adjourned one week. The opposition and supporters to the trolley were on hand in large numbers.

The regular order of business was then taken up. A communication was received from Walter Scott and others asking the Council to secure a proper grade on Richmond street so that the surface water would run off and not flood the street in the vicinity of Fifth street. The street is three inches higher than the gutters. This grade is the result of the laying of trolley tracks.

Mr. Mellick offered a motion, which was adopted, to reconsider two resolutions offered and adopted at the meeting of August 7th. One resolution provided for the acceptance of the city maps, and the other to the appointment of the street commissioner as custodian of the maps. This action was explained by Mr. Coriell who stated that after a consultation with Corporation Counsel Marsh it was deemed wise to consider the two matters. He said that in Elizabeth the city surveyor attends to the receiving and care of deeds at no expense to the city except his salary, and those having such business with him are not assessed as is now the case when a person from this city desires to send a deed to Elizabeth. If the deed is not stamped it is sent back and there is more or less waste of time and an expense attached to it, hence it was thought wise to consider the matter.

Mr VanHerden offered an ordinance providing for the issuance of temporary notes for sewer purposes, occasioned by the installation of two new sewer beds last year and repairs to the system this year. The ordinance provides for the issuance of notes for the sum of $7,654.70, to be renewed from time to time to cover a period of five years. They are to be divided as equally as practicable. The money will be secured at 4 per cent. It will be remembered that the Mayor and Council secured the enactment of a State law which give them the power to issue notes when desirable, instead of bonds. The amount being comparatively small it would not pay to issue bonds, but by issuing notes the city secures the payment of fees for advertising, etc. The Council also secured the consent of the City National Bank to take the notes if no one else would. The ordinance, which was explained by Mr. Barrows, was adopted on its first and second readings.

Mr. Barrows offered an ordinance creating the office of city surveyor. The ordinance provides that hereafter no one shall be appointed to the office of street commissioner unless he be a qualified civil engineer, and that he shall be ex officio city surveyor, without extra compensation. This shall apply to the present holder of the office, when the ordinance goes into effect. There are many advantages in this ordinance. It gives the city a qualified street commissioner and city surveyor at one salary and does away with too many officers. This ordinance was adopted on first and second readings.

Mr. Barrows offered a resolution authorizing the city to repair a sidewalk in front of the property of John J. H. Poilion, 701-715 Central avenue, where notice had been served on the owner and he had failed to comply with the ordinance. A similar resolution, embodied with the above, provided for the laying of sidewalks in front of the following properties, where the owners had failed to do so after being notified: Estate Morris Higgins, 600-610 West Third street; John Carney, 509 West Fourth street; Jacob Bauer, 545-559 West Fourth street; George A. Moore, 692 West Fourth street; Mrs. Annie M. Loeser, 1116-1122 South avenue; Charles L. Stanley, 1124-1134 South avenue; Francis S. Runyon, 1136-1150 South avenue; Wm. Cortright, 409-421 Plainfield avenue; Maria Claypoole, 531-537 East Second street.

It was expected that the contract for macadamizing West Third and Fourth streets would be given out, but Mr. Barrows stated that Corporation Counsel Marsh had been unable to draw the necessary papers to complete the preliminary work. He announced that C. M. Meeker was the lowest man and would get the contract. It appears that under the present condition of affairs the city cannot authorize work unless they know where the money is coming from to do the same, and the money for macadamizing the two streets is not in hand at present. There is some little hitch regarding the several amounts to be paid by property-owners along the street to be macadamized. The matter will be attended to at an early date.

There being no further business Council adjourned for one week.

BOROUGH SCHOOLS OPEN

NOT ENOUGH ROOM BECAUSE OF INCREASE IN LOWER GRADES.

High School Opened With Special Exercises, Including Addresses By Prof. Wightman and A. V. D. Honeyman.

The borough public schools opened Tuesday and there was a large increase in enrollment in both schools, especially in the primary departments. There was such an increase in the lower grades that the accommodations are not sufficient for all.

At the High School the exercises were opened with an address of welcome by Superintendent W. J. Wightman, in which he urged the scholars to put forth their best effort during the year and to make the best of their time. This address was followed with devotional exercises, conducted by Rev. G. W. Gardner, pastor of Grace M. E. church, after which A. V. D. Honeyman, a member of the school board, made a short, but excellent address. His one thought imparted to the scholars was thoroughness, and he said that he could not impress too strongly the necessity of this. He urged all to learn their studies thoroughly and not to "skimp" in the slightest degree. His remarks were pointed and especially helpful to everyone.

There were present the Board of Education and a number of parents, and all were greatly interested in the opening of the school. At the Watchung School there is the same complaint regarding accommodations, especially in the lower grades. It is hoped that in a short time this inconvenience may be remedied.

In Honor of Her Young Guest.

Mrs. Max Yesner and her daughter, Marjorie Yesner, of Houston, Texas, has been visiting at the home of Mr and Mrs. W. E. Bolce, of Manning avenue. In honor of Miss Yesner, Mrs Bolce arranged a few days ago to give her a party. A few friends were invited to spend the afternoon and have a good time. The young people indulged in all kinds of innocent fun and at o'clock they sat down to a bountiful supper. The happy event continued until 6 o'clock. The young hostess received a number of very pretty gifts. Those present included Mabel and Sadie Hand, Jeanette and Margaret Neal, Hannah Higgins, the Misses Schenck, Hazel Bolce, Ray Pugh, Herbert VanDoren, George Miller, Harold Storr and Mrs. Winfield Schomp.

CITY PUBLIC SCHOOLS OPENED TUESDAY

Large Attendance at All of the Schools.

SEVERAL NEW INSTRUCTORS

CHANGES MADE AT THE WHITTIER SCHOOL.

Miss Ellen K. Cumming a New Addition to High School—Improvements Made to Curriculum at High School—Twenty-Four in the Senior Class—Entering Class is the Largest on Record.

The public schools of Plainfield were opened Tuesday after the long vacation. As is usual on the first day of school, the time was mostly spent in getting the new children in the proper grades and organizing the classes ready for active work on the morrow. For the first day the attendance was not large and the next week will probably bring in many additions. There were a few changes in the staff of teachers and in the schoolrooms as well.

The High School assembled at 9 o'clock with the usual morning exercises. The entering class is the largest that ever went into the High School. The Senior Class will probably number twenty-four this winter. There will be one change in the faculty of the High School. Miss Peckham resigned her position last spring and Miss Ellen K. Cumming, a graduate of Vassar College, has taken the place. Miss Cumming comes to Plainfield from the Saratoga Springs High School, where she was very popular and successful. Ira Winthrop Travell will continue as principal of the High School.

There will be several improvements in the curriculum of the High School. The highest class on the Grammar school, known as the ninth grade, has been gradually turned into a High School preparatory class. Last year, the pupils in that grade began the study of beginning Latin after the Christmas holidays. This year, they will begin at once so that their course in the High School can be more thorough in that branch. Algebra is also to be started in the High School preprepartory class in the place of arithmetic. This will permit further study of mathematics in the High School and the addition of High School arithmetic there. For those who wish to go further into mathematics, plane geometry and trigonometry will follow in the senior year.

The commercial course has now been carried on very successfully for two years. This year commercial law and commercial arithmetic will be added. This department will continue under the efficient direction of George Weeks Sandford. There will be some advance in the science department, which has been developed to its present high standard through the efforts of Albert B. Meredith, the present instructor.

The upper floor of the Whittier School, used last year as the gymnasium of the Girls' Athletic Association of the High School, has been divided into four class rooms. Three of these were occupied this morning by the three divisions of the seventh grade which were removed there from the Irving, Bryant and Franklin buildings, to provide for new primary grades in those buildings, and to relieve the overcrowded condition of many of the primary class rooms. The other room will be devoted to the special drawing classes from the High School.

Miss Ada H. Clark, who graduated from the Plainfield High School in 1896, and afterwards from the Trenton Normal School, has taken the position in the Irving School left vacant by the departure of Miss Genevieve Lanning for Mt. Vernon, N. Y. Miss Clark has been teaching near Paterson.

Miss Susie Davies, who was teacher last year of the kindergarten at the Lincoln School, has taken the position of principal of the kindergarten at the Irving School, in the place of Miss Merchant, who was recently married. Miss Davies' place in the Lincoln School has been filled by Miss Angel, of this city.

Former Plainfielder to Wed

Announcement is made of the approaching marriage of Miss Rosilla Nickson, of Phillipsburg, N. J., and Thomas Raddall, formerly of this city, but now of the above-named place. The wedding will take place in about two weeks, and the couple will reside in this city.

STREETS THAT NEED REPAIRS GONE OVER.

Councilman Barrows and Expressman Hoagland Together.

TRIP TAKEN THIS MORNING.

MR. BARROWS EXPLAINS PLANS OF STREET COMMITTEE.

Mr. Hoagland Pointed Out the Defects That Were Gone Over—The Last Street Committee Administration is Blamed for Much of the Present Poor Condition of City Thoroughfares

Councilman Elliott T. Barrows and Expressman A. E. Hoagland took a drive last Monday as a result of the offer made by Mr. Hoagland in the columns of The Daily Press to give $1 to Mr. Barrows, chairman of the street committee, if he would ride over certain streets in the city within two blocks of the railroad and see their deplorable condition.

Mr. Hoagland wanted Mr. Barrows to go in the former's large truck so that he might fully appreciate the rough road, but Mr. Barrows preferred his own vehicle. Mr. Barrows did the driving and Mr. Hoagland occupied the front seat of the trap with him, while a Press reporter sat behind.

The party left the station at 8:10 o'clock and drove out East Third street. Mr. Hoagland pointed out the hummocks and projecting rocks that would fairly jolt the driver of one of the big trucks right out of his seat.

They turned at Richmond street and returned to the station by the way of East Second street and Watchung avenue. Mr. Hoagland told of the condition of West Second street from New street to Plainfield avenue, as there was not time to drive over it.

Mr. Barrows explained that the street committee had realized the necessity of repairing those same streets. He pointed out the heaps of crushed stone that had just been distributed on East Second street for the repair of that thoroughfare. The condition of the streets at present was the result of a poor policy in the past, he said, when Councils had built macadamized roads and expected them to take care of themselves for three or four years without any repairs. If the city streets were all put in good condition, Mr. Barrows said, the present appropriation would be sufficient to keep them in that condition by repairing them and rolling them with the steam roller every spring. As it was the present street committee was trying to keep the good streets as they were and gradually add to their number as often as the appropriation would allow. The leveling of Second and Third streets would take place as soon as the city gang could reach them.

When it was over, the two men found their ideas on the subject in question were identical, so they shook hands and the $1 was turned over to The Press reporter to go to the Baby Camp Fund.

IT WAS ALL A SURPRISE.

Councilman Robert Clark Little Expected That He Was to Entertain a Party of Friends.

When Borough Councilman Robert Clark, of Jackson avenue, returned home from business in Newark Saturday evening and his coachman detained him between the station and his home for an unseemly long time on one pretext or another, he little thought that there was, in the language of the stage, a motif for such conduct. But he realized his mistake when he arrived at his home and was ushered into the parlor, filled with a number of friends who had called to remind him that it was the anniversary of his birthday.

After recovering from his embarrassment at such an unexpected meeting, and when congratulations had been extended in honor of the event, he was taken into the library by Mrs. Clark and seated in a beautiful Morris chair, the gift of his wife. Then presents from other members of the family were brought forth, and Mr. Clark commenced to think that though the "shades of night were falling fast" the sunshine of the day was just beginning to fall on him.

Meanwhile the dinner table had been prepared and the host and guests adjourned to the dining room, where a fine dinner was in evidence. After the dinner a sociable time was enjoyed and the guests left later in the evening, wishing Mr. Clark many happy returns of the day.

Like a woman, Mr. Clark is as old as he looks, and he remarked that he thought he looked to be about twenty-six.

Policeman to Sue Lawyer.

William DeMeza, of this city, is the defendant in an action for damages brought by John Kirkman, an Elizabeth policeman, who claims to have been injured by DeMeza who drove into him some weeks ago while driving in that city, with a young man from this city. Efforts on the part of Mr. DeMeza's a lawyer to settle the case have proved futile. The city attorney of Elizabeth has been asked to press the charges.

WILL BE A BIG PARADE.

TWELVE VISITING COMPANIES HAVE PROMISED TO COME.

Borough Firemen Will Be Host for Volunteers From Many Towns—Line of March Will Probably Be Extended.

The committee in charge of the firemen's parade to be held in the borough October 12th, has received a letter from Star Engine Company, of Long Island City, which is desirous of taking part in the parade. They have a silver-mounted engine. It is composed of old-time firemen, who never go out unless to take part in a parade or celebration. They feel certain of being able to compete with any of the companies that will be in line that day. They will come to this city accompanied by a band of music. This makes the twelfth company that has promised to come and take part.

There is a desire on the part of many firemen of the borough to extend the line of march a short distance in this city, and from present indications it is reasonable to suppose that the parade will come to Plainfield, possibly passing through Park avenue, East Second street, Watchung avenue, East Front street, and return to the borough through Somerset street.

THEIR CLOTHES AFLAME

DANGEROUS RESULTS FROM PLAYING WITH MATCHES.

Six-year-old Child's Dress Was in Flames—Lawrence Green Heroically Extinguished the Fire, Burning His Hands Badly.

Little Mamie Cramer and Katie Green had a narrow escape from being burned to death last Saturday evening. The children were playing in the cellar at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Green, of 315 West Third street, when in some manner the light dress worn by Mamie Crame suddenly burst into a flame. The child, who is but six years of age, ran screaming from the cellar and to the sidewalk.

The little one's cries attracted the attention of Mr. Green, who had just returned from work. Mr. Green ran to the child's assistance and in less time than it takes to tell it had torn the blazing garments from the little one, fortunately before the fire had seriously burned the girl. Mr. Green's hands were slightly burned in his heroic efforts to save the life of his little daughter's playmate. It is supposed that the children were playing with matches.

PARTNER HAS VANISHED.

AND WITH HIM WENT CONSIDERABLE PROPERTY.

The Parting is the Climax to Legal Problems Between the Two Men—Property Found in a Freight Car.

Joseph Munch was a partner with Angeld Verliny at Mt. Bethel in a general farming business. The latter claimed that his partner owed him $118 and recently Verling brought suit against Much.

Last Friday Verliny went to New York for a visit and he remained there until yesterday morning. When he returned he failed to find his partner and an investigation proved that there were many other things he could not find, including two horses, a cow, a spring wagon, a buggy, an incubator and the furniture in the house. They were all gone and there was a destitute appearance appearance about the place.

The first Verliny was dumbfounded and bewildered. Then he began to feel indignant and he came to this city. He reached Plainfield yesterday forenoon and reported the matter to Patrolman Mattox, whom he happened to meet. An investigation followed with a partial success. The furniture was found stored in a freight car near the freight house, which was billed to New York.

An investigation was then made for the other things but as yet they have not been located. Word was sent to several nearby cities warning the police to be on the lookout for the missing partner.

Verliny allowed the furniture to leave Plainfield, and he has gone to New York, where he hopes to catch Munch when he calls there for the goods.

PLAINFIELD RIDERS CAPTURE THE PRIZES

Charles Hummer, of This City, Wins the Road Race.

ACCIDENTS WERE PLENTY.

ONE RIDER'S WHEEL IS SMASHED IN A COLLISION.

Several Others Have Narrow Escapes From Serious Injury—Curtiss and Sorenson Fall in a Heap at the First Turn—Crowd Pressed too Close—Next Race Will be Held on Saturday, Sept. 23d.

The features of the 16 mile road race held Saturday afternoon at Scotch Plains, under the auspices of W. S. Emery, were the numerous accidents to the participants. Though none of the riders were seriously injured, the spills marred the race and prevented as interesting a contest as had been expected.

However, the race was highly interesting and drew a big crowd, fully five hundred people being about the starting point when the men were sent away by Harry Lister, who acted as starter and timer, while Frank Schuck was clerk of the course.

Plainfield riders captured the first and third prizes and a Scotch Plains man won the second medal. The latter man was Charles Hummer, of this city, who proved equal to his name and maintained the reputation he has gained among his admirers for being a "hummer" on a wheel. It is a question, however, whether the result would have been the same had no accidents occurred.

The men were sent on their long journey at exactly 4:22 o'clock in the following order:

Name.	Town.	Handicap
Wm. Simpson.	Westfield.	4 minutes
John Lemaire.	Plainfield.	4 minutes
Fred Miller.	Scotch Plains.	3 minutes
Jeppe Sorenson.	Plainfield.	3 minutes
David Curtiss.	Westfield.	3 minutes
A. R. Green.	Plainfield.	2 minutes
Charles Hummer.	Plainfield.	2 minutes
Charles LeMaihy.	Westfield.	2 minutes
Lewis Miller.	Westfield.	2 minutes
Arthur Jones.	Scotch Plains.	1 minute
A. Neal Bansen.	Plainfield.	1 minute
Fred Townsend.	Berger.	Scratch
Charles Embleton.	Westfield.	Scratch

The first accident in the race befell Townsend, who slipped from his wheel while endeavoring to make the turn into the Springfield road. Chapin, who was close up fell over Townsend and in a flash there was a mix up. Townsend's wheel was so badly used up that he was compelled to secure another. Embleton, following rapidly in the rear of Townsend and Chapin, narrowly escaped a collision by taking the sidewalk and going around the bunch. The accident to Townsend put him so far behind that he was hopelessly out of the race. Nevertheless, he mounted a borrowed wheel and pluckily continued the struggle. Chapin also continued but was disqualified for not making the last turn.

The first to finish the first eight miles were Marsh, LeMaire and Miller, who made the turn at the liberty pole in the order named, closely followed by Hummer. This quartette had scarcely straightened out on the final run when Curtiss came at breakneck speed. Unfortunately for this rider the crowd pressed too close, and, in making the turn in front of the hotel, Curtiss collided with a spectator and went down. Sorenson was following so closely that he was unable to avoid an accident and he and Curtiss fell in a heap. The accident put the men out of the race. It also caused some confusion and was the means, of interfering with LeMathy, Simpson and Greene, though the latter continued over the course.

The race was finally finished in this order: Hummer, Marsh, LeMaire, Miller, Embleton, Greene, and Townsend. Hummer's time was 43:35 2-5. Hummer was awarded a gold medal and the silver cup, the latter prize being presented from LeMathy, of Westfield, who won it at the first race. To retain the cup, however, Hummer will be compelled to win it twice more. Marsh and LeMaire were presented with silver and bronze medals respectively. The next race will be pulled off Saturday afternoon, September 23d.

KUCKLO SENT TO JAIL.

BROUGHT FROM HOSPITAL AND ARRAIGNED BEFORE A JUSTICE.

Made No Statement in Court and is Held to Await the Action of the Grand Jury — He Will Probably Get Well, John Kuckio, who attempted to kill his wife, by shooting her at their home on Clinton avenue, was brought down from the hospital Monday morning by Capt. Grant and arraigned before Justice Nash. The specific charge against Kuckio is assult and battery upon the person of his wife Elizabeth Kuckio by shooting her. The accused had nothing to say to the charge. The justice then committed him to the county jail at Elizabeth to await the action of the grand jury.

Kuckio seid he felt better then he did last Saturday, and it is the opinion of the hospital physicians that he will recover from the effects of his attempt to kill himself by shooting.

NEW COMER WINS HONORS FOR CUP.

George C. Worth Made Low Score Saturday Afternoon.

ON PARK GOLF CLUB LINKS.

LEADERS IN COMPETION FAILED TO SCORE ANY POINTS.

Townsend Brothers Won Second and Third Honors for the Day—Anderson Scored 96—Dryden Was Out of Form—Low Scores Were Made—Miss Daisy Elsberg in Lead for Buttfield Cup.

There were several surprises in the play for the McCutchen Cup on the links of the Park Golf Club Saturday afternoon. First honors for the day went to a comparative stranger in club competitions, George C. Worth, while the Townsend brothers captured the other points awarded for the afternoon's play. The cards handed in showed lower scores than usual, four of the net scores being below the 100. The leaders in the competition for the trophy were unable to score a point.

Worth, who made low net score for the day's play, has only recently developed into a golfer. He has practiced occasionally on the course but made his debut in competitan on Labor Day, when he was second to William A. Townsend for the Labor Day Cup, a handicap competition. He received the limit in handicap, 3 strokes, and was only beaten by one stroke for the cup. Saturday, his first round was made in 61, and the second in 60, by careful, even playing. His driving was poor but his iron shots on the fair green were hard and long.

The Townsends, William A., and Morgan T., went round together. It was a close thing and both played in good form. Morgan made his eighteen holes in just one less than the even hundred. His gross score was 92. William, winner of the Labor Day Cup, did five better than on Labor Day and was only beaten by his brother by one stroke.

W. de la B. Anderson was on hand and played a fair game but met with considerable hard luck including sundry visitations of hazards. He made the two rounds in company with Charles E. Faber. Faber was way off his old form.

Meredith Dryden and Gifford W. Cooley were paired off. Dryden failed to do better than 120, while Cooley never handed in a card. Just as the latter drove from the first tee on his second round, a caddie stepped in the road and caught the ball on the shoulder. He was not hurt but the drive was spoiled.

As a result of Saturday afternoon's play, there was no change in the order of the leaders for the cup. Worth entered the competition and tied for tenth place with three others, including Morgan Townsend, who advanced from seventeenth to tenth place. Will Townsend advanced from eleventh to seventh place where he is tied with Douglass and Hibbard.

The scores handed in were:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
George C. Worth	121	30	91
Morgan T. Townsend	99	7	92
Wm. A. Townsend	109	16	93
W. de la B. Anderson	96	6	90
Meredith Dryden	120	12	108
Charles E. Faber	141	24	117
Augustus VanDeventer			1
C. W. McCutchen			1
W. R. Faber			1

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

W. de la B. Anderson	12½
Meredith Dryden	10
Gifford W. Cooley	10
Charles E. Faber	7
W. Faber	5
Samuel Townsend	4½
Wm. A. Townsend	3½
T. T. Douglass	3½
J. Hibbard	3½
Morgan T. Townsend	3
T. P. Rogers	3
Arthur Peck	3
George C. Worth	3
Fred T. Taylor	2½
S. S. Squires	2½
A. B. Hayer	2
Volney F. Green	2
J. J. Hibbard	2
Fred S. Overton	1
Clarence S. Boome	1

In the competition for the Buttfield Cup Miss Daisy Elsberg and Miss Saidee Mae Howell both took part and the former increased her lead for the trophy by making low score in the event. Miss Howell was evidently not playing up to her usual game, for her gross score was only five strokes behind Miss Elsberg's, while there is a difference of 14 between their handicaps.

Their scores were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Miss Daisy Elsberg	80	18	62
Miss Saidee Mae Howell	75	4	71

There has been no official announcement of the number of points yet scored for the Buttfield Cup, but an inspection of the past scores shows the following competitors and the points scored by them:

Miss Daisy Elsberg	23
Miss Saidee May Howell	13
Miss Adelaide G. Ball	1

Will March in the Dewey Parade.

Field Battery A, of East Orange, has signified its intention of taking part in the Dewey parade in New York, and every member of the command will be in line.

A Good Job.

The work of laying concrete sidewalks on Somerset street over the county bridge was completed Friday. The job is a good one and is appreciated by the traveling public.

SAYS CYCLE RACES ARE ALMOST NUDE

Rev. G. M. Shott Scores Races at Scotch Plains.

BLAMES HIS OWN CHURCH.

ALSO SAYS CONSTABLES DO NOT DO THEIR DUTY.

Declares That State Laws Are Being Violated and That Women Have to Turn Their Faces Away in Shame—Calls Upon His Church Members to Use Their Influence Against Such Events.

Scotch Plains, Sept. 11—Rev. Gideon M. Shott, pastor of the Baptist church, who has been sermonizing for several months past on the sin and iniquity which he thinks exists in this town, yesterday made a violent attack on the practices that prevail in the running of the series of bicycle road races in this place Saturday afternoons. The races attract large crowds of people from Plainfield and neighboring towns. The subject of Rev. Mr. Shott's sermon yesterday morning was "The Seven Golden Candle Sticks." In part he said:

"Has this old church lost its lamp stand that it allows 300 or 400 people to come into our village, as was done Saturday, to watch three partly nude men struggle for the mastery in a bicycle race, when men and women stand by and applaud this show of brute strength. This was allowed in our streets yesterday and this old church stood by a witness to it but threw out no light. If the church lamps or candle sticks were kept lighted and the wicks trimmed and cared for we would have very little infidelity in the world."

"My attention was called to the partly nude racers not only by men but by women, some of whom turned their heads away from the sight. Do you know there is a law which says a person shall dress with common decency upon the street? It is unlawful for a bicycle to be propelled faster than ten miles an hour through the streets of the village. We have an ordinance which forbids it; still you allow it to go on, and by so doing some of our boys get the fever and enter the struggle."

"It is unlawful for a man to strike his fellow man, still our officers allowed about 200 struggling men and boys to fight and struggle after the race for nearly a block through the principal street in our village. And what did they do? Not an arrest! Such a sight for the peaceful residents of the village to witness!

"This triple alliance against the law of our State was allowed to go on in the heart of our beautiful village Saturday and we stood by and allowed it. Churches that fose their lamplight and fail to light the wanderer to Christ are merely lamposts in the Master's work. In those days men are busy shedding their light out into the world and not for the Master. May God help this old church to be like 'The Seven Golden Candle Sticks.'"

THEATRE FOR BRUNSWICK.

Manager Maze Edwards, of This City, is Trying to Interest Capitalists in the Project.

Maze Edwards, manager of Stillman Music Hall in this city, is trying to interest New Brunswick capitalists in the project of building a theatre in that place, which, when completed, he agrees to take a lease of for ten years. Mr. Edwards visited New Brunswick Friday and interviewed a number of capitalists and business men, and found that they were anxious to aid such an enterprise. He enlisted the support of Edward H. Radel, secretary of the Brunswick Traction Company. Phillip Weigel, Jr., was also seen, and he stated that he would offer a strip of land on Dennis street, a few doors from George, as a site for the theatre. The property is valued at $8,000, and he agreed to accept stock in the theatre company in payment for the land. If the building is put up it is calculated to make it cost about $35,000, exclusive of the site.

A Handsome Monument.

One of the handsomest monuments to be seen in New York Bay Cemetery, Bayonne City, is that erected over the remains of the late Patrick Branley by his widow, Mrs. Abbie Branley, of Jersey City. Mr. Branley was at one time a resident of Plainfield and was well known here, and at the time of his death was in the employ of S. A. Ginna, of this city, at his place of business in New York.

Retires After Thirty Years.

Charles D. Tull, of Elizabeth, for the past thirty years chief clerk of the transportation department of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, has severed his connection with that company and started Saturday night to visit his brothers, sisters, and other near relatives, who reside at different points on the Pacific coast, and whom he has not seen for many years.

Miss Tillie Schenck, of Elmwood place, spent Sunday with her folks at Metuchen.

AID FOR WORTHY WOMAN

LAWN PARTY PROFITS DEVOTED TO CHARITABLE PURPOSES.

Given at the Residence and Under the Direction of Mrs. Dorsey W. Hyde—The Young Ladies Who Assisted.

The worthy affair of Friday afternoon was the lawn party and sale given at the residence of Mrs. Dorsey W. Hyde, 705 Woodland avenue, for the purpose of raising $15 with which to pay the rent for a poor and deserving woman in this city. Mrs. Hyde directed the affair and under her supervision the following young girls made it a great success: Anna Runyon, Maida Hyde, Frances VanDeventer, Theodora Miller, Ruth Bullock, Grace Wilcox, Helen Moody, Antionette Moody and Marguerite VanDeventer.

There were on sale cakes, candies fancy articles and ice cream, and various booths were handsomely arranged on the spacious lawn. That the affair was a complete success can be learned when it is stated that $35 was realized. From this amount it will be necessary to pay out about $4 for general expenses incurred. It is the intention to pay the rent for the poor woman, and the balance will be donated to the baby camp to assist in that work.

During the hours of 4 to 6 o'clock there was a large attendance of interested people and nearly everything for sale was disposed of by those in charge.

WANTS MONEY BACK.

BANK THIEF VALENTINE SUES FOR $10,000 LOST IN GAMBLING.

Proprietor of a Long Branch Club is the Defendant—If the Money is Secured Bank Will Probably Receive It.

New Brunswick, Sept. 9—George M. Valentine, who is now serving a term of six years in the State prison for robbing the Middlesex County Bank at Perth Amboy, has brought suit in the Supreme Court against Edward Marks, of Long Branch, through United States District Attorney J. Kearny Rice, of this city. Valentine sues to recover money which he lost at a Long Branch club of which Marks is said to be the owner. He asserts that he lost $13,000 on a single spin of the roulette wheel. The amount which he seeks to recover, however, is $10 000.

Valentine brings his suit under the first and fifth sections of the "Act to prevent gaming." In the first section it is declared that gaming is unlawful, and the fifth says that "any person who shall lose any money, goods, chattels or other valuable thing in violation of the first section may sue and recover the same from the winners or stakeholders, provided suit shall be brought within six months after payment or delivery of the money."

E. S. Campbell, who lives in this city, says that if Valentine recovers the money, efforts will be made to have it turned over to the creditors of the banks which he robbed at Perth Amboy. Mr. Campbell is receiver for the Middlesex Bank.

THREE HURT ON WHEELS

BRUISED AND CUT, BUT NONE WERE SERIOUSLY INJURED.

George Peterson's Way Blocked by Another Rider—A. R. Greene Injured in Road Race—Wm. Young Hurt in Collision

George Peterson, one of the colored assistants at Rogers' bicycle store, was severely injured by a fall from his wheel Saturday afternoon. He was riding out East Front street bound for Scotch Plains to see the road race when another rider swerved suddenly in front of him, cutting him off. He was thrown over the handle bars and landed on his head. He received several scalp wounds and his face was cut. He was attended by Dr. Westcott.

A. R. Greene, of Verdon street, is barely able to get around this morning as the result of injuries received in the road race at Scotch Plains, Saturday. He was thrown from his wheel twice. His head was cut and his legs and arms badly bruised.

William Young, of 133 Liberty street, was run into by David Beach, colored, Sunday afternoon while riding his wheel on South avenue near Leland avenue. Young was badly cut on the forehead, where seven stitches were taken. His eye was nearly gouged out. A bone in his wrist was broken. He also received several other cuts and bruises.

MRS. COX NOT THERE.

She Wrote Her Husband to Meet Her in Scotch Plains, but She Failed to Appear.

Andrew Cox, of Watchung avenue, husband of Mrs. Cox, who left the city in the early part of last week, went to Scotch Plains Saturday evening, in company with Henry Van-Middlesworth, for the purpose of meeting Mrs. Cox, who through a letter to her husband stated that she would meet him there at 8 o'clock. After waiting for over an hour the two men returned home disappointed in not being able to meet the woman.

KUCKLO SENT BACK TO THE HOSPITAL.

Not Well Enough to be Arraigned in Court.

HE IS UNDER CLOSE WATCH.

TOLD A PRESS REPORTER THAT HIS WIFE WAS UNFAITHFUL.

Justice Nash Did Not Feel Like Taking the Responsibility of Committing Him to Jail Till His Physical Condition is Improved—Culprit Does Not Seem to be Remorseful Over His Act.

John Kuckio, the German, who made a murderous assault upon his wife Elizabeth, and then attempted to kill himself by shooting at their home on Clinton avenue, Thursday, August 31st, was brought down from the hospital Saturday and placed in a cell at the city jail.

Kuckio was placed under arrest Friday, a warrant having been sworn out before Justice Nash by Captain Grant of the police department. While at the hospital Kuckio has been closely watched and since his condition improved all the more care has been taken to prevent any attempt at escape. Friday night Special Officer Mattox was detailed by Captain Grant to stay at the hospital and keep an eye on Kuckio.

When brought down to jail Saturday Kuckio appeared very weak and was on the verge of collapse. He had a ghastly appearance and his unshaven face gave him a general air of dejection. Justice Nash, when he saw the accused, felt some reluctance about arraigning him and taking the responsibility of committing him to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

After a consultation with Captain Grant, Justice Nash decided that the interests of justice would not suffer if the arraignment of Kuckio was deferred a few days. Justice Nash did not wish to take the chance of having the man sent to jail and then have his condition assume anything unfavorable to his ultimate recovery. A carriage was secured and Kuckio was taken to the hospital again, where he will remain until such time as it is considered safe to arraign him on the charge of assault with intent to kill his wife.

Kuckio told a Daily Press reporter that the reason he shot his wife was because she was a bad woman. He denied that he had been drinking on the morning he shot his wife and attempted to take his own life. "I guess I must have been mad," he said, "and did not know what I was doing." Continuing he said: "We had a quarrel the night before and when I got up that morning she kept at me." When asked about having another wife Kuckio shrugged his shoulders and replied "pshaw!" He did not appear to wish to discuss the subject.

Mrs. Kuckio has left the hospital and with her son is living at 24 Clinton avenue, where the shooting occurred. It is believed that Kuckio will ultimately recover, although the bullets are still in his head.

FRANCHISE ACCEPTED.

Westfield and Elizabeth Trolley Company Begin Work on Final Link in Roselle.

Roselle, Sept 11—The Westfield and Elizabeth Trolley Company has accepted the franchise granted by the Roselle Borough Council, and has deposited the $20,000 bond for the faithful performance of the provisions of the ordinance, and $10 000 with the Fidelity Trust Company, which is to be used for the widening of Second avenue. Surveyor VanDerburgh has fixed the grade, and Colonel Riker, who has in town, gave direction for the work to begin at once.

STORM STOPPED STREET CARS.

Traffic on Somerset Street Stalled Because of Water on the Tracks.

The heavy storm between 12 and 1 o'clock Monday afternoon flooded the streets to a depth of several inches. In some places the trolley cars were stalled. Some difficulty was experienced on Somerset street near Jackson avenue. The water covered the tracks and the entire street was inundated. Pedestrians were compelled to use fences in order to cross certain street. Storm sewers are badly needed in the borough.

New Uniforms for Fire Laddies.

The members of the West End Hose Company received their new uniforms last Thursday evening and are very much pleased with them. They were made by Schepflin & Schuirs, which is a guarantee that they are all right. Augustus Feiring, as chairman of the committee having the matter in charge, deserves credit for the advantageous terms and bargain secured by the fire laddies. The new suits will be worn on October 13th for the first time, when the firemen's parade will be held in the borough.

Miss Marguerite Schuck, of Vine street, has returned from Brooklyn, where she has been entertained by friends.

NEW STAND PIPE OF THE WATER COMPANY.

It Will Provide An Adequate Supply At All Times.

30 FEET HIGH; 75 FEET WIDE.

IT WILL ALSO PROVIDE AN EVEN PRESSURE FOR FIVE HYCRANTS.

The Pipe is Being Erected by Tibbett & Wood, Contractors, of Phillipsburg, N. J., Who Also Erected the One at Netherwood — Statement That the Plainfield Water Supply is Inexhaustible Now.

In about three weeks the stand pipe now being erected on the mountain near Johnston's Drive by the Plainfield Water Supply Company will be completed and ready for use. Since establishing the stand pipe there has been considerable talk among different people as to its erection, its purpose, etc.

The stand-pipe is being erected for the purpose of having an adequate supply of water at any and all times to meet any demand that may be made, especially in case of a large fire in either the city or borough. The water company has for a long time been impressed with the need of an extra pipe and it is quite likely that others will be built at no distant day.

This new stand-pipe is being erected by Tibbett & Wood, contractors, of Phillipsburg, N. J., who erected the one at Netherwood. It will be 30 feet high and 75 feet in diameter. The top of it will be the same height as the one at Netherwood, so as not to permit of any overflow that might wash away the ground on the side of the mountain where it is built. This new pipe is already connected with the one at the pumping station and when completed water will be allowed to run into it.

In the technical sense the new pipe will consist of five rings, and the workmen have about completed the first ring. The pipe connecting winds its way through the borough and passes through Somerset street, Johnston's Drive and up the mountain to the pipe. In manner of construction it will be the same as the old pipe, and will be made to stand the heaviest wear and pressure that it might be subjected to.

There is an advantage in having an extra stand pipe. It provides a more even pressure on the fire hydrants, and while it does not increase the pressure it does the supply.

Regarding the supply of water there is no appreciable decrease in it, and an authority on Plainfield water supply, who said from the very first that there was an inexhaustible supply, still adheres to that theory, which thus far has become a solid fact. This same man, at a great cost of time and money, secured the knowledge as to the exact extent of the underground lake or river, its boundaries and its depth, and he is undoubtedly the only person who has this information.

That Plainfield has great cause for thankfulness in her unlimited and pure water supply is an established fact, for there is today no other place in New Jersey that can say as much of a water supply as this city.

MISSING LINK SECURED.

Road From Bound Brook to Dunellen to be Macadamized—Good News for Good Road Advocates.

A matter of great importance to the driving and wheeling public was decided on Labor Day, when State Road Commissioner Budd came to Bound Brook and went over the road from Bound Brook to Dunellen. He was accompanied by Chosen Freeholder Alexander Manning, of Piscataway, Town Committeeman Joseph V. D. Field, J. B. Cleaver, H. F. Baker and L. S. Cook. They drove through Union avenue and the old stage road to Lincoln avenue, where the macadam from Dunellen ends on that road.

Mr. Budd saw that this was a most important thoroughfare, connecting the Somerset county system of good roads with those to the east, and he promised to use his utmost efforts to have the improvement made at once, so that the terrors of another winter on this highway may be avoided.

At the meeting of the Board of Freeholders Wednesday the road was ordered built.

A Bad Street to Travel.

Probably the worst street to travel in this city at the present time is South avenue, and it is made especially bad owing to the work of increasing the grade at the foot of the hill. The work is being done slowly and the condition in which the road is left certainly makes it rather unsafe to travel at night.

George L. Colgate Now an Editor.

George L. Colgate, formerly of the Bird Cycle Company, of this city, is now located at Orland, Glenn county, California, where he is publishing a weekly paper called "The Orland Register." The paper is about up to the standard of the usual weekly and appears to be well edited.

GOVERNOR AND HATS.

MR. VOORHEES HAS THEM IN ALL KINDS AND SHAPES.

But the Trouble is That He Does Not Always Have the Right Hat Ready for the Right Suit That He Proposes to Wear.

Governor Foster M. Voorhees has been trying to improve on his hats. He never was much of a stickler for style, but since he has been raised to the Chief Magistrate's chair he has been buying the latest thing in headgear.

The Governor, being a bachelor, has no wife to keep the right hat handy for the right suit, and being a farmer's son, he has no valet to see that he does not violate the decrees of fashion. In consequence of these omissions he wears the first hat that comes handy, believing fondly in the distorted maxim borrowed from the poet Burns, "A man's a man in all hats."

The Governor grew up in a Fedora. Whether they were shown on fashion plates or not, he wore a soft hat with a wide brim. As a political thinking cap it was a great success. As Assemblyman and Senator he continued his fancy for a soft hat. It would match a sack coat or a cutaway, so he stuck to it.

When he came to the Executive Department he found that custom had ordained that all State officials wore a fixed hat copyrighted by its owner. Adjutant Gen. W. S. Stryker, who rides beside the Governor on State occasions, has a high silk hat with a brim that would make the Prince of Wales envious. There is only one block of the kind. The State Librarian that was, Morris R. Hamilton, wore the high hat of the Andrew Jackson vintage. Quartermaster General Donnelly was in the war, and he sticks close to the broad brim "Grant" hat. State Comptroller Hancock wears a Dunlap hat of a pronounced English shape.

The Governor sent for a "Slike" for State occasions, but it happened that in his usual rush from home he frequently got hold of the high silk hat when the rest of his attire was not in harmony. To keep Mrs. Grundy's tongue still he put away the "slicer." When the weather got warm he purchased a crash suit. "I would not like to tell you what I gave for it, because it is a state secret," was his answer several times when his staff officers looked at it and sighed. He wore his Fedora with it, but he did not think it looked right, so forthwith he sent to New York for a straw hat of the Fedora shape, but with a brim that would make Buffalo Bill exceedingly amiable. The crash suit was not suitable for State occasions, but the straw hat had its charms, so frequently the straw hat has been found going with a Prince Albert coat and wedding breakfast trousers.

Somebody asked him at the State House last week, after eyeing the dimensions of the straw hat, if he was wearing his brother's top lid. That led up to a discussion on hats, and the Governor said: "Thank the stars that the bell will go off in a few days and the straw hats will be called in. I'll hide it away in my safe, else I'll get it on by mistake some snowy day and disgrace the State."

WEIGHING THE MAILS.

Postmaster General Smith Changes the Method in Vogue—Mr. Bird Notified.

Postmaster E. H. Bird Friday morning received an order from Postmaster General Smith directing the weighing of the mails, which is to commence on October 31, immediately after midnight, and to continue for 35 successive days, ending at midnight November 6th. The Government requires information regarding the weight of mail matter originating in the United States every 24 hours, together with the weight of the equipment necessary to transport the same, and the total weight of mail matter, equipment, supplies, etc., passing over steam railroads every 24 hours.

The weighing of the mails was heretofore done at the railroad stations by special weighers. The work will be done under the new order in the postoffice and by the office attaches.

TIE OVER A SUPERINTENDENT.

Rahway Board of Education Not Able to Select One.

The Rahway Board of Education is a tie on the appointment of a superintendent of public schools. The political complexion of the board stands four Republicans and two Democrats, but the minority was joined by Mr. Charles Howard, of the First Ward.

Principal of the Third Ward High School W. O. Robinson was the superintendent last year, but this year the name of Leslie Lupton was presented and a tie resulted. The Democratic members contend that the superintendent's time is occupied in visiting the schools when he should be attending his classes. The Republicans think the assistant is capable of attending the high school pupils in the principal's absence.

SUED OLD EMPLOYER FOR LOSS OF LIMB.

George Christensen Started Suit for $20,000.

INJURED BY A HAY PRESS.

HOLDS JOHN LAMBERT, OF WILLOW GROVE, RESPONSIBLE.

Christensen Was Loading the Press With Hay When His Foot Caught in the Machinery and Was Crushed—Claims He Was Not Warned as to the Dangerous Character of the Press.

As the result of an accident that occurred to George Christensen last May and necessitated the amputation of one of his legs, Christensen has now started suit in the New Jersey Supreme Court against his former employer, John Lambert, of Willow Grove, near Westfield, for $20,000 damages. Christensen was working at the hay press at the time, and his foot was caught in the press, mashing it severely.

Christensen lives on West Fourth street, this city, and has labored more or less steadily on the Lambert farm for the past eight years. John Lambert, his former employer, is a brother to Isaac Lambert, and his house and barns are located right across the road from the latter's distillery. Mr. Lambert raises hay and then presses it into bales for the market. The hay press is run by horse power. Christensen alleges that he never received instructions as to the methods employed at the press and was never cautioned as to its alleged highly dangerous character. Mr. Lambert says that Christen en has often worked at the press.

On May 22d the press was working and Christensen was assisting in putting the hay into the press. For some reason they found some difficulty in feeding the press fast enough and Christensen used his foot to force the hay into the opening. He alleges that he did it at the direction of Lambert. The iron arms that are used to bind it caught his left foot and crushed it.

Christensen was taken into Lambert's house and physicians were summoned at once. A bone in his foot was removed. Later it was found necessary to amputate the leg just above the ankle, and still later just above the knee. The loss of the limb and the accompanying illness have incapacitated Christensen ever since and he has been able to do nothing.

Suit was started August 1st by his attorney, Joseph E. Stricker, of Perth Amboy, and the case will come up for trial in the October term of the Supreme Court at Elizabeth. A plea of not guilty has just been filed by Murphy & Blatz, the attorneys for Mr. Lambert.

THINK ASKING PRICES HIGH.

Post Office Site Not Yet Bought in New Brunswick.

There is another hitch in New Brunswick's efforts to secure a Federal post office building. It is now understood that the officials of the Treasury Department consider the prices placed upon available sites too high, and therefore will make no choice at present. An effort is to be made, it is understood, to secure an available site at a much lower figure than any of the owners of such sites have asked. There are several sites whose owners' asking prices were about $32,500. It is said that the officials of the Treasury Department are averse to paying one-third of the entire appropriation for a site alone.

First Time Here in Ten Years.

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, of Elmwood place, have returned from a trip to Philadelphia, where they witnessed the celebration in honor of the G. A. R. encampment. They also visited the battle-field at Gettysburg, where they spent two days sight seeing. They were accompanied home by Charles Dobbins, of Danville, Ill., a brother of Mr. Dobbins, whom they have not seen before in nearly ten years. Mr. Dobbins will visit his birthplace at Caldwell, N. J., before he returns to the east, and other points of interest.

LICENSES NOT TRANSFERRED.

Elizabeth Saloon-Keepers Claim They Didn't Understand the Law.

Elizabeth's Excise Board proposes to punish about seventeen saloonkeepers who, the city Attorney alleges, have been selling without a license. The offenders bought out other dealers, and did not suppose they had violated any law. The City Attorney, however, says that each one should have applied to the board for a transfer of the license, and failing to do so they will have to pay a fine of $20, and must close their places until the Excise Board grants them a transfer.

Some of the men threaten to retaliate by making a charge against the License Inspector of neglect of duty in not posting them.

Mrs. A. E. Bushnell, of Newark, is visiting Mrs. Fred Bird, of East Front street.

WILL CARRY LIGHTS NOW

CHIEF GRANT DECLARES FOR STRICT OBEDIENCE OF LAW.

Instructed All Mounted Policemen to Use Lamps Hereafter and Also to Keep From Riding on the Sidewalks.

All the police who did duty awheel Thursday carried lighted lamps and steered very clear of all sidewalks. It was the direct result of the arrest of Night Watchman Joseph Cooney on the charge of riding a wheel on the sidewalk and the subsequent announcement by the City Judge.

When the night force went on duty last evening Chief Grant was present and spoke a few words to the officers on the subject. He instructed the men that the law says that all wheelmen must have lights at nights and must keep off sidewalks. He further stated that they were not to overlook their fellow officers if the bicycle ordinance was violated. He insisted on a strict interpretation of the law.

As a result of the announcement made by the Chief, all the mounted men carried lamps all night and kept off the sidewalks. No violations were reported this noon.

The police have nothing to say regarding the enforcement of the bicycle ordinance in relation to physicians and letter carriers. In either case, it will make much hardship if the letter of the law is insisted upon and the people will not receive their mail anywhere nearly as quick as at present. The police say that if the city wants the ordinance enforced to letter letter, they will do it. Meanwhile the letter carriers are still using the sidewalks when they find them convenient.

STATE TRAVELING LIBRARIES.

Mrs. Kate H. Horton, of Cranford Confers With Secretary of State.

Mrs. Kate Brownlee Horton, of Cranford, chairman of the department of libraries of the New Jersey Federation of Woman's Clubs, visited the Statehouse at Trenton Thursday and had a conference with State Librarian Henry C. Buchanan and Secretary of State George Wurts with reference to the proposed traveling libraries.

A plan for the establishment of the traveling libraries has been prepared to be introduced at the next meeting of the library commission, and the scheme was gone over by the three. In general Mrs. Horton heartily approved of the system, with the exception of the proposition to start with 20 libraries of 50 volumes each. She thought better results would be obtained by beginning with 40 libraries of 25 volumes each.

Mrs. Horton is also anxious to have a sample traveling library on exhibition at Atlantic City, where there will be a meeting of club women in October.

FUNERAL OF MRS. MESCHUTT.

Rev. C. E. Herring Referred to the Dead Woman in a Touching Way.

The funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Hannah M. Meschutt, whose death occurred September 5th, were held at 8 o'clock Thursday evening at the home of the deceased's husband, George F. Meschutt, 326 East Front street, Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, officiated. He paid a tribute to the many excellent qualities possessed by Mrs. Meschutt and the fortitude she had displayed in her long illness which she bore patiently to the end. Rev. Mr. Herring's reference to the death of Mrs. Meschutt's two children was also touched upon in a feeling manner.

Many friends of the deceased were in attendance at the obsequies. The body was contained in a casket covered with gray and beside it were conspicuous many floral pieces from relatives and dear friends.

Friday morning the remains were taken to Arlington cemetery for burial beside those of Mrs. Meschutt's children.

LARGE FREIGHT YARD.

Lehigh Valley Forsakes a Location in Jersey City for One in Newark.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, having been refused the privilege of establishing a grade crossing at Communipaw avenue, Jersey City, has abandoned its plan of building a large freight yard in Jersey City, and is now laying out a yard in Newark, at the end of its bridge over Newark Bay. The meadows are being filled in, and the yard will extend to "Mosquito Line," as the branch road of the Central Railroad between Newark and Elizabethport is termed. It will be a large yard, as 300,000 cubic yards of filling will be required, and twenty-seven miles of tracks will be laid. The contract calls for the completion of the yards on January 1st.

Meat Prices the Same.

There has been no change in the wholesale price of meats during the last few weeks. The prices are still high but apparently there is no appearance of their going higher at present. The beef market remains steady although the lamb market is reported a trifle stronger. Many of the local dealers have increased their retail prices to conform with the recent advance in the wholesale rates that caused so much comment.

RUTH MOORE WILL BE A HARD ONE TO CURB.

She Gives Industrial School Officers Much Trouble.

SEEMS BOUND TO ESCAPE.

PICKED TWO LOCKS IN HER EFFORTS TO GET AWAY.

In Taking Her to Trenton the Deputy Sheriff Came Near Losing the Recreant Girl—Very Pert to the Officers and Threatened to Do Them up if They Tried to Control Her in the School.

The officials of the Girls' Industrial School at Trenton will have a hard time to conquer the incorrigibility of that notorious young girl from Plainfield, Ruth Moore, if she continues to act in the way she started at the Industrial School. In telling of the introduction of the Moore girl into the institution the Trenton True American Friday morning says:

Ruth Moore, a fifteen-year-old girl, of Plainfield, Union county, was brought to the State Industrial School for Girls by the Deputy Sheriff of that county Wednesday. Ruth appears to be of a particularly bad disposition, and may be described as a typical character of the class of girls for whom the Industrial School was established and about whom so much sentimentalism has been wasted during the past few weeks.

Ruth is the fourth of a notorious gang of girls that the police of Plainfield have been trying to capture for some time and they are all now safely housed in the Industrial School. She was charged with general depravity and incorrigibility and consorting with evil and dissolute men.

The Deputy Sheriff experienced considerable difficulty in bringing her to Trenton, she having succeeded in escaping from him once on the way. When she arrived at the school she was very pert, and gave the officer who took her in charge to understand that she would "be up" if she attempted to control her.

She was given a bath and assigned to a room, when she picked the lock and escaped to the lower hall, where she was caught by two officers and with the aid of two strong girls was again placed in her room. Later she was found making her way out over the top of the screen in her room. She was then put in another room where the shutter was fastened with a Yale lock. In short time she had picked the lock and was ready to make her escape through the window. All the girls at the Industrial School are probably not as bad as Ruth, but it is evident that the "oil of persuasion" that is so strenuously urged as a reformative agent would be misapplied in her case.

And it is for endeavoring to control and make amenable to proper authority just such characters as the one above described that the management of the Industrial School has been assailed from one end of the State to the other.

Tried a Case in Newark.

Lawyer William Newcorn, of West Front street, was in Newark Friday, where he tried an important case in the District Court. The suit was between a Newark and New York man.

A MINIATURE RAILROAD.

INGENIOUS ENTERPRISE OF PLAINFIELD BOYS.

It is on the Jeremiah Manning Property and is 200 Feet Long—A Log Cabin for Depot—Old Fountain President.

What may eventually be a strong opposition to the Plainfield Street Railway Company is now being developed in the west end of the city on the Jeremiah Manning property. A number of boys living in that vicinity have constructed a railway that may one of this days be a great factor. It is now about 200 feet long and is well constructed with ties and iron rails.

The two cars now in use are substantially built and will carry a considerable load. Regular car wheels are used for the cars, which are about four feet long and two feet wide. They are provided with the proper brakes and mechanical appliances. In connection with the establishment of this road a log cabin has been erected as a waiting station for passengers.

The power to operate the cars on this road is obtained from a grade and the young men have displayed a bit of ingenuity in constructing the road so that the car will make the trip over the entire distance and return to its starting point simply through the aid of momentum. At some points a considerable speed is obtained and the ride is certainly a very pleasant one.

A company has been formed and the officers are President, Old Fountain; vice-president, Clarence Hoag; treasurer, Mr. Briggs. These officers will direct the management of the road and will see that the stock is not watered too often. There is quite a demand for stock, however, but at present there is none for sale.

SEEING EUROPE.

Isaac Squier Having a Fine Time Seeing the Sights on the Continent.

Mrs. Hannah Squier, of Grove street, has just received a letter under date of Aug. 29th, from her son, Isaac Squier, who is in England working for the Campbell Printing Press Company. Mr. Squier is in excellent health and enjoying his first visit to his English cousins. He states in his letter that he is about to leave London for Milan, Italy. He will go from London to Dover by train, from the latter place to Calais, France, by boat, and will then pass through a number of other important places. The trip will take him through Switzerland over the Alps. From Milan Mr. Squier expects to go to Paris and will no doubt reach Naples, where he will see Mt. Vesuvius. After that he expects to visit Madrid, Spain. The entire trip will cover about three months of time. Mr. Squier has enjoyed himself very much and is greatly interested in the countries he is visiting. The weather has been agreeable until the time of writing, when he says it was very hot. He has no definite plans as to when he will return.

Harry Gobel—will also aid in preparing for the annual meeting, which will be held at Camden Sept. 27th and 28th.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS.

To Meet in Convention at Roselle Next Month.

The annual convention of the Union County Sunday-school Association will be held Thursday, October 12th, at the First Presbyterian church on Chestnut street, at Roselle.

The convention this year promises to be more interesting than any yet held by the association. New Jersey is the banner State of the Union in Sunday-school work, and Union county the banner county in the work. There will be morning, afternoon and evening meetings. The evening meeting will be made particularly interesting on account of the many who can attend that session who could not attend the meetings held in the daytime. The men folks are particularly invited to this meeting. There will be good speakers and entertaining music.

Elaborate preparations are now being made for the programme of the day. The ladies of the Presbyterian church will entertain all visitors with luncheon and supper, which will be served at the church.

REORGANIZING THE NAVAL RESERVES.

Eighty Men and Several Officers to be Dismissed.

GOVERNOR KEPT HANDS OFF

A NEW SURGEON TO BE NAMED IN PLACE OF DR. SIMPSON.

Under the New Condition of Affairs the Third Division is to be Practically Disbanded—Plans Making for the Participation of the Reserves in the Welcome Home to Dewey When He Arrives.

Despite the efforts made by the officers of the Naval Reserves, aided by prominent men in counties, to induce the Governor to amend the order providing for the reorganization of the Battalion of the East, it has now been definitely learned that Governor Voorhees has declined to interfere. Commander Irving, acting under instructions from Brigadier-General Wanser, has begun the work of consolidating the three divisions of the battalion into two divisions.

Under the new condition of affairs the third, or engineers' division, is to be practically disbanded. About fifty per cent. of the Third Division, however, will be retained by Commander Irving and divided up among the first and second divisions, a sufficient number of the men in those divisions being discharged in order to make room for them. This will be done by Commander Irving so that the efficiency of the battalion may not be altogether destroyed.

Because of of the lopping off of one of the divisions, eighty men and several officers will have to be dismissed. Lieutenant Thomas Goldingay and the other officers of the Newark division will not be disturbed, neither will the officers of the first division. Lieutenant H. Franklin Hart, Jr, commander of the third division, will be appointed navigator of the battalion, to succeed Lieutenant Peters, who resigned when the Reserves returned from the Spanish-American War. Ensign Kemble, of the third division, will be promoted to a junior lieutenancy, and will succeed Lieutenant Farnham Yardley, who has been the battalion adjutant since the Batalion of the East was organized. Lieutenant Anderson, at present in Mexico on a six months' leave of absence, will also be retired, as will Ensign Sedore.

Dr. Simpson, of Plainfield, surgeon of the battalion, is at present in the Philippines, and his resignation is now in the hands of Commander Irving. A prominent Newark physician has been offered the position, and will probably accept.

Although no definite action has as yet been taken, there is a possibility that the old sloop of war Portsmouth, the present headquarters of the Battalion of the East, may take an active part in the Dewey demonstration. It has been suggested that the old ship be towed from her present berth in Hoboken and anchored in the river, opposite Grant's tomb, during the festivities attending the celebration in honor of Admiral Dewey, where she will serve the double purpose of acting as a sort of stakeboat and also be exhibited as a relic of the style of war vessels of days gone by.

If it be decided to carry out this plan, the Reserves will man the old ship during the river parade, and the following day will be taken ashore in a tugboat to participate in the land parade.

$1,000,000 CAPITAL.

Company Organized to Make Telephone Devices Patented By L. B. Clark.

The International Telephone and Telegraph Manufacturing Company filed articles of incorporation Friday afternoon with the clerk of Union county. The company is capitalized at $1,000,000. The incorporators are L. B. Grant, of 164 Clinton street, Brooklyn; Thomas S. White, 113 West Ninety-third street, New York city and James C. Pope, of Plainfield. The company will manufacture telephone switchboards and exchanges, and also construct or operate telephone and telegraph lines. The company's New Jersey office is at 110 East Front street, Plainfield.

So far the company has made no plans. The company controls special patents of L. B. Clark for a switchboard, and will in time erect a factory for the manufacture of them.

Completing the Stone Roads.

The Board of Freeholders of Middlesex county are proceeding steadily with the work of building missing links in the stone road systems so as to make them all uninterrupted highways across the county. At the recent meeting of the Board it was decided to advertise for bids for three macadam roads. The roads to be built are from New Brunswick to Old Bridge, connecting there with the stone roads built from Old Bridge to the Monmouth county line; from Black Horse Tavern to Cranbury Village, and from Dunellen to Bound Brook.

TROLLEY CARS MAY RUN PAST SCHOOL HOUSES

Board of Education Gave Its Consent Monday Night.

AVENUE MAY BE WIDENED.

RUNNING OF CARS WILL NOT INTERFERE WITH SCHOLARS.

The Vote in Favor of Giving Consent Was Unanimous, Although Dr. Probasco Explained That He Expected That the Street Would be Widened —The Matter Discussed Thoroughly.

The principal business transacted at last night's regular meeting of the Board of Education had to do with the proposed extension of the Plainfield Street Railway through Arlington avenue. All members of the Board present at the meeting were Messrs. Probasco, Lounsbury, Abbott and Richards. After the Board had passed upon a number of bills, Secretary Lounsbury read a communication from the trolley company asking for the Board's consent to allow the road to pass the school property between Fourth and Fifth streets.

This immediately brought about a discussion. The Hon. Roger F. Murray and H. C. Runyon were present and spoke in favor of the Board's granting the consent asked for.

Mr. Runyon said that he understood that one of the conditions upon which the Common Council was to grant the franchise was that the avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets was to be widened, even if it was necessary to have the land condemned to do so. He said the railroad company had already secured the consents of the owners of more than half of the property.

Mr. Lounsbury was strongly in favor of the Board giving the consent asked for as he considered it would be an improvement to the school property. The opinion of the corporation counsel, he said, was to the effect that the members of the Board had a right to sign the consent.

Dr. Probasco said he vigorously opposed giving the consent of the Board to having the cars run past the school on Arlington avenue unless the Board could first obtain some assurance that the street was to be widened. In its present narrow condition he considered it would be a menace to the lives of the children and besides he was of the opinion that the noise was detrimental to the interests of the school. He asked Superintendent Maxson if he considered that the noise of the trolley disturbed the exercises of the school. The Superintendent said he did not think it did to any great extent.

Mr. Lounsbury said it had been the intention of the Board to erect an iron fence in place of the high board fence at present in front of the Franklin School on the Arlington avenue side of the school building, and he thought that if that was done it would in a measure remove the element of danger, if any existed.

Mr. Abbott expressed the opinion that the Board should give its consent to have the trolley pass through the avenue, as he considered it for the best interests of the city.

Superintendent Maxson, when asked his opinion about the matter, said he failed to see where there could be any particular objection.

At this point in the discussion the question as to the width of the street was again raised. Mr. Runyon was asked to call up the Common Council, which was in session, and ask if it was the intention of the Common Council to have Arlington avenue, between Fourth and Fifth streets, widened in the event of the Board's granting the franchise to the trolley company to construct the road through that avenue.

Street Commissioner Gavett, who answered the 'phone, said that the width of the avenue was at least 22 feet and possibly 23 feet. He also said that the Common Council had caused to be inserted a clause in the franchise asked for by the trolley company that compelled the company to lower the speed of its cars when passing the school property.

While this information was being elicited from Mr. Gavett over the telephone, Messrs. Richards and Abbott, accompanied by Prof. Maxson and Mr. Murray and Mr. Runyon went out and measured Arlington avenue at the corner of Fifth street. They found it to be a trifle over 22 feet in width.

When they returned, Dr. Probasco asked as to the width of a car. Mr. Runyon told him that a car was six feet and seven inches in width, which would leave a trifle over fifteen feet, or about seven and a half feet on either side of the track.

Mr. Lounsbury suggested that the curbing in front of the school property might be set back a few inches, which the railroad would be perfectly willing to pay for.

The discussion was finally brought to a close by Mr. Lounsbury moving that the board give the consent asked for. All the members voted in the affirmative except Dr. Probasco, who said that he did not think he could conscientiously vote to give the board's consent unless the street was to be widened.

The board then went into executive session.

VINDICATION FOR DRAKE.

The Lincoln Mayor Cleared of the Accusations Made Against Him by a Labor Union Delegate.

At a recent meeting of the Essex Trades' Council, of Newark, the question of establishing a home for aged laboring men at Lincoln was brought up chiefly for the purpose of clearing Silas D. Drake from the imputations made against his character at the recent convention of the Federation of Labor and Trades' Unions of New Jersey, at which time it was stated that Mr. Drake was a "land-shark." Delegate Cory made a report concerning his trip to Lincoln. He was satisfied that Mr. Drake was unwarrantably impugned. The result of the meeting was in the nature of a vindication for Mr. Drake, although the discussion was of the most animated sort.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

Bruce Mortimer Chilton Was Handling a Loaded Revolver—Bullet Went Through His Hand.

The only casualty that marked the strike of the Italians working on the trolley line at Cranford Monday was the accidental shooting of Bruce Mortimer Chilton, of Putnam avenue. Chilton is in the employ of his brother-in-law, Lemuel W. Serrell, the contractor. He was at the scene of the trouble when one of the foremen named C. Harris asked him for a pistol, saying that he could keep the men at work if he had one. Chilton borrowed one at a neighboring hotel and gave it to Harris.

The revolver was not used and was returned to Shilton during the morning. With it were two cartridges. It was of 44 calibre. Chilton was examining it when, without warning, the revolver fired and the bullet passed through Chilton's left hand.

He was taken at once to Dr. Allen at Cranford, who dressed the wound and found it necessary to take several stitches to close the opening. A hole was blown right through the hand. Chilton then returned to his home in this city where he is now under the care of Dr. Zoglio. The wound is a very painful one and will keep Chilton away from work for a time.

BOSS CARPENTER GONE.

It Is Said That He Collected $600 Intended to Pay Men Working Under Him.

Several artisans, who have recently been employed on a house in course of erection at the west end of the city, are particular anxious as to the whereabouts of James P. Dawe, the boss carpenter, whose absence from the city has given rise to considerable talk. Dawe is said to have received $600 on account to pay the masons, carpenters, painters, etc., but up to the time of going to press he had not paid them. Dawe was last seen in Plainfield Friday.

UNABLE TO GET CABLE.

Work of Placing Electric Wires Underground is Temporarily Stopped.

Owing to difficulty in securing cable the Plainfield Electric Light Company is obliged to temporarily stop the work of placing their wires underground. This same difficulty is experienced by the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company and they have been obliged to stop their work. The latter company has about completed its work in the centre of the city, but when able to secure more cable they will continue the work in North Plainfield when the proper ordinance giving such rights is adopted.

Entetained the Governor.

Governor Voorhees has been the guest of President of the Senate Charles A. Reed and family, at Belmar, for a short time. The Senator and his wife are delightful entertainers and the Governor could not help but feel the cordiality so pleasantly extended by the host and hostess.

A MONSTER RESERVOIR.

Wyoming Plans a Gigantic Scheme for Irrigation.

A GREAT ARTIFICIAL LAKE

Plans to Make the Arid Plains Blossom as the Rose With Fertility.

Hopes of Securing National Legislation to Help in the Enterprise—Senators and Representatives Will be Called Upon to Urge the Scheme in Congress.

Think of an artificial lake of water high up on the crest of the continent, 7,200 feet above the flight of seagulls, where 19 to be used for irrigation purposes during the dry months 40,817,405,000 cubic feet of water—a lake ten miles in length, three miles in width, 250 feet in maximum depth, 90 feet in mean depth, and covering 13,651 acres of land with water deep enough to float an ocean steamer—a deep, wide and long enough to irrigate 450,000 acres of desert land and thus make homes of plenty, where 2,812 farmers may each dwell upon 100 acres of perpetually watered land and never give a single thought to rain. This is the big reservoir that the people of the West propose to build on the Laramie plains in Wyoming.

It is said to be the greatest irrigation project ever evolved, and the arid West is united upon it. Western Senators and Representatives have been advised by their constituents to assemble at the next Congress fortified with enough reasons to convince the Government that it is its duty to render substantial aid to the enterprise. The West will do its part in the way of State appropriations and private subscriptions.

In the building of this gigantic reservoir it is proposed to divert the surplus waters of the Big and Little Laramie rivers, and store them away in a natural depression known as the Big Hollow, the northeast end of which is five miles west of Laramie City. The depression lies between the Big and Little Laramie rivers in the Laramie plains. The surrounding land slopes away from the rim of the basin in all directions, thus making it an admirable place in which to store water for irrigation purposes. The basin itself has been formed by erosion and has no outlet. Nature has walled it around with rocks and no leak has been found large enough to interfere with the storing of such an amount of water.

In the flood season when these mountain streams are debouching their mad waters upon the plains, thus dealing disaster to the hopes of the farmers and ranchmen, it is the intention to divert their entire surplus flow into the big basin and there confine it until the need arises. The ditch to supply the reservoir with the waters of the Big Laramie River will be nearly twenty miles in length, but through an easy country for its construction. The ditch from the Little Laramie will be much shorter.

In the dry season it is proposed to draw the water from the reservoir through a tunnel at the northeast end of the basin and discharge it again into the Big Laramie below the short distance below Laramie City, thus keeping the river well filled with water during a season which has been usually low and dry. The object of it is to be five miles long from the reservoir to the river. In its construction it will be necessary to construct three-quarters of a mile through solid rock. In driving this tunnel will be found the burden of expense in carrying out the project.

The Big Laramie flows into the North Platte River, and the waters thus turned into it would serve for irrigation not only in eastern Wyoming, but also into the western part of Nebraska.

While the reservoir at Laramie is the largest, it is by no means the only one that the West proposes to build. It is the purpose of the West to make the Laramie reservoir a trial proposition at Washington, and should national legislation follow, which is in favor then will the Government be told that it has 1,300,000 square miles of land that might be similarly reclaimed and subdued.

The West at present has a number of great reservoirs either completed or in view for immediate completion. The following are among the most important sites:

Laramie site, capacity 400,000 acre feet.

Sweetwater site, Wyoming, capacity 328,965 acre feet.

Piney Creek system (consisting of three sites, Cloud Peak, Piney and Lake De Smet), capacity 80,000 acre feet.

South Platte site, Colorado, capacity 41,220 acre feet.

Log and Hay, Colorado (storing waters from Big Thompson and Cache la Poudre rivers), capacity 45,741 acre feet.

The function of reservoirs is primarily industrial, but great stress is laid upon the argument that the reservoir will be a powerful amelioration of flood conditions. Many of the greater reservoir sites are along the headwaters of the Missouri River and its tributaries, and it is claimed that when these reservoirs are constructed they will hold the surplus water in times of annual floods and freshets and thus prevent flood devastations along the lower waters of the Mississippi River.

Rats at War.

"A white rat," said a man recently who is supposed to know, "is the mortal enemy of the common or brown rat. If three white rats are placed in a dwelling infested with the rodents they will drive the latter away within a week. A white rat will fight a brown rat and kill it almost as quickly as a ferret. In fact, I think white rats belong to the ferret family."—Baltimore (Md.) Herald.

BRAIN WITH TWO OWNERS.

John Sterning at Twenty-Four Forgot His Past Completely.

HAD THE MIND OF A BABE

Then Was Educated From A B C to Riper Knowledge and Fell in Love With Former Sweetheart.

Finally Mind Number Two Ceased to Be Active and He Awoke to Memories and Life Exactly Where Mind Number One Had Previously Left Him.

Recently John Sterning, Jr., of New York, was found almost asphyxiated in his room.

The next day intelligence gradually left him. Eight days afterward he was taken to an asylum. The morning following he was quiet and sane. But mentally he was not John Sterning, Jr.

An attendant entered and addressed him. The young man looked perplexed. He had actually forgotten speech and the meaning of words.

His parents came to see him. The proffered caress of his mother was met coldly, and he took refuge behind a chair.

Miss Freda Nelson, to whom Sterning was engaged, was sent to him. It was hoped that the sight of his sweetheart would bring him to his senses. He looked at her inquiringly.

"Don't you remember me?" Miss Nelson cried. Sterning understood her words no more than a baby could have done.

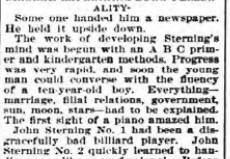

DIAGRAM EXPLAINING DUAL PERSONALITY.

Some one handed him a newspaper. He held it upside down.

The work of developing Sterning's mind was begun with an A B C primer and kindergarten methods. Progress was very rapid, and soon the young man could converse with the fluency of a ten-year-old boy. Everything—marriage, filial relations, government, sun, moon, stars—had to be explained. The sight of a piano amazed him.

John Sterning No. 1 had been a disgracefully bad billiard player. John Sterning No. 2 quickly learned to handle a cue like a professional. Before his mental mix-up he disliked mechanics. Now he had the muscle sense of an artist. He sang and played the piano finely.

Under his sweetheart's tuition he had become a devout Christian. The new Sterning was an atheist.

Now comes a curious feature. Although he did not recognize Miss Nelson, his fiancee, yet, after her frequent visits to him in the asylum, he learned to love her again.

There was no reason why he should be confined, so he was given his liberty.

"It's strange," he said, three months later, "half my head feels numb and pricking just like a foot asleep."

Drowsy and sensible of pain, and finally he had to be carried to bed. He refused to eat anything. About 11 o'clock he awoke. His father was in the room.

"Hello, father," he said. "What are you doing here? What time is it?"

"Eleven o'clock."

"Guess your watch is slow," said Sterning. "It was after 12 when I came home." Then he glanced around the room.

"What's the matter? The whole room's changed. This isn't my room, and this isn't my paper. I went to bed in one room after midnight and wake up in another room an hour before I went to bed. How did it happen?"

He looked at his father's breast. He trembled as he put the question:

"What date is this?"

"This it's the twentieth," was the doubting answer.

"Twentieth of what?" The old man could scarcely contain himself.

"November, of course," exclaimed the young man impatiently.

"What did you do last night?"

"Called on Miss Nelson, supper at the club and came home. But what's the matter?"

The matter,of course, was that the original John Sterning had come to life again, while the second John Sterning was as dead as the first had recently been.

Dr. Dana gives the following explanation of the dual consciousness. (See illustration.): "The eye, seeing an object A, sends a thrill along a nerve to the centre of vision. There the image is recorded in a brain cell. See that object again and a thrill is sent to the same cell, awakening memory (C'C' C''), interrupt that thrill and the brain can remember nothing. It can form new ideas and impressions, however, and so form a new mentality is thereby formed."

Crow That Fathers Motherless Chicks.

William Parsons of East Union, N. Y., has a crow that is a record-breaker as a chicken raiser. The crow was tamed by Parsons's boys, and when a hen with eight chicks deserted her brood, the crow, who was wandering about the yard, took charge of them. He mothered them with the keepers and when he found a worm or choice tidbit would summon them with a peculiar call they soon learned to answer.

A dwelling infested with the rodents on the brook, but instead of flying for shelter, like an old hen, the crow gave battle with beak and talons, vanquishing his opponent. The entire eight chickens have been raised by the crow and a few days ago he was discovered sitting on a hen's nest that he had found in the grass, so he may soon have a family of his own.

A man named Nottabittiwiski is the owner of a ranch in Kansas, but there are stories to the effect that he does not live up to his name.

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthropist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked:

"Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what I was once demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $2 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." At the time of this interview there were present two druggists who specially objected to their mother giving testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued: "There may be others who will take them, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was. If the selling about the case in the papers induces some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I can see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES packed in a paper carton, without glass is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. The regular bottle of FIVE GROSS, 72 TABULES, for which the retail price is SIXTY cents, can be had for eight cents by the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. Any druggist who will not supply you with RIPANS TABULES may also be led of some druggist who will. Ten will be sent for five cents, but the larger quantity is cheaper.

ALFRED SPEER,
THE ORIGINAL
Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had.

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

PROGRAMME FOR THE STATE ENDEAVORERS.

The Convention Will Be Held at Camden This Year.

GOOD ADDRESSES PROMISED

REV. J. W. RICHARDSON WILL PRESIDE AT ONE OF THE SESSIONS.

Convention Will Meet in the Broadway Methodist Church—Juniors Will Have Special Attention Shown Them —Delegates Will Be Entertained in Pleasant Homes of Convention City.

The great Christian Endeavor event of the year for the young people of New Jersey will take place next week. The host of workers that meet yearly in the annual State Christian Endeavor convention will this year be entertained in Camden, and a good time is assured for all who go. The services will be held in the large Broadway Methodist church, and the programme includes many interesting and helpful features.

The delegates will gather Tuesday, September 26th, and that evening there will be preparatory meetings under the charge of the local committee.

Wednesday morning the convention proper will open. The first session will begin at 9 o'clock, and will be devoted to addresses of welcome, business and reports from the various departments, with the exception of the first half hour, which will be used for a convention prayer meeting.

The afternoon will hold a variety of pleasant things. The session at 1:45, at which Rev. John Wilbur Richardson, of this city, one of the vice-presidents of the State Union, will preside, will include the annual address of the president, Rev. Cornelius Brett, D. D., of Jersey City, and a "quiet hour," conducted by Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, rector of Trinity church, Philadelphia. This session will be adjourned at 3 o'clock, when the delegates will scatter to attend the various conferences, covering all departments of Christian Endeavor work, to be held in different places. At the conference held by the State secretary, Miss Ida B. Stephens, of Hackettstown, for the corresponding secretaries, the general secretary of the United Society, the much-loved John Willis Baer, will deliver an address. These conferences will be followed at 4:30 o'clock by denominational rallies, led by prominent members of the various denominations.

By this time the delegates will feel that the day has been crowded with good things; but the crowning meeting of the day is still to come. The evening session will be an unusually interesting and profitable one, with two fine addresses, one by Mr. Baer and one by Rev. Kerr Boyce Tupper, of the First Baptist church of Philadelphia.

In spite of a busy day on Wednesday, the New Jersey delegates will, as usual, be ready to attend the sunrise prayer meeting to be held at the Calvary Presbyterian church at 6:30 Thursday morning, in goodly numbers. An interval for breakfast, then they will reassemble for the memorial hour to be held in loving memory of the late Rev. J. Clement French, D.D., of Newark, for three years president of the State Union. This will be followed by an open parliament session, in which several interesting and practical subjects will be freely discussed.

The Juniors will have their especial treat on the afternoon of Thursday. The older delegates will form in procession and escort the Juniors to the convention church, where a delightful programme, with an address by Rev. C. H. Tyndall, Ph. D., of Mt. Vernon, N. Y., will be presented for their entertainment.

The farewell service, dear to all attendants upon Christian Endeavor conventions, will be held Thursday night. After election of officers, the presenting of resolutions, and the awarding of banners, the convention sermon will be preached by that well-known and inspiring speaker, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D., of New York, and the closing consecration service will be conducted by Rev. L. B. Dyott, of Newark.

The delegates will be entertained in the many pleasant homes of the city and every effort will be made to make their stay an enjoyable one. The expense of attending the convention will be very slight, amounting in all, including railway fare and board, to not more than six or at the utmost seven dollars. All Endeavorers from Plainfield and vicinity who wish to go should communicate with E. E. Anthony, of 444 West Front street, who is in charge of the arrangements for the transportation of the delegation from this section.

SEEK PRIZE MONEY.

Lieut. Braddock, of the Resolute, Applies to Gov. Voorhees in Behalf of Naval Reserves.

Lieut. Braddock, of Haddonfield, representing the New Jersey Naval Reserves, who were on the Resolute during the Spanish-American war, called on Gov. Voorhees Tuesday to enlist the Governor's services in behalf of the reserves in a claim they are making for prize money.

Lieut. Braddock claims the Resolute was within a half-mile of the battle, ship Indiana, and in direct firing line of the Spanish ships as they emerged from Santiago Harbor. Spanish shells, he says, flew all about the Resolute, and when the actual fighting was over the Resolute took 490 seamen prisoners off the Cristobal Colon.

Gov. Voorhees will investigate before making any formal claim at Washington.

Gov. Voorhees will go to Washington today to secure a settlement of a claim of about $80,000, which is due the State for advances made in equipping the New Jersey troops for the war.

VERY NEAR TO DEATH.

Charles B. Brown in a Trolley Car That Jumped the Track and Went Down an Embankment.

The Jersey City Journal tells of the following narrow escape from death that Charles B. Brown, formerly of this city, recently experienced:

"General Secretary Chas. B. Brown, after an absence of one month's vacation, has returned to his duties. Mr. Brown visited many of the large western associations, traveling altogether over 4,000 miles and delivering several addresses. While near St. Louis Secretary Brown met with a thrilling experience that might have cost him his life. He was a passenger on a trolley car that jumped the track while going at full speed and started down an embankment. The car, however, was thrown into a side ditch and held there until the passengers escaped. The accident occurred in the evening and in a dangerous place. The passengers were severely shaken and one or two badly injured. Had the car gone down the embankment all the passengers would undoubtedly have been killed. Mr. Brown is being congratulated on his escape, which was almost miraculous."

NEW BRUNSWICK'S THEATRE.

Mr. Edwards States That the Project is Progressing Very Encouragingly.

Maze Edwards, at present manager of the Plainfield Theatre, who is endeavoring to interest local capitalists in the project of a theatre for New Brunswick, of which Mr. Edwards will become the lessee or manager, whichever is most practicable, was in New Brunswick again today.

He visited a number of people, and when seen by a representative of The Times declared that he was much encouraged at the turn affairs were taking. He is confident that he will succeed, and that before next season New Brunswick will have a modern playhouse.

Mr. Edwards said that matters were not yet sufficiently advanced to warrant him in making public the names of the gentlemen with whom he is treating, but that there is every reason to believe that he will carry the enterprise to a successful conclusion. —New Brunswick Times.

JERSEY'S GIFT TO SAMPSON.

Sword to be Presented to Admiral October 25th at Trenton.

Trenton, Sept. 20.—The committee of citizens of New Jersey which has in hand the matter of the presentation of a handsome sword to Admiral Sampson is sorely disappointed because he will be unable to receive it in time to wear it at the reception to Admiral Dewey. A letter was received from Admiral Sampson saying that his engagements would render it impossible for him to be at this place to receive the sword before October 25th, but that he would be pleased to visit this city on that date for the presentation.

Governor Voorhees will, on behalf of the citizens of New Jersey, present the sword on that day in the State House here.

Trusted Employe a Thief.

John Trumbert, a laborer, of Springfield, was brought to the county jail Saturday on a commitment signed by Judge Ira J. Hall, to be held for the Grand Jury for the larceny of $70 from his employer, Michael Wolf, of that place. Trumbert was entrusted with the money to convey it to a friend of Mr. Wolf's and decamped.

Robert Turrill, of Grove street, leaves Saturday for a trip to the Adirondacks and Canada for his health.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clark, Jr., of Jackson avenue, are entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Morton, of Newark.

GREAT PLANS FOR TROLLEY EXPANSION.

Plainfield and Metuchen to Soon Be Connected.

BOTH ROADS CONSIDER IT.

EXTENSION OF BRUNSWICK LINES TO PERTH AMBOY.

That is Present Aim of Hadel's Company—Has an Eye on Line to South Amboy, Red Bank and the Jersey Shore—Would Open Up a Big Traffic From New Brunswick, Bound Brook, Etc.

The possibilities of the progress and enlargement of the trolley lines in this state during the coming decade are so wide that it is useless to enlarge on the subject. The probable happenings in the electric street railroad systems during the next year or two are of immediate interest to every Plainfielder, however. Nobody doubts but these lines will be rapidly extended and that the work of the past year will be pushed forward with great results.

At the Common Council meeting, Monday evening, when Councilman E. T. Barrows was speaking of the Arlington avenue extension, he made a remark, simple in itself but one which opened up a new line of thought and suggested much for the future. The line would be extended out Woodland avenue, he said, to the golf grounds and the cemetery and to provide for what further extensions that the company might wish to make in that direction.

Since the exchange with the Brunswick Traction Company was established at Dunellen, the Plainfield Street Railway Company has found that it has increased its business. It has discovered the fact that connection with other lines is a good thing. With the line from Elizabeth to Plainfield completed, the Riker syndicate will be looking for new worlds to conquer. There will also be a connecting line from Westfield to Rahway. Knowing ones say that it is only a question of time before the company will plan extensions from both Rahway and Plainfield in the direction of Metuchen.

The Brunswick Traction Company has already considered the advisibility of a line from Metuchen to Plainfield. It was then believed that the time for such a line had not come. But the Brunswick Traction Company is ambitious. It already has a scheme in view that will greatly enlarge its lines and take in new territory hitherto practically univaded by trolley lines. With these plans in view, a more intimate connection with Plainfield will be advisible. The knowing ones say that it is only a question of a year or two when Plainfield and Metuchen will be connected by trolley. Which of the two companies moves first in that direction remains to be seen.

But the new schemes of the Brunswick Company already referred to. That corporation is now straining every nerve to get a line from Metuchen to Perth Amboy. Connecting at Amboy with the Staten Island Rapid Transit Company, it will open up a new traffic over its lines. Then Perth Amboy is in Middlesex county, of which New Brunswick is the county seat. The communication between the two cities at present is very poor. A trolley line between them would find a ready patronage at once.

The Brunswick Company is also anxious to extend its present line running to Milltown and South River on to South Amboy, and eventually on to Red Bank. New Brunswick, Bound Brook and Somerville people find it difficult at present to reach the summer resorts on the upper Jersey coast from Seabright to Asbury Park. This proposed electric route would open up a new line of travel to the shore that these people would gladly take advantage of.

The wonderful growth of the trolley in this section during the past two years make these ideas sound by no means unreasonable or improbable.

Suit Over a Trolley Transfer.

Justice Joseph Hayter is plaintiff in the suit brought against the Brunswick Traction Company for being ejected from one of the company's cars. Mr. Hayter presented a transfer which, he claimed, was valid, but which the conductor of the second car refused to accept. Mr. Hayter alleges personal injuries and loss in self-respect and damage to his business.

Shot Supposed Mad Dog.

Dog Catcher Frisbie shot a dog Tuesday afternoon in the rear of the Trinity Reformed church on West Second street. The dog was supposed to be mad. It snapped at several passersby, but no one was bitten.

FIVE YEARS FOR KUCKLO

ATTEMPTED WIFE MURDERER RECEIVES A HEAVY SENTENCE.

Assailant of a Young Girl Sentenced to Three Years in Prison—"Cack" Carter Let Off With Thirty Days More in Jail.

Elizabeth, Sept. 20.—There was considerable business in the Court of Special Sessions this morning. It was sentence day. Judge Vail presided.

John Kuckio, of this city, who attempted to kill his wife by shooting her at their home on Clinton avenue and then attempted to kill himself several weeks ago, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to five years in State Prison at Trenton. Mrs. Kuckio has entirely recovered from her injuries and Kuckio is also in a fair way to recovery, although he was quite ill when taken to the Elizabeth jail.

Fred Knock, charged with assaulting a young girl at Mountainside, a small settlement near Westfield, also pleaded guilty to the charge of assault and was sentenced to State Prison for three years.

Walter, alias "Cack" Carter, who was charged with burglarizing the home of his stepfather in this city, also pleaded guilty and was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail. This is considered a light sentence. "Cack" told the police that he expected at least a year and possibly two years.

Clara Kenney, charged with stealing a quantity of clothing from the residence of a family on Raymond avenue, this city, was sentenced to the county jail for sixty days.

STRANGE REQUEST IN COURT.

Man Afraid He May Become Violently Insane Wants an Examination.

Elizabeth, Sept. 20.—Frederick E. Krause, formerly a saloonkeeper of this place, appeared in the police court yesterday, and made a strange request. He asked that he be committed to the county jail, and that a medical examination be ordered. His request was granted.

He said he was afraid that his mind was giving way, and that he did not want to be in a position to do anybody injury if he suddenly should become violently insane.

Jr. O. U. A. M. Name May Not Be Changed.

The name of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics will not be changed. At the National Council held in Minneapolis last spring, a resolution was passed changing the name to the "United Americans," subject to the approval of the State Councils. Word was received here from the National officers that the new name is that of an organization formed in Philadelphia five years ago and that its officers had notified National Jr. O. U. A. M. officers that the theft of the name would be fought in court. The formel warning will be presented at the meeting to be held at Scranton, and it is expected that will end the matter.

Car of Tanbark Makes Trouble.

A car loaded with tanbark caused the Pennsylvania Railroad lots of trouble Tuesday afternoon. It was in the middle of a long freight. Between Stelton and New Brunswick it jumped the track and derailed enough cars to block both freight tracks and make it dangerous for passenger trains to pass except at a snail's pace. The local wrecking train from New Brunswick and the Jersey City wrecker cleared the track.

ADVICE TO GOVERNOR FROM DAVID P. HALL

Recommendations for the State Industrial School for Girls.

MANY REFORMS REQUIRED.

ALL THE SEVERER PUNISHMENTS ARE CONDEMNED.

Suggestions Made That Corporal Punishment Be Entirely Forbidden and That Solitary Confinement Be Not Allowed for a Longer Period Than Twenty Four Hours' Consecutive Time.

David P. Hall, of Madison avenue, this city, who is chairman of the Committee on Reformatories of the State Charities' Aid Association, has written Gov. Voorhees a letter in which certain important recommendations are made with reference to the management of the State Industrial School for Girls.

The recommendations are intended, the letter states, to help the incoming trustees of the school to make it a model institution of its kind, and they are founded on information obtained from similar institutions throughout the country.

In part the letter says: "Many of the inmates of the school have been sent there by parents who could not manage their children, in the hope that they would come under the influence of women who had grown wise in the work and were specialists in moral pathology.

"Judging from the evidence we herewith present, as to the methods pursued elsewhere, the active managers of the Trenton institution would seem to us to have no adequate conception of the problems involved in reformatory work, and, indeed, not to have given any serious study to the subject. They would appear to have taken no steps to discover the methods and remedies which obtain in other like institutions. The methods of punishment pursued would seem to have been dictated by something akin to a feeling of despair at their own incompetence to maintain discipline in the school.

"We have undertaken," says the letter in conclusion, "this inquiry with the sincere desire to help the incoming trustees of the Industrial School to make it a model institution. We may take the liberty of suggesting to them through you "That corporal punishment be absolutely forbidden.

"That cells be abolished.

"That no girl be deprived of the regular board for more than twenty-four hours consecutively.

"That the use of the straight-jacket be abolished.

"That the visiting physician be required to examine all abnormal and habitually refractory girls and report their condition to the trustees.

"That an effort be made to secure and record the physical history of all girls who are now in the school, and hereafter of all girls when committed there.

"That the indenturing of all girls to the private families be encouraged and facilitated as far as possible.

"That the office of managing trustee be abolished.

"That the new board of trustees fall in a body the similar institutions in Massachusetts and Rhode Island and investigate the methods which are practised there.

"That the trustees send the superintendent or one of the members to the annual meetings of the National Conference of Charities and Correction for enlightenment as to new methods and comparison with other workers.

"And that the congregate plan be abolished as soon as practicable.

"May we also venture to recommend to your Excellency that the auxiliary board be abolished and legislation be procured to authorize the appointment of a mixed board of trustees, consisting of four men and three women."

COLD WATER CANDIDATES.

The Prohibitionists have nominated their county ticket. The convention was held in Elizabeth Monday night, and was attended by sixty people, several women included. It was the largest attended county convention in a number of years.

Nominations were made as follows: Senator, Edward L. Mascett, of Westfield; county clerk, Walter M. Irving, of Cranford; sheriff, Neil McLeod, Sr., of Elizabeth; Assembly, Joel G. Vancise, of Summit; Lewis C. Long, of Elizabeth, Spencer Blake, of Cranford; coroner, Edward Hall, of Elizabeth.

A CITY WATER PLANT.

The Subject to be Discussed by the Next Meeting of the Advancement Association.

The storm of Tuesday prevented a quorum at the regular meeting of the Plainfield Advancement Association. Mayor Smalley, Secretary Martine and several other members of the association were present. It was decided to adjourn the meeting to next Tuesday evening. Before adjournment, however, there was an informal and quite thorough discussion of the municipal ownership of the water works. At next Tuesday evening's meeting of the association some action will be taken looking toward relief from this heavy burden of the taxpayer.

REMAINS SENT HOME.

Victim of Bridge Accident Was a Worthy Young Fellow.

The remains of R. Bruce MacFarland, who was mortally injured while working on a bridge on the Lehigh Valley Railroad near Bound Brook, and who died later in the hospital, were Tuesday sent to his home, Millersburg, Pa., in charge of his sister, Virginia E. Stewart, of Newark, Ohio. The interment will be at Halifax, Pa.

Mrs. Stewart and her mother, Mrs Sarah MacFarland, were visiting near Philadelphia when they were apprised of the accident to their son and brother, and Mrs. Stewart started post-haste for this city, but when she arrived here her brother was dead. In fact, through some delay, the young man was dead almost as soon as his relatives received the news that he had been injured.

The dead man was an industrious and highly-esteemed fellow among all who knew him, and the fact that he was a source of great assistance to his mother makes his unfortunate death fall doubly hard upon his relatives.

VALENTINE CASE GOES OVER.

Will Not Be Ready for the September Grand Jury.

It has been authoritatively announced that the September term of the Grand Jury of Middlesex County, now in session at New Brunswick, will not consider the case of George M. Valentine, the defaulting cashier whose peculations wrecked the Middlesex County Bank, at Perth Amboy. At the opening of court, Justice Collins, in his charge to the jury, said the receiver, Edward S. Campbell, would submit his report to that body.

Prosecutor John S. Voorhees has received a letter from Mr. Campbell, stating that he will be unable to get his report in shape before the adjournment of the Grand Jury of the September term Valentine's case, therefore, will be considered by the December term.

MAYOR ASKS ALL TO HONOR HERO DEWEY.

Fitting That Concerted Action be Taken by Citizens.

SHOW PATRIOTIC COLORS.

ASKS THAT ALL PLACES OF BUSINESS BE CLOSED FRIDAY, SEPT. 29TH.

Plainfielders Will Unite With One Accord in Paying Homage to the Great Admiral and "The Men Behind the Guns" for Their Immeasurable Services to the Nation in the Philippines.

Mayor Rockfellow yesterday issued the following proclamation.

MAYOR'S OFFICE.

Plainfield, N. J., Sept. 19, 1899.

The people of Plainfield have never been lacking in timely and appropriate manifestations of patriotic sentiment. The expected home-coming of the great Admiral kindles the enthusiasm and stirs the blood of every American who loves his country. On the days set apart for the Nation's greeting and homage to the Hero of Manila, it is fitting that such concerted action should be taken by our citizens as will leave no doubt that in admiration and gratitude for his matchless heroism, his calm dignity, self-poise and enlightened statesmanship, alike in the time of peril, in the hour of victory and whilst guarding the fruits of victory; and in our affection and honor for George C. Dewey, his officers and the "men behind the guns," for their immeasurable services to the Nation, all the citizens of Plainfield unite with one accord, and with all their might.

I, therefore, earnestly recommend that on September 28th, and 29th and 30th instant, houses and other buildings throughout the city be decorated with national flags and buntings, and that on Friday, Sept. 29th, all places of business be closed the entire day.

Geo. W. Rockfellow, Mayor.

OFFICIAL PROGRAMME.

Dewey Reception Will be a Handsome Souvenir Well Worth Preserving.

The preparation of the New York State official programme of the Dewey reception is now in progress, and orders are received from all over the country and abroad for this great popular souvenir of this National event.

George T. Parker has returned from Washington, where he has been in consultation with the navy and other officials. The indications now are that from an artistic standpoint the State programme will be equal, if not superior, to any souvenir programme of like nature ever published. The official design adopted by the committee is an illuminated cover illustrating the life of Admiral Dewey from his entrance to the Naval Academy to the battle of Manila Bay, which is lifelike and realistic.

Orders, enclosing the price, 25 cents, postal note, should be sent to George T. Parker, treasurer, 253 Broadway, New York, and they will receive prompt attention.

PLEASURE AFTER BUSINESS.

Martha Washington Council Enjoyed an Entertainment Tuesday Night.

After a short meeting last Tuesday Martha Washington Council, No. 23, Daughters of America, held a sociable and entertainment, to which a large number of the members' friends had been invited.

The programme consisted of recitations, dialogues, solos, etc. Later refreshments were served and an enjoyable evening passed.

The committee having charge of the affair consisted of Mrs. G. B. Allen, Mrs. Tillie Riker, Mrs. Sarah Page, Miss F. W. Walsh, Miss May Hughes, Miss Agnes Randolph and Messrs. G. B. Allen, F. W. Walsh and Amos Wilson. Notwithstand the stormy weather the affair was a decided success.

Vesper Service Once a Month.

The Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church choir has arranged to have vesper services the last Sunday evening in each month during the winter. The first one will be held next Sunday evening, when there will be a special musical programme rendered by what is considered the best choir the church has ever enjoyed. The members of the choir are: Frank J. Smith, director and organist; Mrs. George H. Brooks, soprano; Miss Magdelena Perry, contralto; F. H. Potter, tenor, and C. L. Lewis, basso.

Mr. Hobart Greatly Improved.

Vice President Garret A. Hobart, who has been ill at his summer home at Long Branch, has improved greatly during the last two days, and last night he said he expected to return today to Paterson. Mr. Hobart said his health had been greatly benefited by the sea air.

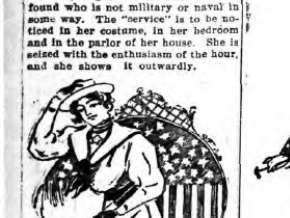
THE PATRIOTIC GIRL.

SHE NOW BEDECKS HERSELF WITH THE NATIONAL EMBLEMS.

She Is in Entire Sympathy With the Stirring Times in Her Gowns and Other Apparel—Flag Ruffles on Petticoats is a Feature of Wartime Effervescence.

Whereas there is no war, if not immediately in this land itself, yet near at hand, an it be waged, in part at least, by men they know thoroughly and have danced and flirted with, the girls of New York have taken on a martial spirit. They talk battle and campaign, fort and cruiser, torpedo boat and big guns incessantly, and so eager are they that the very fashions and fads, the knicknacks and novelties of the moment all smack of the army and navy.

Hardly a girl of "the sets" is to be found who is not military or naval in some way. The "service" is to be noticed in her costume, in her bedroom and in the parlor of her house. She is seized with the enthusiasm of the hour, and she shows it outwardly.



THE PATRIOTIC GIRL.

War enthusiasm, indeed, has taken full possession of the swell New York girl. Some of the new "war fads" in the kingdom of girldom are queer, but they all point to the same thing—a universal patriotism and an influence that has huge weight among the men of "the sets."

Since war commenced luncheon and dinner parties have been at a decided discount. Girls are refusing invitations these days at an unprecedented rate, and, spurred on by their example, men are likewise sending regrets. A young New York woman planned a dinner of twelve for one evening week before last, and before she finally decided to give up the plan wrote notes to twenty-eight men, and received twenty-eight regrets. Entertaining of a formal sort has practically stopped among the very best people.

In articles of dress or adornment the newest thing the New York girls have set their seal of approval on is the American sailor shirt waist. Naturally, because of its brilliancy of color, this shirt waist is not seen on the street (though it may be when the war excitement shall wax hotter), but it is already to be noticed in scores of homes. It is "built"—all shirt waists are "built," not "made," these days—in true nautical fashion, with a low cut, rolling, true sailor's collar, and which is, particularly, red, white and blue. It is the proper thing for every girl now to have a shirt waist of this sort in her wardrobe.

Even more curious fads of dress and decorations have sprung up. The new petticoats of girls are now ruffled with flags. The latter make dainty ruffles, and the girl that wears them lifts her skirt a trifle as she moves about. These are only for colored petticoats, of course, and the entire flag is not used indiscriminately. For a blue petticoat only the blue and white, the "field" and its stars, or, better still, the Union Jack, is ruffled. On a red petticoat the stripes of red and white are the thing; they make a most charming effect.

Out of the pocket of the jacket of the "smart" New York girl these days sticks a linen or so of red, white and blue—the patriotic pocket handkerchief. Another fashion is the wearing of a tiny silken flag on the breast, a flag not more than an inch long and half an inch wide, held in its place by a stickpin. At a fashionable dance a few nights ago every girl in the room was wearing a flag of this sort. Hardly less popular are flag stick pins, with the flag made of gayly painted metal.

Navy buttons on jackets are the very smartest thing out. Real nautical gold braid (not imitation, mind, but the genuine article) is fairly gloated over for trimming, and nothing is now thoroughly proper for belt clasps but the shining buckles of sword belts. Around the sailor hat, too, should go the cap band of some American war ship, and the more prominent the vessel the better.

These cap bands have yet other uses. They make the most timely, popular bedroom decoration the girl of to-day can possible have. Every energetic young woman who has an acquaintance in the Navy Department has been begging, borrowing and stealing these for several weeks past. To make a showing she needs fifty or more. Such a collection, to be in any way representative, will include a cap ribbon of all the chief line of battle ships and cruisers. Every famous name in the navy, as well as ship designation, should appear on these bands.

These bands are black and the names on them are gilt, all uniform in style and shape, as any one who keeps track of current naval matters knows. The "smart" girl, when she has secured enough, tacks them up on her bedroom wall with gilt headed nails. One favorite place is over the mantel, another is the centre of some side wall. It must be, at all events, where they will show out vividly, and where there will be a good light at night.

NEW FASHIONS.

Changes For Men—Light and White Costumes.

There is a prospect that the masculine wardrobe will once again rival the feminine in fancifulness of color and decoration, as it has in times past. The entering wedge may be perceived in the new materials for waistcoats. Damask, silk and velvet of decided colors are being introduced, and for evening wear metal buttons are appearing on waistcoats. In some cases the buttons match the shirt studs.

Gaiters are being abandoned by smartly dressed men.

Gowns of plush foulard in delicate but clear colors are among the prettiest of the season. Pastel blue, petunia and pinkish lilac are favorite shades. Grays are also much liked by fashionable women, and among grays may be included those tones just off white which verge on silver, pearl, ecru, beige or verdigris. Violet and green also, much attenuated in strength, afford some charming tints.

The illustration given today shows a new model for fall coats. It is of gray covert cloth and is straight at the back and in front. It is double breasted and fastens with cords and frogs. The collar, revers and upright collar are faced with blue taffeta having woven white spots, and the entire garment is lined with spotted taffeta. The sleeves are plain, with turned back cuffs faced with taffeta. The accompanying hat of blue braided felt is trimmed with a drapery of white lace, some yellow flowers and a black feather. FASHION HINTS.

Notes Upon the Phases of the Fashionable Wardrobe.

Long, clinging sleeves, extending upon the hand, are still the correct model and will remain so for some time to come. The part which covers the hand may be cut away with the sleeve or may be added in the form of a circular ruffle, tabs or frills.

Princess gowns must be perfect if they exist at all, and that is why they are always an exclusive style, for only the best of dressmakers can properly achieve one. They will continue to be worn by those women who have the figure and the purse to permit it. Only a slender, well formed woman should attempt to wear a princess gown, as no other costume so pitilessly reveals redundancy or deficiency of form.

The waterproof coat is no longer hideous. At least, it need not be, for there are now thin waterproof materials which resemble cloth and which may be made in the form of a redingote, long coat or mantle of the prevailing mode.

The poplin gown illustrated has a circular skirt trimmed with two wide bands of old guipure, rising in a point in front. The coat bodice of guipure over mauve silk has a curlew basque and opens over a plastron of tucked mauve silk. Two bands of black velvet, fastened by steel buttons, connect the fronts. The plain sleeves of poplin are embroidered at the wrists and have a full cap of lace. The hat of chenille and felt braid matches the gown in color and is trimmed with purple anemones and a black plume. JUDIC CHOLLET.

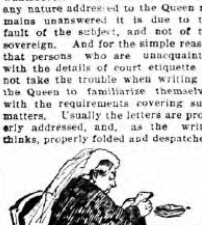
VICTORIA'S FADS.

THE BRITISH QUEEN'S GREATEST ANTIPATHY IS A FOLDED LETTER.

The Amusing Way in Which Her Mail is Handled—Duties of Her Private Secretary—The Royal Servants Must Be Comely—The Queen's Exclusive Colors.

Many thousands of Queen Victoria's subjects who have addressed private letters to Her Majesty and have never received a reply have often wondered why they have not. Since it is the right of every English subject to address a complaint or any appeal to his sovereign when he has sufficient reason for doing so, it is not surprising that some wonderment and, even bitterness, is experienced when, after a reasonable time, an earnest appeal marked "private," brings no reply whatsoever. But whenever a letter of any nature addressed to the Queen remains unanswered it is due to the fault of the subject, and not of the sovereign. And for the simple reason that persons who are unacquainted with the details of court etiquette do not take the trouble when writing to the Queen to familiarize themselves with the requirements covering such matters. Usually the letters are properly addressed, and, as the writer thinks, properly folded and despatched.



QUEEN VICTORIA.

But in folding the letter is where the fatal error is made, for the Queen never, under any circumstances, reads a folded sheet of paper. If by any chance, or through the importance of a cause, a letter is handed to Her Majesty and the sheet is folded, it is immediately thrown to the floor without even a second glance. This is not permitted to occur often, however, for the Mistress of the Robes now looks over all the Queen's letters, even after they have passed through the hands of two private secretaries before they are taken to Her Majesty's apartments.

A sheet of thick white paper of ordinary size, with envelope of same size, should be used when writing to the Queen. The color does not matter so much, but as the royal taste prefers white paper, of course it is advisable that it should be used. The Queen is particular about these small matters, and anything that she is pleased to regard as a royal prerogative must never be trifled with.

The royal mail is brought by a special courier to the palace at which Her Majesty happens to be staying at the time. It is taken first to the official secretary, who has a high-sounding title and is a member of the official household. From there that portion of it marked "private" is taken to the Queen's private secretary No. 1, and, after he has examined it carefully and has assured himself that nothing of an unpleasant nature is to reach the Queen, he turns it over to the Indian secretary, who is the favorite with Her Majesty at present. This dark-skinned attendant scans each letter separately, and when he is satisfied that all is well he delivers them into the hands of the Mistress of the Robes, who, in her turn, delivers them to the Queen, who, according to her humor, reads them personally or commands her waiting woman or the Indian secretary to do so for her.

In some things the Queen's taste is exceedingly simple and old-fashioned, in others it is ridiculous and extravagant. For instance, when the servants of the royal household are engaged, each one, after being found satisfactory to the various functionaries before whom they have to pass, is commanded to enter the presence of his august mistress and, even if he passes all the qualifications necessary to royal service and lacks that of an agreeable face and figure, in other words, if he be not good looking, he is immediately dismissed.

Then the use of the royal colors, or the particular shade of red, or scarlet, used by the royal family is denied to all others. There is not a tailor in England who would dare to put the royal red into any garment of any person other than a royalty, no matter what the inducement might be.

No one is allowed to use carriages like those used by the Queen, and no one but royalty can have more than two outriders. Members of the royal family are entitled to four, but even the Queen herself does not have more than two except on state occasions, when her eight milk-white ponies have a man at each head.

She Mends for Batchelors.

The expert professional woman mender earns quite a pretty penny by her neatness and deftness in repairing rents and replacing buttons. Bachelors profit most by this line of business, for the women who engage to keep their clothing in perfect order are far more reasonable in their charges than tailors who would perform the same office. The professional mender regularly engages her customers and never neglects them.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD

NEWS, FACTS AND FANCIES OF INTEREST TO THE FAIR SEX.

A New Pocket Idea—Women Speculators—Brilliant Mrs. Kendal—A Bright Queen—The Book Tea and Handsome Foot Gear.

It has been a mystery and a conundrum to the average man for some little time how women did without pockets, and also a wonder to the aforesaid man why women did not lose more of these flimsy creations called handkerchiefs than they do, for it was a marvel to them how the women managed handkerchiefs, pocketbooks and bundles, held up their skirts, carried oftentimes an umbrella and only had the one pair of hands for this rather complicated performance.

For some time past the women have tended to solve the problem of doing more than one thing at a time, and have utilized their pocketbooks for the purpose of carrying their handkerchiefs to the great detriment of the former and the very untidy condition of the latter

Some enterprising manufacturer has conceived the idea of a "pocketbook-handkerchiefpocketbook" (this word need not be pronounced very often, else there might be some trouble), and an article meant for this double purpose is now on the market.

It is made with the last compartment open at one end to admit of the handkerchief or the gloves or both being slipped in and not necessitate their being rolled up into a ball, bulging out the purse and wringing the handkerchief so that it is mussy looking. As the sides of the purse were apt to be torn down under the old style, women will hail the innovation with delight.

These pocketbooks come in pretty styles and can be bought at a price to suit any purse. They are shown in the shops from 50 cents to the amount of several dollars.

Women are not generally accredited with being wonderfully cool-headed or with having the power to control their curiosity. Mrs. Kendal, who was the charming Madge Robertson previous to her marriage, considered her husband her best friend and critic concerning her acting. She never reads any of the press notices until a week after the performance in question, because she is very sensitive, and if the notices were unfavorable she would be too disheartened to act; and if she had been highly praised she would feel an anxiety that the first impression must be dispelled. Her husband, Mr. Wm. Grimstone, better known as Mr. Kendal, puts the sheet is folded, it is to assists her in perfecting many a role. At the last Lydia Thompson benefit at the London Lyceum, she recited in magnificent style a touching poem. A poor woman receiving the news of her son winning the Victoria Cross. There was a crowd of well-known professionals in the theatre, but Mr. Kendall and Miss Thompson seemed to be the two actresses of the day. At the Women's International Congress in July, when the drama as an art for women were discussed, Mrs. Kendall occupied the chair and was among the principal speakers.

The quantities of hip pads that are being shown in the shops seem to indicate that there is a big demand for them. Reports also prevail that there are a great many women who are not posted on things fashionable. They are laboring under the delusion that hip pads are in fashion. The newest Parisian figure is hipless, and seems to have been especially invented for displaying to advantage the long fat full bust, but no hips, and this is the way in which it is secured: Two sets of laces are provided, one of elastic, which begins at the waist line and continues to the top, where it is left extremely loose to give a full bust effect. The elastic expands and contracts with the movement of the chest. The other lacing, of linen or silk, is put in at the bottom of the corset and extends to the waist line bringing the two parts of the corset as near together as possible. This gives a most fetching figure. As for pads, many of them are seen, all showing plainly and giving a grotesque appearance to the wearer, particularly when one or both have been pushed a bit out of place.

For several years the Queen of Roumania has given private talks on subjects of interest to young women in her palace to the daughters of Roumanian aristocrats.

These lectures have, however, recently become so popular and attractive, and the request to attend them so many and so persistent, that the Queen now lectures in the public High School for girls and has obtained the necessary official professional diploma, which is signed by the King and he Minister of Public Instructions.

But Queen Elizabeth is as deft with her fingers as she is clever with her brain. At a doll show recently held in Berlin, the leading feature was a collection of dolls exhibited "by the Queen of Roumania," every article of dress and decoration of which was made by herself. A gem of the royal handiwork was a charming reproduction in miniature of the scheme used at the Roumanian coronation, drawn by eight tiny horses, whose silver harness is a marvel of workmanship. The group is valued at $5,000, and is to be sent to the Paris Exposition in 1900.

The latest craze is the book tea. A number of guests—the sexes equally represented—are asked to afternoon tea, but each is to wear a badge denoting a book. The book is not necessarily a novel, though the run is on novels, nor is the subject of the modern book, though these are more generally selected. The Badge, which is a little toy, must express the title of the book. The game consists in guessing, comparing and wearing their own decorations, and each has to guess the titles of all the others. Some people are very clever at it, some very quick. And there is skill, too, not only in guessing the titles, but in making the orders. There are two prizes—one for the guess who guesses most, and one for the guest whose badge has been most difficult to interpret. Much tea and some wit are consumed, and men and women show themselves to be children of a larger growth.

THE AUTUMN STYLES

DESIGNS SO FAR SHOWN ARE VARIED BUT GRACEFUL.

Skirts Flare Much at the Lower Third—Models for Jackets—Box Coats—Sleeves, Princess Gowns and Shaped Collars—Latest Fashion Gossip.

The first autumn costumes to make their appearance after the tailor models in cream and white serge, to wear as long as the weather remains warm, are the light-weight cloths and woollens in numerous grades and effects. The designs shown so far are quite varied The shape of the skirts is not materially different from those of the summer but they can be made no more clinging above the hips—an effect still prominent—and the flare on the lower third of the skirt is only a little more pronounced. But the general appearance is about the same. There are still many trimmed models, but the plain ones, after the over-decorated, fussy styles of the summer, look more elegant and attractive. Rows of soutache, bias folds, and braiding on tailor costumes, and small frills on demidress gowns, so far form most of the principal decorations, and there is still great latitude in fancy braiding. Some skirts show two rows of braid around the bottom, and an elaborate design across the side of the breadths. Others have rows of braid put on in peplum style just below the hips, or there are five graduated rows on the bottom of the skirt. There is, however, a disinclination in all these styles for women neither tall nor slender, and for these cases there are new trimmings that decorate the skirt seams, are put on in several ways form belt or hip to skirt-hem, thus giving longer lines. Many elegant tailor costumes are simply stitched. Sometimes the bobbin in the shuttle is wound with a silk of some shade in decided contrast to the dress goods. For example, a navy blue gown decorated with stitchings will show the tiniest points of green or pale yellow where the shuttle thread peeps through. A great variety of models are shown in the way of jackets. The Eton in style and shape still continues popular. There are a few stout round waists among full tailor costumes, but the great majority of both French and English models show a jacket or Louis coat in some form all very graceful and smart; some double-breasted and fastened at the left side with a strap and single button; other open over removable vests, faced with velvet and bordered with a bias-stitched strap of the fabric forming the jacket.

The waist shown in the accompanying illustration is especially designed to give a graceful effect to a rather stout figure. The fronts are cut surplice fashion. The fullness being laid in narrow tucks from shoulder to bust. The pointed vest and the insertion trimming are of guipure lace over color in white. To give added breadth to the shoulders, and thus apparently reduce the size of the waist, a puff is set in the sleeve top.

An effort will be made to make popular the box coat, but few American women are ready for this model yet.

Quite an unusual model of long coats are being made to order.

Lovat mixture, beaver and felt cloth and every medium weight suit materials. Coats of Persian lamb, broadtail or sarl, with extremely high collar, and satin-faced revers covered with costly lace.

Many capes of cloth and fur are shown. These are longer than those recently worn. Flounces of guipure, point de venise, Honiton, Flemish, and where tan lace overlap flounces of fur are some of the exclusive novelties. Many of these models are cut with a long, deep shawl like angle at the back. First comes, for example, a very wide

FASHION HINTS.

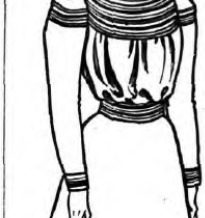
What Will Be Worn During Autumn and Winter.

Little jackets for fall wear are made of cloth, the revers being faced with the same plaid or checked silk which forms the lining of the jacket.

For children there are straight sacks, trimmed around the edge with a circular flounce.

Blouses of various kinds are still worn with different skirts. They do not, however, hang over the belt.

The half length cape, smooth around the shoulders and flaring toward the edge, retains its position in general favor.



SCHOOL DRESS.

It is sometimes draped a little across the front, fastening across the shoulder with a clasp or other ornament.

The newest traveling wrap is a half length straight sack, having around the shoulders two little circular capes. The revers and pocket flaps are like those of a man's coat.

The cut shows a school dress for a girl 11 years old. It is of brown serge and has a skirt gathered into a band at the waist. The foot of the skirt is edged with several rows of gold and brown braid. The bodice has a plain back gathered at the waist and a blouse front mounted on a yoke. The yoke is covered with lines of gold and brown braid, which are carried around to the back to simulate a yoke there also. The sleeves have lines of the braid at the top and wrist, and the collar and belt are also covered with braid. JUDIC CHOLLET.

THIN GOWNS.

Modes of Making and Ornamenting Them.

Charming decorations for thin gowns are obtained by applying muslin or batiste upon the surface, outlining the design with cord and then cutting away the goods beneath the application. Many plain foulard gowns are thus ornamented. The muslin or batiste used for the decoration may be plain, or it may have a printed floral design which is followed in the application.

With foulard a pretty effect is obtained by tucking the top of the skirt lengthwise. The tucks approach each other toward the waist and extend half way down the skirt, where their termination forms points or scallops. The fullness which is thus left free at the foot affords the desired flare at the base.

Foulard may be used for gowns of both the simplest and most elaborate character. All depends upon the color and style of cut chosen.

The dinner gown illustrated is of pink velvet covered with black chantilly. It is in the princess forms, with a very low decolletage, the lace portion appearing as a redingote, which opens over a loose, straight front of pink mousseline de soie, which continues around the front of the skirt as a flounce. The edge is adorned with applications of black chantilly. The lace redingote has a deep flounce of lace, headed by a puffing of black mousseline de soie. The sleeves are of unlined chantilly, and the decolletage is bordered by a drapery of pink mousseline de soie, a bow of black tulle being placed in front. JUDIC CHOLLET.

GLOVES AND SHOES.

THIS SHOULD BE BEGUN WITH THE FIRST TRYING ON.

To Get the Greatest Amount of Use and Beauty for the Least Money—The Proper Manner in Which to Clean Gloves—To Care for Shoes.

The care of kid gloves should begin with the first trying on, for as a new glove is put on so it will fit forevermore. The inside of each glove should be powdered, using the regular glove powder.

Then work each finger on gently, but firmly, and finally the thumb. Use a button-hook to prevent wearing out the ends of the thumb and first finger. Remove gloves by turning the lower part over the fingers and pulling them off gently; this brings them wrong side out, so turn them and smooth each finger into shape before laying them away.

Put a glove on and with a clean piece of flannel dipped into the naphtha rub every portion of it; sometimes a spot has to be rubbed more than once; then rub dry with a second piece of flannel and dust the powder over it. Finally shake well, remove from the hand, upon which the glove is kept until dry in order to retain the shape. The wooden stands sold for this purpose are very convenient when one has to clean many gloves. Keeping them in a box with a sachet of powder gives a dainty odor to the kid.

A third method of cleaning possesses the charm of not needing any rubbing, as the gloves are suspended in an air-tight preserved jar, on the bottom of which rests some lump ammonia. After exposing the gloves to these fumes for four or five days the soiled spots will be missing.

Next to her gloves a dainty woman wishes to be nicely shod and to keep her shoes in order, which is an easy task if a few minutes are devoted to this twice a week. When one's pocket-book can afford it have two pairs of street shoes and one or two pairs for the house, as experience teaches that changing them every day makes them last twice as long as when worn constantly. Besides this, gratifying is more restful for tender or tired feet than a fresh pair of shoes during the day.

If shoes creak bore tiny holes through the outer sole and fill with oil. When a shoe pinches in one spot lay a cloth dipped in very hot water over the place, renewing the heat as the water cools, and this will shape the leather to the foot. Keep shoes in a ventilated box or drawer or in a shoe bag. Have an old pair to wear rubbers over, as putting these occasional articles on and off removes the polish. Shoes must fit firmly across the instep and ankle and loosely over the ball of the foot.

An occasional rubbing with cold cream on a bit of flannel before using any prepared dressing will keep any shoe soft and flexible.

When shoes have been wet and covered with mud they will dry in a stiff, uncomfortable manner, unless rubbed at once with flannel, removing the water and mud; then rub with kerosene oil, using a clean piece of flannel, and let them partly dry, when a second rubbing with oil is given. Allow them to dry in a warm nook, and finally apply the liquid or paste dressing that gives the desired polish. If treated in this way, shoes retain their shape and firmness and never stiffen as kid and leather do when wet. All shoes should be occasionally aired by an open window.

A Kindergarten Thought.

The "Kindergarten News" says that motherhood is of two kinds, physical and spiritual; that is, the spiritual mother is the one who can do the most good. "In order to foster this element," the writer says, "you must put yourself into absolute sympathy with the children in everything they do; the expression of gratitude by favors and the sharing of their childish joys and sorrows have been but trifles in themselves, but served as chords to touch the childish heart, and the reflection seldom fails to awaken the mother element in the teacher."

An Able Woman.

The woman who can pack a picture hat in a steamer trunk in such a manner that it will look as though it does not resemble a prairie cottage after a cyclone, should be given a position where finesse and generalship are appreciated.

Caramel Girl Vindicated.

Again the intuition of woman has been vindicated. For ages the caramel maiden has been a standing butt for the humorists. Now various brilliant governments have adopted chocolate for their armies and navies for its nutritive properties.

THE HOUSEHOLD

USEFUL HINTS.

Household Notes to Be Read and Remembered.

Such dishes as beef or veal olives are attractive and palatable. Sufficient meat for them may be purchased for a single meal; in fact, this is true of all stews; but broils and roasts are not good when small. Beef olives are strips of thin round steak with a small piece of suet or bacon rolled and tied within. They are first browned in a little suet, and then stewed slowly until tender—about one hour—in a brown sauce made by adding two tablespoonfuls of flour to the fat in which they were browned. After making and a pint of hot water and a seasoning of onion, bay leaf, salt and pepper.—September Ladies' Home Journal.

One of the best "mouse scarers" is the foliage of a walnut tree. When traps are useless the above is most successful, and for those to whom such leaves are obtainable there need be no more worry about those annoying little animals. Even after the foliage has been dried it is still effectual in driving them away. On the continent, where country folks bury such vegetables as turnips, carrots ,celery etc., for winter use, a layer of the above keeps rats and mice away.

Damp cupboards and rooms can be made airy and dry by placing a basin of fresh lime where the moisture penetrates, to the detriment of food, linen, etc. The lime quickly absorbs the unwholesome humidity, and the remedy need only to be repeated every now and then. In living room, which are not to be depended upon as being as dry as could be desirable, it is advisable to place saucers containing salt under sofas, etc. This will absorb the moisture in a wonderful manner. If thoroughly dried the salt can be used again for the same purpose.

Poultry and meat on being served cold, may be improved in appearance by glazing. This process is simple. An excellent glaze may be found by dissolving a half ounce of gelatine in a pint of water, flavoring and coloring it with extract of beef. To be perfectly successful the meat must be cold before the glaze is put on, and the first coat should be allowed to dry before the second is added. The glaze must be warm and applied with a brush.

A fine seasoning for chicken salad is to slice an onion on the top of the prepared chicken and let it marinate two hours or more, adding, at the same time, a few drops of prepared chevril. Be sure that every particle of the onion is taken off the chicken before adding the dressing.

A novel way to make sandwiches is to use horseradish grated fresh, instead of mustard. Spread in a thin layer on each buttered slice, and the result will be found an appetizing surprise.

A new soda water drink may be made at home and consists of a large spoonful of ice cream with a generous supply of thick chocolate syrup poured over the top.

To give a fine flavor to corned beef hash use good stock for moistening, with a pinch of salt, sugar and cayenne.

Three tablespoonfuls of freshly-made Japan tea with a bit of nutmeg give an indispensable flavor to an apple pie.

French Cake.

One and a half cupfuls of butter, two cupfuls sugar, twelve eggs, one quart flour, half teaspoonful of baking powder, one gill each of cream, wine and brandy, twelve drops each extract bitter almonds and nutmeg, one and a half cupfuls of raisins, stoned, half cupful almonds, blanched, one cupful choped citron. Rub butter and sugar to a white, light cream; add the eggs, two at a time, beating ten minutes between the three first additions and five minutes between the rest; add the flour, sifted with the powder, raisins, almonds, citron, extracts, cream, wine and brandy. Mix into a smooth, consistent batter; bake in a thickly papered cake pan in a steady oven two hours.

English Dumplings.

One quart of flour, mixed with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a small teaspoonful of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg; then add one medium potato; grated in flour; after the butter is well mixed stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish and steam until the fruit is tender.

Irish Stew.

Time, about two hours. Two and one-half pounds of chops, eight potatoes, four turnips, four small onions, nearly a quart of water. Take some chops from loin of mutton, place them in a stewpan in alternate layers of sliced potatoes and onions; add turnips and onions cut into pieces; pour in nearly closely, let it stew gently till vegetables are reduced to a pulp; season pepper and gravy is absorbed; then place in a dish.

Macaroni a l'Italian.

Break half a pound of macaroni in pieces one inch long; cook in boiling water, slightly salted, twenty minutes. Drain and put a layer in bottom of a greased bake dish, upon this grate a little cheese and tiny bits of butter; then more macaroni, and so on, filling dish, with grated cheese on top. Wet with a little milk and salt lightly. Cover and bake half hour; brown and serve in a bake dish.

Dark gray is in demand for autumn wear, and the new shades of tan are not as deep as those that have been worn.

AS A SAILOR SAW IT

HE WAS IN THE MANILA FIGHT WITH DEWEY.

A Carpenter's Mate of the Cruiser Charleston Tells How the Victory Was Won—Enthusiasm of the Men at the Guns.

The first intimation that any of the men in the Asiatic squadron had of impending trouble came on the day after the arrival of the fleet in Hong Kong, Commodore Dewey called for a general assembly of commanders on the flagship, and that always opens the eyes of the jackies to the fact that there is something in the wind. The next day the men were all put over the side *with paint pots, and within twenty-*four hours the vessels of the fleet were in their war garb, and the sailors knew that at last they were in for serious business. The sailors were delighted at the prospect of a fight, and worked with great enthusiasm to get the ships into fighting condition.

Boats were sent ashore, bulkheads were torn out, and all superfluous woodwork was removed from the interior of the warships. Some of the men toward the last, as it became evident that we were bent on fighting, became so excited that they could hardly contain themselves. Fantastic notions resounded all day long from the forecastles of the different ships, and they were constantly checked by the officers, either. Even the apprentice boys were anxious to get a chance at the Spaniards.

On Friday night, when we had drawn near to the entrance of Manila Bay word of our destination and what we might expect to find there was circulated among the men. Lights were masked, and as the ships drew nearer to the entrance of the bay singing and loud talking were forbidden on the warships. The squadron slowed down as we neared the mouth of the harbor, and for a time the men, who of course did not know what was in the minds of the officers, thought that the fleet was going to anchor. There was consequently much speculation as to whether the Commodore was going to enter the bay or stay outside. In the hope that the Spaniards would come out and attack us. The latter theory was the one most commonly accepted by the men, as some of the sailors in the ships had been in Manila Bay in times of peace and knew how strong its natural defenses were. It made little difference to the men, however, which course the Commodore adopted, as we were not much in doubt as to the outcome of a fight.

"I am not very particular how this blooming show is managed," one little Englishman in our ship said, "so long as I get a blooming whack at one of them blooming Dons. The only way to get them beggars to stand is to get their vessels up against the side of a rock, so that they can't run away."

And it turned out that was practically what we did. We got the word from the watch officer at 3 o'clock in the morning of the fight to keep ourselves ready for a call. The dim outlines of the shore of the islands could be seen over the port bow of the ship, and although the men off watch were privileged to sleep, I for one felt more like sitting up and thinking. By 4:30 the ships were all under way, and were about ten miles of the mouth of the harbor, and men were piped to quarters. I shall never forget the magnificent spectacle the fleet presented when I first came on deck.

As the men stood in their positions in boarders and ship's divisions not a one who spoke. Every man kept his eye riveted on the harbor entrance. The suspense as we steamed slowly through the entrance to the harbor was intense.

"Will they spot us?" was the question on every one's tongue. After we had got well into the mouth of the harbor in the wake of the Olympia and the other vessels of the squadron, a single flash of flame darted from the side of the battery on our port side. The shock of the explosion which followed was so entirely unexpected that most of the men jumped. Immediately after time the forts fired upon us, but our commanders held their fire, obeying instructions from the Commodore, until the signal, "Engage the enemy" was finally made on the Olympia, and the gunners turned themselves loose. The men down in the magazines, realizing that the time was drawing necessary, broke out into sailor songs as they pulled up shells. The men at the guns fairly hugged the deck while the shields, so intense was their enthusiasm.

In about half an hour's time we had passed into the bay and were receiving the projectiles from the forts at the entrance to the harbor. It was now broad daylight, and down along the east side of the bay, darted from the city of Manila the Spanish ships could be seen strung out in single column formation.

We continued our course up the harbor, steaming to bell, the ships of the squadron proceeding in single ele. The men down in the magazines, realizing that the time was drawing necessary, broke out into sailor songs as they pulled up shells. The men at the guns fairly hugged the deck while the shields, so intense was their enthusiasm.

In about half an hour's time we had passed into the bay and were receiving the projectiles from the forts at the

As the Law Views It.

The verdict of the coroner's jury in the case of the murder of Paul Roehricht, charging the crime to Mrs. Theodore Fingerhuth, aided and abetted by her son, is the only decision that could be reached in the eyes of the law and in view of the circumstances of the tragedy. Whatever aggravation there might have been in the forcible action taken by Roehricht and those whom he employed in his efforts to oust the Fingerhuths from the house which they occupied, there was certainly no justification in taking a life in order to repel them.

There is undoubtedly much sympathy for the unfortunate woman in the terrible predicament her rash act has precipitated.

The fact that her two protectors—father and son—had been called away from home by proceedings instituted in the courts by Roehricht, and that in their absence the landlord and his employes should attempt to take forcible advantage of the woman, makes public opinion favor the woman's side to a remarkable degree. There is a tendency of the public to always respond to the side of the weaker in any sort of a contest, and the expressed sympathy of the general public for her is but natural. But there is an overbalancing of commiseration to maintain that she was justified in shooting Roehricht. The taking of a life is the most serious of fense in the criminal or moral category, and there is only one way in which it is justified—that is, in self-defense when one's own life is endangered by the willful act of another. There was no such mitigating side in this case. Roehricht and his employes had no purpose of harming Mrs. Fingerhuth physically.

From all that can be learned of the case thus far it appears that the act of killing Roehricht was not due to sudden impulse, but rather was the result of anticipation and preparation for exactly the situation that the affair finally resolved itself into. It was the culmination of deliberated action and thought in the premises, and as a result the law cannot but deal severely with the unfortunate woman.

What Fire Hydrants Cost Elsewhere.

In view of the recent publication of the cost of maintaining the city as regards the water tax, it may be interesting to readers of The Daily Press to know what other cities pay for water for fire purposes. From a table recently prepared by John W. Hill, a civil engineer of Cincinnati, O., and published in the Western Firemen, are found some interesting statistics. It gives the actual charge for fire hydrants in 27 cities where the water works are operated and owned by private corporations. The average price paid per hydrant a year is about $50. The highest price paid per year per hydrant is $100, which is at Council Bluffs, Ia. This city has a population of 30,000. The lowest price paid per hydrant per year is at Denver, Col., a city of 105,000, where $35 is paid. Sacramento, with a population of 375,000, pays $60 a year. In Denver the gravity system is used and fire engines are necessary to force water in the event of fires. In Kansas City, Mo., population 165,000, the rate is $50. But in addition to this sum the city is compelled to pay 10 cents per 1,000 gallons for water used for flushing sewers, sprinkling streets and water troughs.

Plainfield has something over 300 fire hydrants and pays at the rate of $15 a hydrant per year.

If there is a reduction in the railroad fares to be secured from the Central it would seem that the Board of Trade has at last gone at in the right manner by seeking to interest other towns along the line in the same movement. A committee made up of representative citizens and business from various towns would probably have more influence in getting the fares lowered than any efforts a single organization could bring into play.

John Sherman says that when he was in the Cabinet a prominent man applied personally to him for a consular post in China. He replied that he always wanted to appoint men who spoke the language of the country to which they were sent. "Now, you do not, I presume, speak Chinese," he concluded. "Certainly I do," answered the applicant. "Ask me something in Chinese and I'll reply."

It is made from pure grains and has that rich seal brown color and tastes like the finest grades of coffee and costs about ¼ as much. Children like it and thrive on it because it is a genuine food drink containing nothing but nourishment. Ask your grocer for Grain-O, the new food drink. 15 and 25c.

The Arlington Avenue Extension.

The unanimous action of the Common Common Council in progressing the ordinance granting the Street Railway Company a franchise on Arlington avenue, was the only thing that the members could do conscientiously in the matter. At the time the Scotch Plains franchise was granted it was explicitly understood that the trolley should next be extended on Arlington avenue, and the fact there are a few objectors to the improvement—as there always seems bound to be—would not justify the Council in holding up the extension once the legal side of the project has been complied with and safe-guarded.

The extension of the trolley service out Arlington avenue will be the final act in treating all sections of the city alike in the matter of transit facilities. The First, Second and Fourth wards all receive excellent street car service now, with the result of not only being a great convenience to the people resident there, but also in attracting others who build or rent houses, make improvements and otherwise contribute to the increasing value of those sections. This latest proposed line will invade one of the finest residential districts in Plainfield, and will undoubtedly quickly and substantially develop it the same as it is doing in the territories which now possess a trolley car service.

Hot Shot for Rev. Mr. Shott.

Rev. Mr. Shott's severe criticism of the bicycle races in Scotch Plains has stirred the Newark Advertiser to editorially remark as follows:

Rev. G. M. Shott, of Scotch Plains, whose present aim seems to be the ferreting out of as much nastiness as he can find in that burg, preached a sermon Sunday night against bicycle riding on race tracks.

The reverend gentleman says that the costumes used by cyclists in races are so shocking that respectable women turn away their heads in shame when the racers pass by.

At a road race in that town Saturday there were present among the spectators some of Mr. Shott's parishioners, which fact grieved that gentleman very much. The sermon followed.

It is safe to say that the racing costumes used by the wheelmen were no different from those worn by cyclists elsewhere. Mr. Shott's mind has evidently become so impregnated with the taint of the age that he can see nothing but indecency and immodesty in the spectacle of a bicycle race. There have been hundreds of bicycle races in the immediate vicinity that Mr. Shott and thousands have witnessed them. Mr. Shott is the first to state that they are shockingly immodest.

The wheelmen of Scotch Plains are better than Mr. Shott's diseased view of matters in general.

The Newark Evening News advances the idea that the Excise Board removed the time-limit on the saloons of Trenton in order to make the town more attractive to the members of the Legislature. The Trenton Times replies that this is a base libel on the members of the Legislature, penetrated, no doubt, for campaign purposes.

Another Republican candidate for the County Clerkship has appeared upon the scene in the person of the Hon. John A. Hicks, of Summit, who announces in the Herald that he will strive to secure the honor.

INTER-COUNTY LEAGUE.

BOWLERS OF THREE COUNTIES ORGANIZE FOR THE WINTER.

The Plainfield Catholic Club Team One of the Members—Entrance Fee $10—One Game a Week to be Rolled.

Representatives from the six teams which are to compose the new bowling league met at the Bound Brook Hotel Saturday for the purpose of electing officers and transacting other business preparatory to the opening of the league. John Watson, of the Brunswicks, was elected president; John Moran, of the Plainfield Catholic Club, secretary, and Charles Greenewald, of the Brunswick Cafe team, treasurer.

It was decided that the league be known as the Inter-County League, of New Jersey, as three counties are represented. The entrance fee will be $10 for each team. There will be a fine trophy for the winning team, also first and second prizes for high individual averages. The officers were authorized to draw up a set of rules to govern the games. The following committee was appointed to select prizes: Peter Klein, of the Raritans; VanCleve, of the Somersets, and Bert Applegate, of the Bound Brooks.

Each team will roll one game a week to begin about the middle of October and end about the middle of February. George Hughes, of the Brunswick Cafe and C. A. Shannon, of the Plainfield Catholic Club, were appointed to arrange the schedule of games. The meeting adjourned till Friday night, September 22d.

A Shillalah for the Warden.

Warden Charles Dodd, of Elizabeth, was made the recipient of an Irish shillalah Monday, which came from across the deep. It was brought to him by Thomas Hanna, of this city, who returned Saturday from a two months' visit to Ireland. The stick is of blackthorn, and has a "shamrock" embossed in green on its knob. It is highly polished, and it is greatly prized by its owner, who has had many friends in to see it.

She curled in tones to freeze:

Why have some of us no self respect? No reason why we should have.

The most complicated machine in existence—and the least effective—is man.

The most stubbornly set loses grace—there is beauty in a tree, not in a post.

Wilful sin is a plunge into the whirlpool of death—ten to one the soul does not retain its wonted breath sufficiently to regain the surface.

The voice of Abel is still crying to his brother from under ground.

The human heart and will are twins in declining single in divinity.

The unselfish soul speaks an unknown tongue—the larger part of mankind knowing only the lingo of self.

We shall be gods heavenly disinterestedly, if at all.

To love for pleasure or profit is a miscalculation.

If we are not to be generous where we owe, in heaven's name where are we to be generous?

We are sick of evil without the courage to be well.

Nevertheless, a brave man, according to the fighting weight of the man.

When we are weak, not only our compass but our ship is gone.

Some of the best talent at living will be awkward at dying.

Men are born playful—no reason except their unreason why they should not live so and die so.

Death is the welcome leap from the unit to the universal.

DRIVER NOT BLAMED FOR WOMAN'S DEATH

Mrs. Martin Fell in Front of Team of Horses.

MAC MURRAY EXONERATED.

RESULT OF THE CORONER'S INQUEST HELD YESTERDAY.

The Investigation Conducted at Springfield Yesterday—Judge Coddington and Senator Reed on Hand to Look After MacMurray's Interest—Witnesses of the Woman's Death Told Their Stories.

Springfield, Sept. 19.—The town room in the public hall here was well filled yesterday afternoon when the jury empanelled by Coroner Dr. Chas W. MacConnell, of Cranford, heard evidence relating to the death of Mrs. Cornelia A. Martin, of 198 McWhorter street, Newark, who was killed while riding her bicycle on the county road last Wednesday.

Prosecutor English, of Elizabeth, was present to present the case for the coroner and Senator Reed and ex-Judge Coddington, of Plainfield, were there to look after the interests of Charles MacMurray, ex-Clerk of Mountainside borough, whose carriage driving, it was alleged, had caused the woman's death.

Mrs. Ida E. Shipman, of 83 Arlington street, Newark, the woman who was with Mrs. Martin at the time of the accident, was the first witness called. Mrs. Shipman said she and Mrs. Martin were riding from Newark to Milburn, and when near the first of what are called the "seven bridges" they were overtaken by a heavy farm wagon. The horses were going quite rapidly, and Mrs. Martin was about fifty feet ahead of her, and when directly opposite the horses the former fell from her wheel and rolled under the wagon. Mrs. Shipman said she saw the back left wheel pass over Mrs. Martin's head, and then she, Mrs. Shipman, fell from her wheel. The witness further stated that she and Mrs. Martin were on the right hand side of the road, and that Mrs. Martin rolled from under the wagon on the left hand side. The driver, Mrs. Shipman stated, drove on and was brought back by a wheelman who came along.

Theo. Voorhis, a cigar salesman living at Orange, was called and said that he was riding on the county road Wednesday, about 11 o'clock in the morning, when he noticed a heavy wagon standing in the road and the driver talking to another man, who was in a buggy. He went a little further and saw the body of a woman. He then went back to where the heavy wagon was but the buggy had gone on. He asked Mr. MacMurray for blanket and the latter willingly gave it to him and then drove to Springfield to notify the officials of the accident. He said that the story that MacMurray had driven off, was not true and he had turned around and come back to the scene of the accident. He said that Mr. MacMurray seemed nervous and bewildered.

Gilbert Smith, of Springfield, said he arrived shortly after the accident and saw MacMurray hand a blanket to Voorhis and then drive off, as requested, for a doctor.

Charles E. MacMurray was called and after Prosecutor English warned him that anything he might say might be used against him, MacMurray said: "I was returning from Newark about 11 o'clock Wednesday and when I came down the hill I saw two women on bicycles in front of me, one on each side of the road. As they turned to the right I went to the left. As they seemed to be very careful I thought it safe to pass on that side. I passed one woman and came to the other, when the one behind called to the front one to 'be careful' and the latter seemed to dismount as she turned in front of my team. I tried to stop but could not and the yoke chain struck her and she fell between the horses. I stopped as soon as I could and turning went back. After leaving a blanket I went on to Springfield and then home. I was driving about five miles an hour." He said he never drank and was watching his horses all the time.

The jury took the case at about 5 o'clock, and after being out for one half hour came in with a verdict that Mrs. Martin's death had been caused by being run into by Charles MacMurray, who had caused the accident unintentionally.

EXCITING PACING RACE.

NED DAVIS DID FINE WORK BY WINNING THREE STRAIGHT HEATS.

The Winner Driven By Dave Smalley and Has Only Been in Training for Three Weeks—Owner, W. A. Coddington.

Those who visited the Plainfield Driving Park Saturday afternoon witnessed an exciting pacing race between Ned Davis, owned by Wm. A. Coddington, Kittie Rue, owned by N. B. Smalley, and Belle, owned by A. I. Smalley. Ned Davis was driven by Dave Smalley, while the others were handled by their owners.

At the first heat Kitty had the pole, with Belle in the centre and Ned Davis on the outside. Before going an eighth of a mile Davis passed the bunch and quickly got next the rail. It was a pretty race thereafter between Kitty Rue and Davis. At the quarter pole the horses were side and side and could easily have been covered by a blanket. But at the head of the stretch Davis shot ahead and finished the heat by fully a length in 2:24½.

In the next heat Kitty Rue broke early in the race and Belle and Davis trotted it out, the latter winning by about four lengths in 2:28.

The third and last heat was also won by "Ned Davis," "Kitty Rue" acting badly, the struggle being between "Ned Davis" and Belle." The time for this heat was 2:27.

The fact that "Ned Davis" won three straight heats was a surprise to many who witnessed the race. This horse has been in training less than three weeks, but has developed remarkable speed.

"Ned Davis" is a handsome, bright bay gelding, 15 hands high, and is considered as gentle as a kitten. He has a record of 2 31½. It is believed that "Ned Davis" could have lowered the distance Saturday, had he been pushed, in less time then 2:20. The horse certainly has a bright future.

YOUNG LIFE CUT SHORT.

JESSE L. HURLBUT, JR., COULD NOT SURVIVE TYPHOID FEVER ATTACK.

Taken Sick at Jamestown, N. Y., Where He Died—Son of Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, and Formerly Lived in This City.

Jesse L. Hurlbut, Jr., who spent his boyhood in this city, died Sunday at Jamestown, N. Y., from typhoid fever. He had nearly recovered when he suffered from a severe relapse that ended in his death.

Jesse L. Hurlbut was the youngest son of Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, who is prominent in the Sunday-school work of the M. E. church and in the Chautauqua movement. Dr. Hurlbut was pastor of the First M. E. church of this city, and then moved to Brooklyn where Jesse was born. When Dr. Hurlbut went into the Sunday-school work, they came to Plainfield and lived first on West Fifth street, near Arlington avenue, and afterwards at East Fifth street and Franklin place.

He entered the Plainfield public schools and finally reached the High School. He was a member of the class of '95, but left the school in 1893 when Dr. Hurlbut moved to New York. He then entered Berkeley School, New York, where he made a great reputation for himself as a pole-vaulter, winning many honors in the various scholastic and interscholastic meets.

Three years ago young Hurlbut entered Wesleyan College, where he was also prominent in athletics. He won the intercollegiate championship at pole-vaulting and many other victories in the same event. He was an athletic member of the New York Athletic Club.

Most of his summers were spent at Chautauqua, N. Y. This year he went there as usual and acted as one of the assistants in the gymnasium. He was taken ill with typhoid fever and went to the hospital at Jamestown. It was not considered a very serious case and no fears were entertained for his recovery. Several weeks ago he was able to go out once more. Then came the relapse. He died yesterday morning.

He leaves a father, mother, two sisters and a brother. He has a host of friends in Plainfield to whom the news of his death will be a great shock.

LIKES THE JUDGE.

Alexander San Jose Haled to Court and Released Because He Didn't Understand the Officer.

Alexander San Jose, an attendant at the Muhlenberg Hospital, says that City Judge Runyon is a very nice man. The cause of the young man's excellent opinion of the Judge, was the Judge's decision when San Jose was arraigned before him Monday a. m. charged with riding his bicycle Saturday evening without a light. He was ordered to appear by Patrolman Saunders. San Jose speaks twelve different languages, and is very highly educated. He is now learning English, but does not speak it very well as yet.

He says that the officer called to him, but he did not understand, and that finally the officer kicked him on the leg. The Judge heard San Jose's explanation that he did not exactly understand the American laws, and suspended sentence.

MUST WEAR UNIFORMS.

All Employes of the Central Railroad Must Appear in Special Uniforms When on Duty.

The new management of the Jersey Central Railroad has instituted another new rule concerning its employes. Circulars have been received by all the employes stating that they are expected hereafter to always appear in uniform while on duty. The train crews have long worn uniform, so have many of the baggagemasters, but it has not been customary for telegraph operators, switchmen and flagmen to be uniformed. The new rule includes them all, however. Those who have not uniforms will be measured at once and it will be only a short time before all will be in uniform.

LEHIGH BLOCKS THE TROLLEY IN ROSELLE

Would Not Allow Work to Proceed Near Their Switch.

FORCE OF MEN READY TO ACT

CONTRACTOR SERFELL WITHDREW HIS MEN TO AVOID TROUBLE.

What Prompted the Action of the Lehigh is a Mystery, Unless it Was in Order to Aid the Central in Regarding Progress of the Trolley—Conference Held to Try to Adjust Difficulty.

The Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company, which is building the trolley line between Elizabeth and this city, has encountered unexpected and strong opposition from the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company in completing the last link in the system through Roselle borough.

Just after leaving Cranford the route of the trolley line passes under the overhead bridge of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near the crossing with the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and a little further on it was planned also to lay the trolley tracks over a switch of the Lehigh that crosses South avenue. When the trolley franchise was granted there was not the slightest anticipation that the Lehigh would object to the crossing, but Friday when the employes of the trolley company arrived at the depot they were confronted with a switch engine and 100 Lehigh employes who had received orders to block the trolley work in crossing the switch.

On the tracks on the overhead bridge another engine and two car loads of men were also stationed ready for action in case the trolley company attempted to force matters. L. W. Serrell, the contractor, of this city, decided to avoid trouble and his men were removed to another section of the line to work.

During the day a conference between Frank Bergen, the borough counsel; Chandler Riker, the head of the trolley syndicate, and the Lehigh Valley officials, was held. The matter was not adjusted and Saturday no work was done on the trolley line in that vicinity.

In anticipation of being cut-witted the Lehigh had a large force of men quartered a short distance away. What the opposition of the Lehigh is based upon is not known, unless it is that the trolley company will be a competitor of the Jersey Central, and the Central and the Lehigh being controlled by the same interests the latter road has been forced into the fight in the hope of blocking the trolley line.

NOT QUITE PERFECT.

Bottle Designed Not to be Re-filled Was Tried by an Expert, Who Overcame the Difficulties.

A test was made Sunday of the non-refilling bottle, recently invented and patented by Charles C. Overbaugh, of this city. The test was made at a machine shop on Sycamour street, in the presence of a number of prominent citizens and some of the stockholders os the Marvel Bottle Company. The test was made by Charles Hunter, of New York, an expert in his line. A small rubber hose attached to the water faucet was used, one end of the hose being inserted into the neck of the bottle. It was said that the pressure was equal to sixty pounds to the square inch.

At the first test the bottle was filled in 12½ minutes. The second test did not require but 12 minutes. Then another bottle was secured and it was filled in exactly nine and a half minutes by a stop watch. Mr. Overbaugh, the inventor, claimed that the bottles tested were slightly defective in that the rubber balls used in the neck of the bottles was not perfectly true and that the water had been forced in where the two parts of the glass stopple came together. Another test will soon be made. Some of those who witnessed the test believe that Mr. Overbaugh's invention is a good one and that he will yet be able to demonstrate its practicability.

BOARDER WAS BURGLAR.

BOUND BROOK MAN CAME HOME TO FIND HIS HOUSE LOOTED.

Jersey City Police Notified and They Arrested the Thief, Who is Identified as an Ex-Convict and a Professional Burglar.

Over the Raritan River at Bound Brook the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company is having a bridge built by the Pencoyd Iron Company, of Philadelphia. The iron company employs about forty men, who had a difficult time to find board. Two men on Friday traversed the town for board, saying that they were bridge builders and were working at Bound Brook. They tried six or seven different places, and at last obtained board with August Palan, who has a boarding house in Second street.

Palan arrived home about 12 o'clock that night and found that the house had been looted and his new boarders gone. He at once notified Chief of Police Sebring, who sent word to Jersey City, Easton, Trenton and Philadelphia.

Sebring on Saturday night received word from Jersey City that the police there had a prisoner answering the description of one of the suspects Sebring and Palan's daughter went to Jersey City and identified the prisoner. He was given a hearing before Judge Crampton, and was recognized as Daniel Burns, who, according to the police, is a burglar and former convict. Burns' companion had made good his escape, but most of the stolen property was recovered in Burns' possession. None of the bridge builders knew him. The police of Cincinnati and St. Louis will be communicated with, as Burns had various articles which, it is believed, were lately taken from those cities. He also had a bond, which was dated Centralia, Ill., August 23, 1897.

BRIGHT GIRL DEAD.

Miss Miriam E. Sherwin Sick With Typhoid Fever Several Weeks.

After an eight weeks illness with typhoid fever, Miss Miriam E. Sherwin, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horace M. Sherwin, of 226 East Second street, died at Muhlenberg Hospital Saturday night at 11:30 o'clock. She was fifteen years six months and twenty-six days old. She was a bright girl, a general favorite with all who knew her and would have entered the Plainfield High School this fall had not illness kept her away.

She was taken to the hospital and everything possible was done to fight off the dread disease but it was of no avail. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon from the house. It was private.

DIED WHILE SINGING.

Touching Scene at the Deathbed of Young Jesse Hurlbut.

Further particulars have been learned concerning the death of Jesse L. Hurlbut, Jr., at Jamestown, N. Y., who resided in Plainfield for many years. Hurlbut had nearly recovered from his attack of the fever and, at the advice of his nurse, took a trolley ride. He caught cold and began to sink at once. He was conscious to the last and sent loving messages to all of his family and his intimate friends. He then asked his father to start one of the songs of the college fraternity to which they both belonged. He passed away while singing it.

A NEW CITY DIRECTORY.

A Special Feature Will be the New York Business Addresses of Plainfield Residents.

J. R. Wand, of New York, who issued the city directory for Plainfield last year, arrived in town Monday to commence preparations for getting out the directory this year. In his work of last year Mr. Wand had many difficulties to overcome, as it was his first season in Plainfield, but his book was a great improvement over directories Plainfield has had in former years. This year Mr. Wand promises to get out one of the best directories that can be found in any city in the metropolitan district. One particular feature that he will carry out to as near perfection as possible, will be the New York business addresses of Plainfield residents. This feature was introduced in his former book, but in the short time he had to work in, it was impossible to make it satisfactory. A good city directory is something that all Plainfielders will appreciate, and Mr. Wand should be encouraged in his enterprise.

TO URGE LOWER RAILROAD FARES.

Board of Trade to Try to Interest Other Towns.

WANT CONCERTED ACTION.

TROLLEY EXTENSION TO WASHINGTONVILLE IS DISCUSSED.

One Property Owner Who Opposes Building of Railway Through the Notch—Township Committee Would Grant Franchise—Boards of Trade and Officials in Other Towns to be Asked to Aid.

The principal business to occupy the attention of the Board of Trade at Monday's meeting was with reference to the extension of the trolley line up Somerset street to Washingtonville. A committee from the valley, consisting of Assemblyman Cooper and F. S. Wohlfert, was present. Mr. Wohlfert said that the consent of every property owner on the line had been secured except that of James Wilson, who he said was opposed to the road on the ground that he considered it detrimental to his business. Mr. Wohlfert said the citizens of Washingtonville were very anxious to have the road built and he thought if the Board would use its influence it would be of vast benefit to the city of Plainfield. He had understood that the township committee would be willing to grant the trolley company a franchise.

Mr. Wohlfert said that he had been given to understand by a number of gentleman living in New York that if the trolley line was extended they would like to come out here and reside, and would build handsome homes in the vicinity of Somerset Park.

Secretary Runyon said that he had been told by President Riker, of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, that the company would like to extend the trolley as far as the corner at Washingtonville, but that the extension could not be built this fall owing to the difficulty of procuring rails.

President Lounsbury was of the opinion that if the influence of the Board Trade was used with Mr. Wilson it might result in inducing him to approve of the road.

After the trolley question had been disposed of President Lounsbury called attention to the high rate of fares on the Central Railroad, which he maintained were detrimental to the interests of the city. He cited the differences in the fares on the Central road and the fares charged by the Illinois Central out of Chicago. From Chicago to Homewood, a small town 23 miles out, the fare, he said, was but 23 cents, while a 25-mile ride could be had for 18 cents. Mr. Lounsbury suggested that the Boards of Trade along the line of the road from Elizabeth to Somerville should take concerted action and attempt to bring about a reduction of fares. He thought that would be the only way a reduction could be secured.

After some further discussion upon motion of Mr. J. T. Vail, the secretary was instructed to write to the various boards of trade and the officials of the various cities and boroughs between Elizabeth and Somerville and ask that they co-operate with the Board of Trade of this city in an effort to bring about a reduction of fares, and to meet with the Plainfield Board at the November meeting.

A communication was received from Mrs. M. W. Ross, of Metuchen, asking the board to interest itself in the production of artificial rubber and artificial coal, of which the writer claimed to be the inventor. Mrs. Board stated that it would cost about $10,000 to establish the plant. The secretary was requested to inform the writer that the Board was not in a position to further her plans with reference to the matter.

Communications were also received from Messrs. J. Alex. Koons, H. J. Holmes and C. Carslie asking about the proposed trolley to Washingtonville. The secretary stated that the letters had been answered.

After receiving the resignations of William Newcorn and V. L. Frazee, the Board adjourned to meet the third Monday in October.

Assault Charge Withdrawn.

The charge of assault against Theodore Fingerhuth, husband of the woman in the Somerville jail on the charge of murder for shooting and killing Paul Roehricht a week ago, which was preferred by Robert M. Clark, has been withdrawn. The hearing was set down for Monday afternoon.

WHO WILL TEACH IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Corps of Instructors in Plainfield Public Schools.

FEW CHANGES IN THE LIST.

THE SCHOOLS ARE STILL CROWDED WITH PUPILS.

Formation of New Classes Relieved Overcrowding Somewhat, But Rooms Are Still Accommodating More Than the Intended Number—List of Teachers at Public Schools in the City.

The first week of school at the Plainfield public schools is over. Monday the work was resumed with the usual regularity. The arrangement of new classes has relieved the overcrowding of many of the classes that interfered with the best results last year. The increase in the attendance still makes the size of some of the lower grades larger than the accommodations were intended.

There are several changes in the corps of instructors throughout the entire system of schools. Under the general direction of H. M. Maxson, superintendent of schools, the teachers have made the local system one of the best in the State. The teachers in the different schools are as follows:

High School—Ira W. Travell, principal; Ellen E. Niles, Ellen K. Cuming, Alice M. Whitney, S. Lena Bass, A. B. Meredith, Geo. W. Sanford, Anna J. Bennett, Chas. L. Lewis, Mabel A. Maxson.

TO PROTECT LOCAL JEHUS.

Somerville Will Tax Hackmen as Well as Peddlers and Circuses.

The Board of Town Commissioners of Somerville has an ordinance under consideration for the licensing and regulating of hacks, which has been discussed for several years. The local liverymen have insisted on such an ordinance as a protection to them against the invasion of foreign hackmen in times of county fairs and other such events when the liverymen can reap a harvest. The proposed ordinance provides a license fee of $6 a year for four-horse vehicles; $4 for two-horse vehicles, and $2 for one-horse. There is also an ordinance regulating street venders. This fixes the license fee for peddlers with wagons at $5 a day, and for peddlers on foot at $1. Circuses will be obliged to pay $20 a day, and the performers are made equally liable with the proprietors for the violation of the ordinance.

WILL JOIN THE CHORUS.

Many Signify Their Willingness to Help Produce "The Messiah."

Nelson Runyon, secretary of the committee that is arranging to give "The Messah" at Christmas time, has received many replies to the notice he sent out inviting local singers to take part in the concert. The answers he has received are very satisfactory. There are still some to whom the notices were sent that have not yet made any reply. Mr. Runyon is anxious to hear from them as soon as possible as the time to organize the chorus is near at hand.

May Observe Dewey Day.

Some of the local grocers are considering the advisability of giving their clerks a holiday Friday, September 29th, at the time of the Dewey celebration. Many of the business men have agreed to take such action if their competitors will also agree to close.

Building a County Bridge.

The authorities of Somerset county are having a bridge constructed across Stony brook near Grove street. The bridge will have stone abutments and iron trusses.

WHEN DEWEY COMES.

PLAINFIELDERS WILL BE NOTIFIED IN VERY QUICK TIME.

The Mayor Will Order the Fire Alarm Whistle to be Blown, and Cannons Will Thunder the Patriotic News to All.

Through the telegraphic service which the enterprise of the New York World will furnish, all Plainfielders will be apprised at the earliest possible moment of the arrival of Admiral Dewey and his brave jack tars in the lower bay of New York.

It is the purpose of the big metropolitan newspaper to notify every county seat and big town in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut by wire of the arrival of the hero of Manila, and in connection with this Mayor Rockfellow Saturday morning agreed to order the blowing of the fire alarm whistle in this city as soon as the news is received.

In this way people for miles around will be able to know the home coming of Dewey and his men in a very few minutes after the actual time they are sighted at Fire Island. It will be a moment in which the thrill of patriotism will course through every vein of every citizen of the United States.

In addition to the blowing of the fire alarm The Daily Press has also made arrangements to fire the National salute of seventeen guns from the cannon owned by the Democratic Association on the plaza opposite the North Avenue station of the Central Railroad. Thus there will not only be the spreading of the news by the far-reaching tone of the whistle, but there will be also an echoing sentiment in the thunder of the cannon doing honor to the man who is now most in the public eye and appreciation.

Hundreds of towns and cities have already agreed to accept the World's patriotic service in this respect, and in the demonstration that will be made Plainfield will not be among the least of them.

MOVED IN WRONG HOUSE.

Strange Mistake Made by Hampton Probasco in Trying to Settle in a Home.

Hampton Probasco, a middle-aged colored man, applied to Justice Nash Saturday for a warrant for the arrest of a well-known lawyer, who he alleged had threatened to evict him from the house he was occupying on West Third street.

Probasco told an amusing story of having lived in one of the Hetfield houses. By mistake he had moved into a house which is in charge of L. M. French, where he had lived for a month. One evening, while he was absent at prayer meeting, his wife, having been told of her mistake, made preparations to move around the corner into a house owned by Walter L. Hetfield. When Probasco got home he found all the beds down and the furniture piled into a heap, while his wife and a friend were engaged in moving into the "little house around the corner."

Now Mr. Hetfield wants his rent, Probasco went to Justice Mosher and offered to pay part of the rent, but that was not satisfactory, and now he has been threatened with ejectment.

What Probasco can't understand is how they can compel him to pay twice.

It is unnecessary to say that his application for a warrant was refused.

He left Justice Nash's court in high dudgeon threatening to go to Elizabeth, "where de high courts was made," and get a warrant.

SHOP-LIFTERS TO BE ARRESTED.

Assignee's Sale at VanEmburgh & Son's Interrupted by a Warning.

In the big crowds that have visited the assignee's sale of VanEmburgh & Son's stock of goods it has been impossible to keep a close watch on all the people of the store to prevent shop-lifting. Considerable stock has therefore been stolen by weak-minded persons. Saturday two persons were detected in the act of taking articles, and Mr. VanEmburgh decided that work of this kind had gone far enough. He announced before a storeful of customers that the first case hereafter where a person was found stealing goods they would be promptly arrested by Special Officer Giese, who is present during the sale to keep the crowds in order.

Paid Their Assessments.

A great many people affected by the assessment made by the borough officials for the opening of Watchung avenue have paid up and their names have been crossed off the list. Those who do not pay by October 1st, will be obliged to let their property be put up for sale.

A Fine Roadbed Now,

Travelers by wheel and wagon greatly appreciate the improved condition of Park avenue from Fourth street to the city line. It is now a pleasure to travel over this fine strip of road and almost every day that thoroughfare is crowded.

—Neuman Brothers are receiving daily choice canning peaches and pears which are being sold at prices to suit all.

SENATOR REED WINS HONORS AT GOLF.

Competed On Links Of Park Golf Club.

GEORGE T. ROGERS FIRST.

SENATOR REED WAS SECOND FOR THE McCUTCHEN CUP.

None of the Leaders in the Competition Were Able to Score Points—Mr. Rogers Becomes a Factor in the Contest—Many Played Saturday—Miss Elsberg Made Her Score For Buttfield Cup—The Scores.

Senator Charles A. Reed signalized his return to the haunts of the golfers by winning second honors, Saturday afternoon, in the day's play for the McCutchen Cup on the links of the Park Golf Club. The Senator and Councilman George T. Rogers, one of the Park whist team, made the rounds together. They were a combination that couldn't be beaten. The Councilman has been playing considerably of late and won first honors. The Senator came in two strokes behind. As a result of the day's play, Mr. Rogers has become a factor in the contest for the handsome silver trophy, and is now tied for fifth place with G. W. Faber.

The day was a delightful one for golf, clear and cool, while the brisk north wind died down as the sun approached the horizon. The course was crowded with players, twelve of whom entered in the competitions for the two trophies. The fair sex was represented, but not very largely. Nine cards were handed in for the McCutchen Cup, but the leaders in the contest for the cup all failed to win any additional points.

Morgan T. Townsend's handicap has been reduced from seven to five. Otherwise he would have scored a point. As it was, he tied with his father for fourth place with a net score of 161. William A. Townsend, winner of the Labor Day cup, has had his handicap reduced from 16 to 12 but, as he leaves today for Cornell, it will make no difference to him.

The Senator did some great playing, his approaches being particularly commendable. This is the first time that he has competed for the McCutchen Cup and he is now in fifteenth place with a bunch of others. W. J. Peters, who won third place at the one point, advanced to tenth. Mr. Rogers' victory carried him from tenth place to fifth where he is tied with G. W. Faber. If Mr. Rogers continues the game he played Saturday, he will become a prominent factor in the competition for the cup. A few more victories like that and he will be at the front.

The scores handed in during the afternoon were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
George T. Rogers	114	21	93
Charles A. Reed	126	30	96
G. W. Faber	112	13	99
Morgan T. Townsend	106	5	101

William B. Faber	122	16	106
W. de la B. Anderson	109	0	109
Gifford W. Cooley	119	10	110

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

W. de la B. Anderson	12
Meredith Dryden	10
Gifford W. Cooley	10
Charles E. Faber	7
G. W. Faber	4
Geo. T. Rogers	4

Volney F. Green	2
Chas. A. Reed	2
Fred S. Overton	1
Clarence S. Boome	1
Augustus VanDeventer	1
R. C. Runyon	1
C. W. McCutchen	1

Miss Elsberg and Miss Howell both competed for the Buttfield Cup. They played the necessary nine holes together, accompanied by Allan E. Laing. At the close there was only the difference of one stroke between their net scores, Miss Elsberg winning. The scores were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Miss Daisy Elsberg	109	18	82
Miss Sallie Howell	97	4	93

There has been no official announcement of the number of points yet scored for the Buttfield Cup, but an inspection of the past scores shows the following competitors and the points scored by them:

Miss Daisy Elsberg	26
Miss Saidee Mae Howell	23
Miss Adelaide G. Ball	1

HEIRESS TO THE MISSING GOULD CASH.

Found to be an Inmate of a Charitable Institution.

WILLIAM GOULD'S SISTER.

TALKS TO A REPORTER ABOUT HER ECCENTRIC BROTHER

Had Never Considered Her Brother a Miser and Was Surprised to Learn That He Left Considerable Money—Had Seen Her Brother But Twice Since He Left Home at the Age of Eighteen Years.

Lawyer Harry C. Runyon has received from Mr. A. H. Morton, of Chicago, the nephew of William Gould, the eccentric hermit who died at Bayville nearly two years ago, copies of the Manchester (N. H.) Union, in which is published a short story about Miss Mahaley Gould, the dead hermit's sister. It says:

"Miss Mary A. D. Allison called at the Union office and stated that a year ago there was a Mahaley Gould at the Woman's Aid Home. Mrs. Allison remembered that Miss Gould had called on her and she thought that she was alive and well.

"Acting on the suggestion a Union reporter called at the institution and had the pleasure of meeting Mahaley Gould, the much-sought woman. She is 75 years of age, and, barring rheumatic troubles at certain seasons of the year, enjoys good health for one of her years. Miss Gould talked freely in regard to the reported legacy and her brother's position in life.

"When he died in November, 1897, William Gould was 81 years of age. She had seen her brother but twice since he left home at the age of 18. Miss Gould was but 4 years old at that time. He was a stone mason by trade and in his early years worked on the railroad, helping to lay the first line in the United States. He visited home when Mahaley was 11 years old and again when 20. That was the last time she ever saw him, although they corresponded regularly up to the time of his death.

"Her brother, William Gould, she said, was early married and for fifty years lived with his wife in Plainfield, N. J. He later moved to Barnegat Park, where she supposed he died. A few years ago Miss Gould learned that her brother was married a second time, but does not know whether this is true or not.

"Concerning the money reported to be left Mahaley Gould knows little, but does not believe it was any great amount. William Gould was never a miserly man, she said. She expects that her nephew will make a thorough investigation and straighten matters out satisfactorily. Miss Gould is at present comfortably situated, but says that a little money would be greatly appreciated in her old age."

Mr. Runyon is vigorously prosecuting the search for the old man's hidden money, which is believed to be at least $8,000. Mr. Morton of Chicago has instructed him to use every endeavor to secure if possible a strong box, which is in the possession of the woman he married for his second wife, and which is believed to contain valuable papers that will throw some light on the whereabouts of the missing cash. Further developments are expected at an early date.

LITTLE MISS POPE'S BIG DAY.

Her Fourth Birthday Anniversary Marked by a Happy Gathering.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Pope's little daughter Beatrice was four years old Friday, and in honor of the happy event they gave her a birthday party in the afternoon. The young friends of the celebrant were invited to the house where every arrangement had been made for an enjoyable time. After the young hostess had received her guests all joined in playing games. During the latter part of the afternoon a repast was served to the guests. Before dark all had left for their homes, wishing their friend many happy returns of the day. Little Miss Pope received a number of very pretty and useful presents from her friends for which she was very thankful. A feature of the event was the table decorations on the dining table. It was arranged by Mrs. Pope, and was very attractive.

Invitations Out.

Invitations are out for the wedding of Miss Etta Monica Blatz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Blatz, of Somerset street, to Augustus Arthur Cannon, of Craig place, at St. Joseph's church Wednesday evening, October 4th, at 6:30 o'clock. A reception at the Revere House will follow.

HILLSIDE GOLF TEAM WON FROM VISITORS.

Morristown Field Club Defeated by Score of 39 to 11.

PLAY FOR THE BROWN CUP.

W. L. GLENNY IN FINE FORM AND LED THE CONTESTANTS.

By His Excellent Playing he Secured the Cup, Which Now His Personal Property—Bracing Weather Made Play on the Links Very Pleasant—Next Saturday Competition for Reinhart Cup.

There was enough of interest at the course of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club last Saturday to satisfy the most enthusiastic golfer. The day was all to be desired and the bracing cool weather had a good effect on everyone who played. A large number of the club's best players were present and the fact that Josiah Brown offered a silver cup for the best score from scratch, was an incentive to great effort. W. L. Glenney, who has made the eighteen holes in 77, almost equaled that score Saturday. His score was 79, and his play was remarkable. This player has been in fine form this year and his work has been of the best. After his score was recorded it seemed to be a settled fact that he would secure the cup. This proved to be true. The cup is his personal property and is not to be played for again.

Nearly all of the other scores were good and showed a remarkable degree of proficiency on the part of the "regulars." Below will be found the scores for this event: W. L. Glenney, 79; F. O. Reinhart, 84; Willard Wadsworth, 86; F. O. Talmadge, 88; W. T. Kaufman, 90; J. W. Baker, 90; H. R. Stockton, 96; R. M. Shepard. 100; F. C. Ard, 103; Henry Syder, 104; George Ryder, 107; L. H. VanBuren, 114; E. J. Waring, 130.

The next event that attracted considerable attention was the match play between a team from the Morristown Field Club and a team from the home club. The home team maintained its reputation and won easily from their opponents by a score of 33 to 11. The visitors did not seem to be in the best of form, and at no time were they able to equal the play of the home team. Of the latter team there were only two members, F. O. Talmadge and R. M. Shepard, who failed to score, while every other one made good scores. On the other hand there were only two of the visiting team that were able to score, and they made the total of eleven points for their team.

During the contest there was some fine playing, and the home team distinguished itself in many ways. The score in detail for the match play is as follows:

HILLSIDE.		MORRISTOWN.
Glenney	4	Smith	0
Wadsworth	4	Talmadge	0
Reinhart	9	Holmes	0
Talmadge	0	Spring	0
Baker	5	Durkiack	0
Shepard	0	Macy	3
Stockton	9	Palmer	0
Sangstadt	6	Flellinghuy	8
	39		11

Next Saturday play will be resumed for the Reinhart Cup, which is a men's competion, handicap, open to active members only. Eighteen holes, medal play.

ADDRESSED THE W. C. T. U.

Rev. G. M. Shott Scores the Liquor Traffic in Severe Terms.

The 4 o'clock service in the W. C. T. U. rooms Sunday was conducted by Rev. G. M. Shott, of the Scotch Plains Baptist church.

He said that people of today are going backward with their cloaks of excuse and license laws, failing to face the greatest enemy to our homes and to our nation.

He drew a lively comparison between the heathen worship of India, and the heathenish complicity with the liquor traffic in America. It India it is the Juggernaut which grinds out the life of its devotees. In America it is the jug-or-not which tells the story in home life and church life.

Mr. Shott says it is interfering sadly with his business in Scotch Plains, and wishes something more could be done to help root out this glaring sin.

To Repair South Avenue.

It is the intention of the councilmanic street committee to repair South avenue as soon as possible. The members realize the great inconvenience caused to travellers, but circumstances interfere somewhat, but the officials are anxious to get the road in shape quickly.

THE BRYAN GAUNTLET.

CONGRESSMAN DALY MAKES THE ISSUE IN NEW JERSEY.

Soon Will Issue an Address—Jersey Democrats Will Be Asked to Send a Bryan Delegation to the Convention.

The New Jersey Committee of Bryan Democrats held a secret meeting in the Bidgway House, Philadelphia, Thursday night. Wm. F. Morgan, of Burlington county, presided. Others present were Congressman William D. Daly, of Hoboken; Clarence Atkinson, and John J. Crandall, of Camden; Charles Stokes, of Beverly; Theodore Bedd, of Pemberton; August Schwabeland, of Riverside; A. S. Dulin, of Moorestown; Robert M. Brock, of Riverside, and Allan Brensby, of Merchantville.

Congressman Daly was the only Hudson county man present. J. F. Minturn, of Hoboken, also on the committee, sent a letter regretting that he could not attend.

Congressman Daly submitted the draft of a proposed address to New Jersey Democrats. It calls on them to support W. J. Bryan for the Presidency and to endeavor to secure the election of delegates to the National Convention that will vote for the nomination of the Nebraskan.

The address, it is understood, calls on those members of the Democratic State Committee who are opposed to Bryan to retire and make way for straight Bryan men.

The proposed address favors the Chicago platform and also indorses Bryan's views in favor of the election of United States Senators by a popular vote, an income tax and the regulation of trusts by the Federal authorities. It does not mention silver specifically.

The address was approved, and it will be put into formal shape and issued probably next week.

That part of the address which calls on anti-Bryan members of the State committee to resign is said to be a slap at the present State Chairman, William B. Gourley.

Congressman Daly could not be seen last night. He had left for Syracuse.

ALIS ELEVEN READY TO OPEN THE SEASON.

Will be Strongest Team to Represent Plainfield.

A SCHEDULE ARRANGED.

PROBABLE CANDIDATES FOR POSITIONS ON THE ALIS TEAM.

Roy T. Phillips Will Captain it and Charles Woolston Will Act as Business Manager—Will Play Series of Games With Westfield—First Regular Practice Game Tomorrow Afternoon.

The chilly weather of the last few days has turned the thoughts of the young men of this city to football. While the old Plainfield A. A. seems to have withdrawn from the gridiron, Alis football team is planning great things for the coming season. The Alis team will be the strongest team to represent the city, and if anything like the old form is shown, the eleven will be a worthy one to defend the honor of Plainfield on the field.

Roy T. Phillips will continue to captain the team while Charles Woolston will act as its business manager. In the evening the candidates for the team expect to get together while the first regular practice has been called for tomorrow afternoon at the Martine Field.

There are several loses from last year's team. Henry Leal, Carroll Runyon and Fred Overton go to college and therefore cannot play, while Albert Finch will spend the fall and winter in the south. Charles Woolston and "Jim" Taylor are the probable ends for the team with Morris Dumont and Roy Bedford as tackles. Walter L. Long and George P. Smith are strong men likely to be chosen for the out side positions of the central trio. Who will play centre is still a question that the management is anxious to solve. Roy Phillips will be in his old place at quarter. Harry Cuming will play one half and Richard Waring may play the other. Volney F. Green will make a splendid full back if he decides to play. Ed. Smalley, a promising boroughite, is another candidate for a back. Godwin Beard is mentioned for the line and Maltby, of Dunellen, as a possible end.

The schedule as now completed is as follows: Saturday, October 7th, Westfield at Plainfield; Saturday, October 14th, Bayonne Field Club at Plainfield; Saturday, October 21st, Seton Hall College at Plainfield.

A return game will be played in Westfield and a series may be arranged with Scotch Plains. Games will be arranged in Plainfield with the Stuth High School, Elizabeth, the Englewood A. C., the Arlington A. C., Piggy School, of Elizabeth, Newark High School and Newark Academy.

WORE STOLEN FINERY.

Colored Domestic Made Free With Apparel of Her Mistress—Held for the Grand Jury.

Carrie Kenny, a colored woman, formerly employed in the family of Frank Huntington, of 36 Raymond avenue, was arrested Thursday by Officer Mattox, charged with stealing a silk waist, a quantity of lace, a scarf valued at $18 and other articles of clothing. When the police searched the woman's room several dresses and a quantity of female wearing apparel belonging to another servant employed by Mrs. Huntington, were also found. In fact much of the clothing which the Kenny woman had on when she was arrested had been stolen. She was compelled to remove the garments.

Justice Nash held the accused to await the action of the Grand Jury.

STOPPED UP THE KEYHOLE.

Mischevious Boys' Trick Kept Lawyer Newcorn Out of His Office.

Some mischevious boys have been enjoying themselves at the expense of Lawyer Newcorn by filling the keyhole of his office door with pieces of matches. Until the appearance of his humble clerk the Judge was compelled to transact business in the hallway. When the clerk put in an appearance he was requested to enter the office through a front window which he did, Counsellor Newcorn and his clerk with difficulty extracted the pieces of matches.

New Station for Hackensack.

The plans for the new station at Main street, Hackensack, on the Susquehanna and Western Railroad, are ready, and the Erie officials have notified the Hackensack Board of Trade that the building will be an ornament to the town. It will cost about $20,000 and will be similar to the stations at Rutherford and Paterson.

County Doing the Work.

The work of macadamizing the county road between Somerville and Belle Mead, is progressing rapidly under the direction of the County Supervisors of roads.

Manager Chas. Schermerhorn, of the Western Union Telegraph Company office, and his wife, will return the first of the week from a pleasure trip to Boston.

POLITICS BEGINNING TO GET TO FINE POINT.

The Situation in Union County is Summed Up.

SHERIFF PUZZLES G. O. P.

THE STATE DEPENDS LARGELY ON HOW HOUSTON FARES.

A Tribune Correspondent Views the Situation From a Republican Standpoint—Kirk is Regarded as a Strong Aspirant for County Clerkship—There are Five Democrats Who Would be Sheriff

Politics in Union county are now begining to show signs of considerable activity, says an Elizabeth writer in the New York Tribune. The contest in the county on the Republican side will be over the offices of County Clerk and Sheriff. So far as the Senatorship is concerned, Senator Cross has now no opposition, and his friends, being assured of this, are disposed to keep their hands off the contest for the other places on the county ticket. The Republican aspirants for County Clerk are William Howard, of Rahway; Assemblyman George A. Squire, of Elizabeth; Sheriff William T. Kirk, of Plainfield, and ex-Alderman Charles H. K. Halsey, of Elizabeth, teller in the National State Bank. The struggle is a lively between these four, with Howard apparently just now having a trifle the best of it. He will come to the convention with the united support of Rahway, and he has promises of support in Elizabeth and the township.

Both Elizabeth's candidates for County Clerk are heavily handicapped by the candidacy of Assemblyman Robert G. Houston, of Elizabeth, for Sheriff. Elizabeth cannot expect to get Senator, Sheriff and County Clerk, so that the only chance for Halsey or Squire is by sidetracking the Houston boom, and this the latter's friends say they will not be able now to do. Halsey and Kirk are really looked upon as dark horses, whose strength just now is an unknown quantity, and their chances in the convention will largely depend on a protracted struggle over the Clerkship.

B. Frank Coriell, of Plainfield, is a candidate for Sheriff, if the County Clerkship goes to Elizabeth; Mr. Dorval, of Westfield, is likewise an aspirant for Sheriff in that contingency. Houston, however, is tipped by the "mowing ones" to win, with Howard or Kirk for County Clerk. The Squire Halsey men just now appear to be playing a still hunt.

As to the Democratic outlook, it is demoralized and all at sea for a nominee for State Senator, the only name so far mentioned being that of Freeholder Stulford Scudder, former postmaster of Westfield. None of the old party war horses can be persuaded to have their names mentioned in connection with this office, and who will really be the candidate is a conundrum. Ex-County clerk John L. Crowell, it is said, would be willing to take another nomination, and there does not seem to be any disposition so far to deprive him of the chance to run.

When it comes to sheriff, however, there seems to be a feeling among the Democracy that if any candidate on their ticket has a remote show of being elected it will be the nominee for sheriff, hence there is a stir among the faithful over that office, although how they can figure that they can win the shrievalty is hard to conjecture. Nevertheless, there are five candidates in the field, with probably more to hear from. Those prominently mentioned are Jacob Glaser, former Alderman Sheppard, School Commissioner Wickliffe B. Sayre, of the Elizabeth Board of Education, Justice Edward B. Kelley and Freeholder Swain, of Summit. Glaser's boom is the loudest, but Sayre may surprise the others at the convention.

The Assembly candidates spoken of on the Republican side are C. Addison Swift and Isaac W. Little, of Elizabeth, and Roger F. Murray, of Plainfield, while if Mr. Squire does not win in the clerkship fight he may be persuaded to run again for the Assembly, with a prospect of being made Speaker. There are no candidates as yet spoken of for Assembly on the Democratic side, that party having its hands full at present trying to get a Senate candidate. The call for the county convention will not be issued before the end of this month or the beginning of October.

TROLLEY WANTED ON WOODLAWN AVENUE

Some of the Claims Being Urged by Interested Ones.

PETITION SENT TO COUNCIL.

ELECTRIC ROAD WOULD DEVELOP THE SECOND WARD.

It is Said That the Extension of the Street Railway Out Woodlawn Avenue Would Not Interfere With Arlington Avenue, Except That the Latter Will Not Continue on Randolph Road.

While the extension of the trolley through Arlington avenue is under consideration, a number of people who reside in the eastern section of Plainfield, have petitioned the Plainfield Street Railway Company to extend its tracks from the present line at Putnam and Woodland avenues through Woodland avenue to the cemetery and golf links. This is the route which was first planned when the road was run out Putnam avenue, and the residents in the Second ward have been by turns hoping for and expecting the building of this line for the last five years.

A petition has also been sent to the Council, signed by a great many property owners on Woodland avenue, asking their co-operation in securing this road to the cemetery.

It is argued that this extension is not only desired by the present residents but by persons living in other parts of Plainfield, who have bought plots of ground in this section and desire to build, and by others who would like to live in this section and only wait for some means of reaching the centre of the city and the stations other than by horse and carriage.

There is no question but that the eastern portion of the Second ward will, with trolley communication, develop as rapidly as the section near South avenue or the section in the Third ward adjoining Monroe avenue, both of which enjoy the advantages of the trolley.

The extension of the trolley through Woodland avenue will not be at the expense of the one on Arlington avenue, it is claimed, for the Council has already been assured of the company's willingness to build that line to Randolph road at once and later to extend the line still further, but the railroad people decline to extend the Arlington avenue line out Randolph road and also one out Woodland avenue to the same terminus, and who can blame them, for through a portion of the year even one line must be run at some loss.

The question which the Woodland avenue advocates urge is whether there shall be a trolley built past the swamps and fields of Randolph road, or on Woodland avenue, passing the highest land and one of the most desirable residence portions in the city.

LADIES ACTED AS HOSTS.

FESTIVAL AND DANCE AT THE YOUNG MEN'S CATHOLIC CLUB.

It Was the First Event Ever Carried Out by the Women and They Succeeded in Making It a Very Pleasant One.

The peach festival and dance given Thursday by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Young Men's Catholic Club, at the club rooms, corner of Sixth and Liberty streets, proved to be a delightful affair. This was the first function of the kind that the ladies have ever attempted. When it was first proposed some of the young men were inclined to treat the affair as a joke, claiming that the young ladies were not capable of assuming the cares and responsibilities of such an undertaking. But the gentlemen counted without their host, so to speak.

The success of last night's festivities is certainly a guarantee that the ladies felt sure of their position and had confidence in their ability to carry out their plans, and every one had a delightful time and those young gentlemen who previous to the entertainment had misgivings as to the possibilities of its success had them entirely dispelled.

The young ladies had entire charge of everything, even to filling the important and arduous position of floor managers. O'Reilly's orchestra supplied the music. The refreshments, consisting of peaches and cake, were served in the card room of the club. The house committee acted as waiters.

Much of the credit for the success of the festival and dance belongs to the following ladies, although others among the fair sex also assisted: Miss Josie Butcher, Miss Margaret Day, Miss Katharine Carty, Miss Nellie Casey and Miss Mamie Cotter.

The entertainment of last night having proved to be such a decided success it is the intention of the ladies to hold these dances at least once a month, and possibly oftner.

By Order of Board of Health.

City water is being put in Church street, between Third and Front streets, by order of the Board of Health.

MAY GO OVER THE TERM.

PROBABLE DELAY IN BRINGING WILLIAM DARLING TO TRIAL.

Prosecutor Will be Busy With Small Cases, and There Will be Great Difficulty in Securing the Witnesses.

The New Brunswick Fredonian says that from present indications the trial of Wm. Darling is very likely to be delayed for some weeks at least. A legal hitch has arisen and it is not probable that the case will come up for hearing before the December term of court. At the earliest it will not occur until the latter part of the present term.

The date originally set for the Darling trial was September 12th, but complications arose which made it impossible to have the case go on at that time. It may come up towards the end of the month, but indications are that it will be laid over until the next term.

W. S. Angleman, counsel for Darling, is very busy on the case and so is Prosecutor Voorhees. There will be great difficulty in reaching the witnesses needed and as many of them will have to come from a long distance it is unlikely that Prosecutor Voorhees will move for trial until he is sure the case can go on and not be delayed in the least.

Darling is the most quiet prisoner in the county jail. He pays no attention to the other prisoners and spends most of his time lying on his cot reading. He will have nothing to say in regard to his case excepting to his father and counsel.

KIRKMAN WILL NOT SUE.

He Frees from Blame the Plainfield Men Who Ran Into Him in Elizabeth.

Policeman Kirkman, of Elizabeth, who was injured the night of August 7th in attempting to stop a team, does not blame the Plainfield men, occupants of the carriage, and will not bring suit. He has authorized the following:

"In justice to Wm. DeMeza and Chas. Hillman, of Plainfield, I deem it my duty to correct any erroneous impression the public may have formed concerning the incident, which occurred on the night of August 7th. Since that time I have spoken with Mr. DeMeza, and am assured that he and his companion did not realize I was a police officer until too late. The statements which have appeared in the papers to the effect that I anticipate bringing suit against these gentlemen I wish to correct, as I do not intend to take any proceedings against them in this matter."

"GREEKS BEARING GIFTS."

The Cranford Township Committee Counted the Teeth in This Wooden Gift-Horse.

At a popular meeting of the Cranford Township Committee a contract was received from the New York & New Jersey Telephone Company, agreeing to place a telephone in the town rooms free of charge.

When the contract was read it brought the Committee's attention to the fact that the franchise of the telephone company had expired in March. Now the telephone company must seek a new franchise and the establishment of the exchange may be delayed for a short time. It was the company's intention to have the exchange in working order this month.

DEATH OF MRS. HOPE.

She Had Been Ill for a Long Time—Member of First Methodist Church.

The death of Mrs. Mary S. Hope, wife of Stephen R. Hope, 353 East Third street, occurred Thursday afternoon after a long and very painful illness. Mrs. Hope was 67 years of age, and has lived in this city for many years. She was a woman of sterling character and had a great many friends. Both she and her husband attended the First M. E. church, but Mrs. Hope has been unable to leave the house for many months.

The funeral services will be held from the residence, 353 East Third street, Sunday afternoon at 2:30

Newark Train Taken Off.

After putting on the through train between Plainfield and Newark at the earnest request of the Newark Board of Trade early last summer, the Central Railroad of New Jersey has withdrawn it, and every one had a delightful time and those young gentlemen who previous to the entertainment had misgivings as to the possibilities of its success had them entirely dispelled.

The young ladies had entire charge of everything, even to filling the important and arduous position of floor managers. O'Reilly's orchestra supplied the music. The refreshments, consisting of peaches and cake, were served in the card room of the club. The house committee acted as waiters.

Much of the credit for the success of the festival and dance belongs to the following ladies, although others among the fair sex also assisted: Miss Josie Butcher, Miss Margaret Day, Miss Katharine Carty, Miss Nellie Casey and Miss Mamie Cotter.

JURY SAYS IT'S MURDER

Mrs. Fingerhuth Accused Of The Crime.

INQUEST WAS COMPLETED

OSCAR FINGERHUTH, (THE SON), HELD AS ACCESSORY.

Last Session of Inquest Held Sept. 13th—Constable Pangborn Told Of Conversation With Young Man—Councilman Hetfield Files Two Exceptions To The Inquest.

The fact that Mrs. Henrietta Fingerhuth believed that she was defending her home from unlawful invaders when she shot and killed Paul Roehricht September 12th, did not lessen the seriousness of the act in the eyes of the coroner's jury. Sept. 13th the inquest was completed, and a verdict was brought in that Roehricht had been murdered by Mrs. Henrietta Fingerhuth and that her son, Oscar, was an accessory to the crime. Mother and son are now prisoners in the county jail, at Somerville, awaiting the action of the Grand Jury, while the husband is held as a witness.

Now that Mrs. Fingerhuth has been in jail for several days, she has begun to realize the seriousness of the trouble in which she is now placed. She is not the calm, self-possessed sir of the day of the shooting and is greatly agitated. The Fingerhuths have been placed in separate cells and have not been allowed to talk over the circumstances of the shooting. The officials have little fear of suicide on the part of any of that family but a strict watch is nevertheless kept. Only the lawyers have been allowed to converse with the prisoners. Scores of visitors have been to the county jail since the Fingerhuths were brought there but all have been refused a peep at the prisoners.

Councilman Walter L. Hetfield, who is going to defend Mrs. Fingerhuth, has filed two exceptions to the inquest. According to the law of this State, he says, the coroner must be a freeholder in the county where he resides in order to be eligible to the office. Coroner DeMott, Mr. Hetfield claims, was not a freeholder when he was elected and is not a freeholder now. The law states, Mr. Hetfield claims, that the jury in the inquest shall consist of six men. There were twelve men on the jury that looked into the causes of the death of Roehricht.

The concluding session of the coroner's inquest was held in the dance hall of the Manhattan Hotel Sept. 13th and opened at 7:15 o'clock. After the coroner was sure that the jury was all there Edward O. Clark was sworn and took the stand to give his version of the trouble at the Allen farm. Clark is a law student in the office of his brother, Lawyer Robert M. Clark. He told of his visit to the Allen homestead before the shooting. He knocked at all the doors, but met with no response. Then Mrs. Clemenz came running up and called to Mrs. Fingerhuth that Clark meant no harm. So Mrs. Fingerhuth opened the door. She told her that he had been sent to forcibly eject her. If she would not go peaceably. She refused to talk to Clark, saying that she would have nothing to do with him, but wanted to see Mr. Roehricht. She produced a revolver and declared her intention of shooting him if he laid one finger on the house or door. Clark was accompanied by Thomas Quinn, Emil Debowski, Harry Ryan, the coachman, and a colored man named James Hare.

Young Clark agreed to withdraw for a time and sent Ryan for his brother. Mrs. Fingerhuth was very sarcastic in her remarks about Roehricht and said:

"Take my compliements to Mr. Roehricht and tell him to come like a man and not be a coward."

Prosecutor Dungan decided that it was not necessary for Clark to repeat the story of the shooting as he had only seen what the others had, and it would be mere repetition.

County Physician Henry G. Wagoner of Somerville, started to tell of the irregular proceedings of Coroner DeMott in starting to hold an inquest on his own authority, but Prosecutor Dungan said it wasn't necessary.

Then Dr. Wagoner went on to tell of the autopsy performed by Dr. Buchanan and himself. Roehricht was six feet in height, and weighed aproximately 200 pounds. The only sign of violence was a perforating wound on the left side of the chest. The bullet had passed through the heart and the lower part of the right lung. It then passed out between the tenth and eleventh ribs, slightly fracturing the latter, and was found embedded in the flesh under the right shoulder blade, an inch below the skin. The doctor produced the bullet which was passed to the jury. It was perfect in shape. In his opinion Roehricht's death was caused by shock and an internal hemorrhage brought about by the passage of the bullet.

The next witness was Constable William H. Pangborn. His connection with the case was that he empaneled the jury and assisted in removing Mr. and Mrs. Fingerhuth and their son, Oscar, to the county jail on the 12:43 train Tuesday night. Pangborn escorted Oscar and had a conversation with his prisoner at the Plainfield station. Young Fingerhuth told him that he had purchased the revolver that morning from Harry Dreier to give to his mother. He also told the constable, according to the latter's testimony, that he had given it to his mother and told her to shoot anyone who attempted to enter the house. Pangborn said he had not written the statement in a notebook and Oscar had read it over twice and declared it correct. This book, Pangborn explained, he had handed to Mayor Smalley who now had it in his possession. After making that statement, the officer said, Oscar refused to tell any more, declaring that he had talked too much already.

Constable George N. Steward, of Washingtonville, who arrested Mrs. Fingerhuth, said that he had heard of the shooting and hastened to the scene as fast as possible. After a little conversation with the coroner, he said he endeavored to arrest Mrs. Fingerhuth and her son. After their arrest he asked Mrs. Fingerhuth what she did with the revolver and she said she threw it out of the back window. Leaving her in charge of another officer, he went outside but failed to find it. Returning to her, he asked her to show him where she threw it. She went to the window and said that she had merely dropped it out of the window. Steward said he looked again but was not successful in finding it.

Fingerhuth, he said, was arrested by Marshal Campbell late in the afternoon. Fingerhuth can talk but little English, he explained, and the officer's conversation with him did not amount to much. Fingerhuth had said that he has had "lots of troubles, troubles on Monday, troubles a Tuesday, troubles this morning, troubles this afternoon."

Lawyer Clark was recalled to the stand and Prosecutor Dungan asked him if he had waited at the Allen place at the time of the tragedy until the arrival of the ambulance. He said that he did. Dr. Pittis came with the ambulance. Roehricht's body was placed inside and Coroner DeMott and Dr. Zeigle rode inside while the driver, Dr. Pitris and Clark remained on the front seat. The body was then taken to DeMott's morgue. The door of the morgue was locked when Clark left.

Prosecutor Dungan then spoke a few words explaining who were the accessories to a crime according to law. Anyone assisting, aiding, abetting or advising was an accessory.

Coroner DeMott charged the jury in the regular legal form, and at 8:45 o'clock the crowd was requested to vacate the dance hall and allow the jurors to consider the case.

During the progress of the inquest the hall was crowded with men and boys who remained interested listening to the testimony given. In a prominent place in front were two other sons of the Fingerhuths from New York where they have been living. They had been up to the old Allen homestead in Washington Valley during the afternoon and had looked after and fed the chickens and livestock that belonged to the Fingerhuths. They were both well dressed. They listened carefully to everything that was said and occasionally exchanged a remark. The only people they spoke to while waiting for the jury to find a verdict was to their mother's attorneys, Walter L. Hetfield and William G. DeMeza. The resemblance between the two sons present and Oscar, the son now in the county jail, was striking.

At 9:15 o'clock the coroner, lawyers and the constable were called into the room occupied by the jury. Five minutes later the doors were opened and it was announced that the jury had reached a verdict. After all was quiet Prosecutor Dungan read the formal statement of the findings of the jury.

It declared that "Henrietta Fingerhuth did on the twelfth day of September, A. D., 1899, at the township of North Plainfield, in the county aforesaid, wilfully, feloniously and of her malice aforethought, kill and murder Rob and Paul Roehricht. And that one Oscar Fingerhuth, late of said township of North Plainfield, in the county of Somerset, was then and there abetting and aiding the said Henrietta Fingerhuth to commit the murder aforesaid."

Coroner DeMott then dismissed the jury and the crowd passed into the outer darkness to discuss the result.

The coroner's inquest held in the borough by Coroner DeMott to ascertain the cause of the death of Paul Roehricht, was continued up to 1:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The last three witnesses to be called and examined were Mrs. Augustine Clements, a French woman, Wm. Titus and Wm. Demler. The last witness gave valuable testimony. He told how Mrs. Fingerhuth had threatened to shoot anyone who came on the premises to cause trouble for her or her family. He also related a conversation held yesterday morning when the witness called at the Fingerhuth home with groceries. At that time she told Mr. Demler that she would shoot anyone attempting to put the family off of the place.

William Titus told as to the shooting of Mr. Roehricht, to which he was an eye-witness. His testimony was chiefly the same as has already been published regarding the visit to the house when the shooting occurred.

Mrs. Clementz spoke through Mrs. William Demarest, being unable to talk any English. She told how the men came to the place and attempted to break in the doors and take possession of the premises. At the conclusion of taking this testimony Coroner DeMott decided to adjourn until 7 o'clock last evening, when it was continued.

A persistent and vigorous search was instituted and towards night the boy was found in the West End by Patrolman McCue, and returned to his home. He had no explanation to offer for his absence except that he wanted to see the town.

WOMAN KILLED WHILE RIDING A BICYCLE.

Collided With Westfield Farmer's Wagon Near Newark.

POLE STRUCK HER HEAD.

FARMER DROVE OFF WITHOUT WAITING TO SEE RESULTS.

The Victim was Mrs. T. Dayton Martin, of Newark, and was Killed Almost Instantly — County Physician Westcott Notified of the Fatality After a Good Deal of Delay and Trouble

Mrs. T. Dayton Martin, of 108 Mc-Whorter street, Newark, was killed Wednesday, Sept. 13, while riding her bicycle on Springfield avenue near the Seven Bridges, just west of the South Orange township line. She started out in the morning with Mrs. Ida Shipman, of 87 Arlington street, Newark, to go to Millburn.

They passed through Irvington to Springfield avenue and while riding along that thoroughfare heard the rumble of a wagon behind them, Mrs. Martin was some distance ahead of her companion. The team, which was being driven by Charles McMurray, a farm laborer living in Westfield, was going at a lively pace as it reached Mrs. Martin. Whether she was confused by the nearness of the wagon or whether the horses shied is not known, but Mrs. Shipman heard a scream, and looking up saw Mrs. Martin fall under the horses' feet. When the wagon had passed she lay in the road motionless.

Death was almost instaneous. The pole of the wagon struck Mrs. Martin between the eyes and gashed her forehead terribly. The driver by hauling his horses to one side just avoided running over her with the heavy wagon.

Mrs. Shipman was terror stricken, and she stood aghast, while McMurray picked up Mrs. Martin and carried her to one side of the road. He then got on his wagon and started to drive away.

"Come back here!" shouted Mrs. Shipman "don't leave me alone," but McMurray drove off. Theodore Voorhis, of Orange, was riding his wheel along the avenue and Mrs. Shipman saw him, she called to him to aid her, and he jumped off his wheel. Mr. Voorhis, as soon as he was told of the affair by Mrs. Shipman, rode after McMurray and, catching up with him, told him that he would have to stay and await the action of the authorities. McMurray said he had to go home.

"Well, then," said Mr. Voorhis, "give me your name and address and one of your blankets to throw over the woman."

Mr. Voorhis took the man's name and placed a blanket over the dead woman's body. No one in Millburn was willing to take charge of the body, nor did any one know who the County Physician of Union county was. After telephoning to Elizabeth and Fanwood, Mr. Voorhis found County Physician F. W. Westcott and informed him of the accident.

The man who ran into the dead woman is a brother of City Clerk J. T. MacMurray, of this city, and is well-known to many Plainfielders.

TROUBLE AMONG THE JUNIORS.

Franklin Council Think National Body Made Unjust Rulings.

At the meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., Thursday Wm. B. LaRue, of Bound Brook, representative to National Council, whose sessions were held at Minneapolis, Minn., was present and related some of the unjust rulings of the National body, so for as the paying of delegates' expenses. It was decided at Minneapolis that hereafter the National body shall bear the expenses of the delegates. Criticism arose over that the fact that although New Jersey is stronger than some western states, her members do not receive the consideration she should. There is promise of the difficulty being adjusted.

Delay Costs Orange $10,000.

The advance in iron will cost the city of Orange $10,000 more than was anticipated to make improvements to the Orange reservoir. Bids were submitted for pipe laying and machinery for a pumping plant six months ago, but owing to delay on the part of the Common Council the contracts were awarded only two weeks ago.

COUNCIL WILL GRANT TROLLEY FRANCHISE.

Arlington Avenue Extension is Now Assured.

ORDINANCE IS PROGRESSED

LIVELY DISCUSSION AT THE HEARING MONDAY NIGHT.

Lawyer Angleman, Representing the Objectors, Claimed That Not Enough Consents for the Right of Way Have Been Secured—Chairman Barrows Disputed the Lawyer's Allegations.

The trolley is to go out Arlington avenue despite the opposition of some of its residents. So the Common Council decided Monday. The Councilmen were unanimous in voting to pass the ordinance granting the franchise for the Arlington avenue line to the Plainfield Street Railway on first and second reading. Another session of the public hearing was held last night and the Council heard arguments for and against the extension. The benches outside the rail were crowded with interested citizens, who came to see what was going to be done. The general trend of opinion could easily be seen by the applause that greeted anything that favored the granting of the franchise.

All the Councilmen were present, George Wean acted as clerk pro tem in the absence of City Clerk J. P. MacMurray. Mayor G. W. Rockfellow was also on hand. The meeting was called to order promptly at 8 o'clock and President F. H. Andrews declared the public hearing open.

Lawyer W. S. Angleman was the first speaker. He said that he would state the legal objections to the granting of the trolley franchise that Councilman Hetfield had wanted to hear two weeks ago. According to the statute on the subject, he said that it was necessary to have fifty-one per cent. of the consents of the property along the proposed line and that the corner properties included to the centre of the cross streets. This made the objectors' property many feet more than had been accounted.

His next objection was that all the consents signed by women, except one, had not been acknowledged apart from their husbands as was necessary. The one case was that of Mrs. Maria Harlow, which was legal. The others, which he said were not valid, were the consents of Mrs. Chas. Fisk for 30.75 feet, Mrs. Otto Arens for 150 feet, Mrs. E. L. Finch for 80 feet and Mrs. John Detrich for 166.

F. R. Bonnell, he continued, had signed as executor for the estate of A. Bonnell which was not the proper way and the consent was therefore not valid. The trustees of the Seventh-Day Baptist cemetery had signed as individuals which was not according to law if they formed a corporation. B. A. Mumford, he further stated, did not own the 67 feet he had signed for and M. J. Schuck had withdrawn his consent.

By the invalidity of the consents he had just pointed out, Mr. Angleman declared that there was still 706 feet lacking to give the necessary fifty-one per cent.

E. H. Hatch filed the protest of eleven property owners against the granting of the franchise and made a few remarks against the Arlington avenue extension. He begged the Council to consider the advantages of the line through Woodland avenue and explained that it would reach the same destination as the other and save he and his friends much annoyance. He declared that the Woodland avenue line would be of greater convenience to a majority of the members of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club than the Arlington avenue route would.

Councilman Barrows replied to the two representatives of the opposition. The Council, he declared, was representing the wishes of a vast majority of the people of the Third ward who wanted the line on Arlington avenue. It was not run to benefit the golf club or the cemetery alone. It was done in respone to the demand of the citizens of the Third ward.

Mr. Hatch, he said, represented eleven. There were thirty or forty living on the same street who were just as anxious to have the trolley as he was not to. It was unfortunate that any of the property owners should have to suffer but that was the almost invariable result of any public benefit. A few had to suffer to benefit the greater number.

Regarding Mr. Angleman's legal objections, Mr. Barrows said that the law of '98 did not make it necessary to secure the wife's signature apart from the husband. It was also possible to amend or alter the consents up to the time of the passing of the ordinance.

"This Council does not go ahead blind," declared Mr. Barrows. "We don't go ahead until we know that our Corporation Counsel is behind us and he is the best lawyer in the State." Whereat the audience applauded loudly.

D. M. Runyon pleaded for immediate action on the ground that a further postponement would stop the progress of the benefit indefinitely. He also pointed out the many public places on and near Arlington avenue that a route out Woodland avenue would never reach. He wanted to know if a few were going to be allowed to block a movement of benefit to so many.

Assemblyman Roger F. Murray told how consents for 425 feet had been filed that evening. He also quoted Superintendent of Schools H. M. Watson who said at the Board of Education meeting that the benefits to the schools would greatly overbalance the dangers and inconveniences.

Mr. Angleman grew sarcastic in a further explanation of the legal points.

Mr. Barrows moved that a recess of fifteen minutes be taken. Another fifteen minute and a twenty minute recess were taken while the Council talked it over in private. Then the Council was called to order

Mr. Barrows explained that the delay of the past two weeks was occasioned by an effort on the part of the Street Railway Company to reach the golf grounds and cemetery by a new route from the corner of Park avenue and Randolph road. They had now secured it and had the necessary consents. The line would run from Randolph road along Park avenue, after widening the latter street to make room at one side for the trolley tracks, to two-thirds of the distance from Randolph road to Belleview avenue. At that point a new avenue, 80 feet wide would be opened up from Park avenue to Woodland avenue and the trolley line would follow it to Woodland avenue, and thence out Woodland avenue to the golf grounds and cemetery, and provide for further extension in that direction.

Any further delay in the passing of the proposed ordinance, Mr. Barrows stated, would delay matters for several months. Dr. Fritts, as representative of the Street Railway Company, had agreed to make application within two weeks for the extension from Randolph road out Woodland avenue. So Councilman Barrows moved that the ordinance, granting the franchise for a line from West Fourth street, out Arlington avenue to Randolph road to Park avenue, be passed on first reading. Clerk pro tem Geo. West read the ordinance. It was amended so that the company is to complete the line by July 1st, 1900, instead of Sept. 1st, 1900. Then the ordinance was passed on its first and second reading by a unanimous vote. The ordinance was ordered duly engrossed and advertised. The public hearing was then adjourned to October 2d, at 8 o'clock, and the Council resumed the regular order of business.

There was a communication from Street Commissioner Gavett stating that the railway company had secured consents for 1,048 feet more than the required fifty-one per cent. for the Arlington avenue extension.

Chairman Barrows, of the streets and sewers committee, had petitions for the macadamizing of West Second and West Sixth streets, between Liberty street and Central avenue, which were referred to the next Council. There were two petitions from residents of Woodland avenue for a trolley extension. Mr. Barrows expressed himself as favoring it, but said that the Council could not force the company to go there and that the residents might get it by guaranteeing a certain revenue.

After some minor matters Mr. Barrows reported that the committee was ready to take action on awarding the bids for the macadamizing of West Third street, from Madison avenue to Monroe avenue, and West Fourth street, from New street to Monroe avenue, as the Corporation Counsel had finished his work. C. M. Meeker received both contracts. West Third street for 68 cents a lineal foot, and West Fourth street for $1.18 a lineal foot, 30 feet wide, and $1.30 a foot, 40 feet wide. The work is to be completed by December 1st. Contractor Meeker sent an agreement that he would cart dirt gratis to John and Essex streets and Spooner avenue to raise them to grade. The meeting then adjourned.

DEFRAUDING RAILROAD.

ALLEGED THAT TICKETS WERE NOT CANCELLED BY CONDUCTORS.

Detectives Working on the Case Found That a Bootblack at the Highlands Was Selling $1 Tickets for 50 Cents.

For some time the officials of the Central Railroad of New Jersey have suspected that there was an organized effort to defraud them. The scheme took the form of re-selling tickets that had come into the hands of conductors for cancellation. It was noticed that during the August and September rush to the seashore the New Jersey Southern Division carried more passengers between New York and Long Branch than the company got money for—yet they all had tickets.

Inspectors supposed at first that the conductors were passing deadheads, but finding that tickets were collected in every instance they began to suspect the conductors of failing to cancel the bits of pasteboards. The gatemen were also suspected.

Detectives bought two through tickets, marked them privately at the Sandy Hook boat landing and passed on to the trains. These tickets should have been turned in for that trip. The detectives found a bootblack at the Highlands selling $1 tickets for 50 cents each. They arrested him. He had fifty or sixty tickets.

Although locked up on a technical charge of larceny he absolutely refuses to divulge the names of the men who supplied him with uncancelled tickets.

A FRATERNAL VISIT.

Knights of Pythias Members Met at Somerville—Special Trolley Car Run From Plainfield.

About sixty members of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, Knights of Pythias, of this city, visited Lodge of the Castle, No. 82, of Somerville, Monday. The Plainfield Knights were taken to Somerville by a special trolley car, along each side of which was fastened huge streamers with the name and number of the lodge. The streamers were liberally supplied with tin horns, and their departure from Plainfield and their arrival in Somerville was noisely proclaimed. Besides the Knights from this city there were also present a good delegation of Knights from Somerset and Friendship Lodges of Bound Brook and New Brunswick. It was purely a fraternal visit for the good and welfare of the order. The evening was pleasantly passed by recitations, speeches, songs, etc. Before the visitors left for home they were served with a fine collation.

YANKEE ENTERPRISE

HOW A SHREWD MULE DRIVER TURNED A HANDSOME PENNY.

He Took Into Account the American Thirst and Made No Mistake —But Nobody Knew How He Got the Ice.

Whenever any of the American soldiers went into Santiago after the surrender there was always one thing they reported on their return. That was just before you came to the city, on the big road the King's Highway—there was a place where you could get cold beer in bottles. There was a sign, "Ice Cold American Beer," in big letters a foot high, on the left hand side going in, just where the houses began to set close together, and before you got to the Spanish hospital, and the price was all right, 25 cents a bottle. This place, which no man passed without a halt unless he had not the price of a bottle or was a teetotaler, was run by a very shrewd American who had previously been a mule driver under the Commissary Department.

When he first enlisted as an enlisted cavalryman, but the casualties of war having thinned out the mule drivers at a time when bacon, hardtack and cartridges were prime necessities at the front, he volunteered to drive mules. His service expired just after he had been wounded in his commissary work. Sitting astride his wheeler one day a Spanish sharpshooter tumbled him off his perch, leaving his team to go lickity-split down the line in their own erratic, pulling six-ways-at-once fashion. He had been getting $15.60 a month in the cavalry. He might have gone on in the commissary service as a civilian mule driver at $30 a month as long as they needed him. But the steering of six obstinate, whalebacked mules over that superlatively rough Siboney road was not exactly a fascinating outlook. The novelty had worn off. And this sitting in a saddle and being popped at by unseen parties and close-shooting Mausers and smokeless powder did not appeal to his cooler judgment. It was too one-sided for the money, and no chance for even a ray of glory. Only the boss of a train knew a driver's worth, and he had no hand in writing the despatches for the public or the department. Even when he came out of the hospital with the Spaniards on the point of surrender he saw no sense in quitting his job. There ought to be, he thought, more money in less trying pursuits, and more especially he saw this when he found he had one shoulder joint that swung only half way around.

Before coming to Cuba he had been a shipper in a Rochester brewery. As soon as he got into Santiago he noted the dearth of beer in that city. He described the situation concisely in a collect cable despatch to his old firm: "Beer famine. An answer told him that a shipment had been on the way for a week consigned to a Cuban with a French name doing business on Calle Marina. This denied intimated that he might head off the native. He met the Cuban and genially led him out to the American camp. There he led him on canned beef and bacon, and incidentally secured the bill of lading. Later he lost the native in the mazes of a cavalry camp where he had disappeared him moving suspiciously into tents. The Cuban explained to the scoffing sentry that he was searching for his cousin. His adventures in the guard tent for the next three days will probably furnish the Cuban with thrilling evening talks to his grandchildren a half century from now. The Americans were not enthusiastic admirers of the Cubans.

Meanwhile the American ex-mule owner paid out the bulk of the goods when they came, and cabled for more.

He saw the possibilities in a thirsty army. He found a suitable shack on the much trafficked road at the edge of the town. This he pre-empted after a moderate resistance by the two big Bay halfbreeds who were sleeping there; exactly how he never told, though he dwelt with much minuteness on other parts of his tale, especially so on the Cuban's trip to his old cavalry troop. Of course it was nobody's business where he got the ice so long is there was enough to keep the beer properly cold.

His judgment of an unprecedented American thirst was justified by the returns. Across a plank stretched from one barrel to another men in dirty brown or blue threw silver quarters at him, and he threw bottles of Rochester beer back at them. And the men who were giving up the money considered that the ex-mule driver was doing them a favor to sell it so reasonably. Before the bones of the Santiago battlefield came to this place they usually stayed till they were out of money. They never got drunk, be it known; they never had money enough. Between the consignments the dealer would sit in his door and lament with passing inquiring friends over the wide disparity of demand and supply. When the soldiers broke camp for home late in August they passed this dealer's place on the way to town. In answer to many touching pantomimic appeals he replied in expressive gesture that he had just sold out.

"Great business," he called out after the last flies. As the men looked regretfully back they saw him waving an arm that moved only half way around. It is said that he moved into the heart of Santiago after the original army went home. No doubt his American enterprise is being duly rewarded down there.

PORTUGAL'S QUEEN.

HELPS TO RULE ONE OF THE LEAST PROGRESSIVE NATIONS IN EUROPE.

She is Very Much in Love With Her Husband and Studied Medicine to Cure His Ills—Has Established a Free Clinic in Lisbon for the Benefit of Poor Children.

Queen Amelie of Portugal is an advanced woman, though she is Queen of one of the least progressive nations in Europe, and a daughter of the conservative house of Bourbon. When this gay and pretty princess, who had been brought up in England, married blonde and good-natured King Carlos I. of Portugal she did what few royal ladies do—she fell in love with her husband. No humble Darby and Joan ever lived in more peaceful conjugal content than these two young royalties. Not only does Queen Amelie think her husband the best of men, but she has been most proud of his blonde but rather chubby beauty, and great has been her grief over his yearly increase in weight. Some time ago King Carlos' figure went the way common to most unfortunately stout men, and though he has borne the loss with princely good nature, to Queen Amelie it was a deep source of distress. After traveling about with him to many spas and cures for obesity and seeing no chiding down of the royal waist measure, this plucky woman set to work to achieve a sufficient knowledge of medicine to enable her to conquer her husband's one weakness.

For five years the Queen has studied medicine under the ablest physicians in Portugal, and at length took her degree of M. D. after passing the most rigorous examinations. Since her debut as a full-fledged doctor of medicine she has actually been able to do more for her husband's health than any of the great specialists to whom he has resorted.

QUEEN AMELIE OF PORTUGAL.

But this good lady does not apply her scientific knowledge to selfish purposes alone. She has established in Lisbon a free clinic, where poor children of the city receive treatment, often at the Queen's own hands, and thus, by her noble sympathy and tender regard for the people, she has gained a unique position as a sort of nurse, mother and friend, as well as a sovereign.

A Cooking Thermometer.

A cooking thermometer is one of the blessings of the modern household. Every housekeeper knows that temperature is the secret of successful cooking, and these useful little articles keep strict account of what the oven is doing. The exact temperature at which different food preparations should be cooked is being taught by the new methods, and the woman who trusts to intuition is or ought to be shelved. Intuition is a good thing, a safe thing to follow in the matter of choosing friends, and, perhaps, in a few other cases, but not in cooking. There's nothing but actual hard facts and the results will reward you. The cooking thermometer brings success not only with bread, but with cake and pastry. Meat cannot receive much injury from its absence, since a degree more or less in cooking is hardly noticed.

Women Guides in Berlin.

Berlin has now women guides for the city. They are partly elderly, partly middle-aged ladies, with a certain amount of knowledge of the world, some acquaintance with languages and an assured and amiable demeanor, to whose care lone female travelers or the lady traveling parties recently imported from Scandinavia and America intrusts themselves. Most of these resolute persons are Russians or Austrians. They also do shopping and other business for people living out of town.—London Globe.

Linen Chest Catalogue.

The "Linen Chest Catalogue" will prove a welcome gift to mistresses of well ordered homes. If fancy work is considered, this is a bright and shining example. Its cover is appropriately embroidered with graceful sprays of flax blossoms, on wash art linen, and encloses leaves sufficient to bear record of every piece of linen, its size, quality and age.

To Tighten Cane-Bottomed Chairs.

The cane bottoms of chairs can be made tight by supporting the chair and moistening the seat thoroughly by washing it off with a sponge with hot water, so that the canework becomes completely soaked. Then place the chair in a strong draught of dry air, and allow it to dry thoroughly.

A Game of Brides.

Smolensk, in Russia, has a peculiar lottery four times a year. A young girl is raffled for in 5,000 one-ruble shares. The winner marries the girl and receives the money from the lottery as her dowry. The girl, however, may refuse to marry the winner, in which case the money from the lottery is divided between them

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that if one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for them?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said: "The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the influential character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfaction with them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS
RIPANS
ONE GIVES RELIEF

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician, but called so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having used Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what I always demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $50 a year. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar." All the items of this interview there were present two days before we specially objected to their appearing in testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this she was induced to consent, "as there may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending the Tabules to any one afflicted as I was." When asked about my case in the papers enabled some other person similarly afflicted to be as greatly benefited as I have been, I see no objection to the matters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES is packed in a paper carton (without glass) to sell for five cents at any drug store—Ten to Five Cents. The Ripans Tabules are also sold by druggists generally. The five-cent packet (10 tabules) can be had by mail by sending seven cents to the Ripans Chemical Co., No. 10 Spruce St., New York. The twelve-cent bottle (60 tabules) can be had by mail by sending twenty cents. RIPANS TABULES may also be had of some druggists throughout Europe, who are agents and of some liquor stores and bottle shops.

ALFRED SPEER,
THE ORIGINAL
Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

URGE CITY TO OWN WATER SUPPLY PLANT.

Advancement Association Advocates Municipal Ownership.

DISCUSSION OF THE IDEA.

THE WASHINGTONVILLE TROLLEY ALSO COMES UP AGAIN.

Only One Man Opposes the Extension of the Trolley in That Direction—Resolution Urging Local Government to Acquire Water Supply System—Praise for Admiral Dewey—Other Business

If the business men of this city could have been present at last Tuesday's meeting of the Plainfield Advancement Association, they would have been surprised at the interest displayed by the members. The Board of Trade will have to look to its laurels if it expects to keep pace with the Advancement Association. There was a good attendance last night, and a number of business men applied and were received into membership.

If the efforts being put forth by President Smalley and the members of the Association to benefit the city and borough do not meet with success than it will not be because of hard work. There are several projects on foot to bring about reforms, among them being in relation to lower railway fares, cheaper water rates and a reductions in the price of gas. The principal object to be attained at present by the Association, however, is in regard to the ultimate ownership of the water works or the establishment by the city of a new plant.

Owing to the enthusiasm of some of the members, it was thought advisable last evening to dispense with the minutes and proceed at once to business. Among the guests present were Assemblyman E. E Cooper, of Warrenville, and F. W. Wohlfurt, of Washingtonville.

In opening the meeting President Smalley spoke at some length of the great possibilities for the city and the borough if they were made more attractive and some inducements were held out to the people who desire to make make their homes here.

Secretary Martine said he believed the best way to induce people to locate in Plainfield was to make the city more attractive and by making the cost of living as low as it was consistent with good service. At present outsiders considered that Plainfield was an expensive place to live in. The water rents were outrageously high, he said, and as was also the gas. Secretary Martine cited an instance of a gentleman who formerly lived in Plainfield, but who moved his family to Brooklyn because the water rents and the gas charges here were exorbitant. To this city he had paid $24 a quarter for water, while in Brooklyn he paid but $3 a quarter, and for gas he paid but 80 cents a thousand, while in this city he was compelled to pay $1.80 per thousand. In conclusion Secretary Martine strongly advocated the municipal ownership of the water works in Plainfield. He then offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, An adequate and cheap water supply is of a prime necessity for the well-being and prosperity of every city; therefore be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Plainfield Advancement Association that the city of Plainfield and borough of North Plainfield should own and control their own water supply. And to this end we urge upon the Common Councils of this city and the borough to take steps that shall bring about municipal ownership of the present plant; provided, however, that the same can be purchased at a fair figure. Or, failing in that, that action be taken by said Councils to build a plant for the city and borough."

Elston M. French said that he thoroughly indorsed what Secretary Martine had said, and he was in hearty sympathy with the ideas conveyed in the resolution. He also said that he understood that the village of Fair Haven, Vt., had constructed its own water works and that municipal ownership had been a decided success. Remarks were also made along these lines by other members, who were deeply impressed with the suggestions that had been made in relation to the ownership of the water works. Upon motion of Frank Rowley the secretary was directed to send a copy of the resolution to both Councils.

F. W. Wohlfurt, of Washingtonville, was then introduced and spoke at considerable length upon the importance of having the Somerset trolley line extended to Washingtonville. He asked the co-operation of the asso-

SAID HE WOULDN'T GO TO JAIL, BUT HE DID.

Roundsman Frederickson Had a Tussle With Young Ross.

SENT TO JAIL FOR 30 DAYS.

QUARRELED WITH HIS FATHER IN LATTER'S RESTAURANT.

Had Made a Boast That No Policeman Could Take Him to Jail, but Roundsman Frederickson Convinced Him of His Error—Mayor Decided That Term in Jail Would be Best for Him.

It has been a boast of William Ross, Jr., that there wasn't a policeman in Plainfield who could arrest him. Some time ago he was wanted on the charge of non-support brought by his wife. He managed to evade Patrolman Wendzenrode who tried to serve the warrant. Tuesday Roundsman Frederickson tried his hand and landed Ross in the city jail after a long and hard combat. As a result Ross is languishing in the county jail for a term of thirty days.

Ross, Sr., is the proprietor of the Delmonico Oyster and Chop House on Park avenue. Father and son do not get along very well. Young Ross lives at 827 West Second street with his wife and seven children. The police say that he does little else beside drink rum while his father and father-in-law prevent the wife and children from starving.

The immediate cause of Ross' arrest was his generous use of profane language in front of his father's store Young Ross went into the place last Tuesday and soon engaged in a lively war of words with his father. A crowd soon gathered Compliments were flying. Then Roundsman Frederickson arrived on the scene. Then elder Ross asked the officer to arrest his son. The son wanted to fight and attacked the officer. Frederickson found it necessary to down his prisoner and put the nippers on him.

Ross refused to go to jail, but Frederickson persevered. The young man, who had imbibed sufficiently to be ugly, fought all the way. Frederickson succeeded in dragging his prisoner as far as the railroad bridge when Patrolman Higgins came along and together they carried the kicking, squirming man to the lockup and deposited him in a cell.

He was arraigned before His Honor, Mayor Bickfelow, yesterday, his father appearing against him The elder Ross became visibly excited as the trial progressed

"You scoundrel," was the way he ended his remarks. "You're no use, you loafer." Then the Mayor rapped for order. Father and son occupied most of the time in contradicting each other's statements. The story of the fight enroute to the lockup satisfied the Mayor that Ross needed thirty days in jail to consider the matter.

RAILROAD WRECK AVERTED.

Passengers Unaware the Axle Was Broken Till Danger Was Past.

The eastbound Atlantic City express had a narrow escape from being wrecked Tuesday afternoon at North Elizabeth owing to the breaking of an axle under the forward truck of the tender.

The train consisted of an engine and four vestibule cars filled with passengers. The engineer was Bert Stulz, and the fireman J. Dorwart, both of Atlantic City. The train was under slow headway at the time, having just made a stop at Elizabeth. The broken axle ripped fishplates off the rails and and tore up the ties until the train was stopped.

The passengers did not know what had happened until the train stopped. They were transferred to another train.

Mr. Hillpot represents a syndicate of New Yorkers, who will erect stores and a theatre.

WILL DEVOTE DAY TO LAWN TENNIS

Hillside Club to Hold Championship Tournament.

ON SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7.

WILL BE HELD ON PRIVATE COURTS OF COUNCILMAN MELLICK.

Championship Cup Now Held by Henry V. Ryder—He Will Play Winner of the Tournament—Old and New Players Will Contest—Much Interest in Contest Shown—Championship to be Revived

The Hillside Tennis and Golf Club has decided to devote one afternoon at least to the game of tennis, once so overwhelmingly popular with the members of that club. The contest for the tennis championship of the club is to be revived and the club tournament to decide the holder of the club championship trophy has been set for Saturday afternoon, October 7th.

Since the club moved into its new quarters on the hill there have been no tennis courts in connection with the club house. George P. Mellick, who has been one of the strongest supporters of the game in Plainfield, has offered the use of the fine courts adjoining his bungalow, near the club house. The tournament will consequently be held there.

Arrangements have been made for the tournament and a number of entries have been promised. It will be open only to club members. The club cup has been won twice by Henry V. Ryder, the present holder. The winner of the tournament will therefore meet Ryder to decide the championship for the year. If Ryder wins, the cup will become his personal property, having been won three times.

There are still in the club a number of the old enthusiasts who used to take such an interest in the game of tennis and appear at the various tournaments. Most of them have promised to be on hand. Then there are a number of new members who have played the game more or less and are willing to try for the championship.

The contest will be closed several days before the tournament and the drawing of the players will take place. If possible, several of the matches of the preliminary and first rounds will be played in the morning so that the tournament can be completed that night. It is doubtful if the championship round can be decided that night and the match between the winner of the tournament and Ryder will probably be played at a later date.

RUMPUS IN THE ALLEY.

Lee Wells Indulged in Too Much Red Eye and Did Exciting Stunts.

Fairchild's Alley had another visitation from the police last Tuesday. Patrolman Higgins came in the alley to find Special Officer "Jim" Babbitt, Czar of the Alley, rather busy in trying to keep one of his neighbors from cleaning out the neighborhood.

Lee Wells, a colored man of usually excellent character, has partaken too freely and was preparing to do all sorts of stunts. Higgins took him in charge. Wells was for going home again but the officer impressed upon him the necessity of continuing to the jail.

In consideration that Lee Wells had behaved himself in the past and never given the police any trouble before, Mayor Rockfellow suspended sentence yesterday.

High Courts of Foresters.

The thirteenth annual convention of the High Court of New Jersey Foresters was held at Hoboken yesterday. High Chief Ranger L. Titsworth, of Dunellen, presided. Watchung Lodge of this city was represented by Chief Ranger Remsen and Financial Secretary Orra Rodgers. The report of High Secretary J. H. Dravis, of Elizabeth, showed that the order now has a membership of 3,660 in this State, with $3,000 in the high court treasury and no liabilities.

Peck to be Patriotic.

Peck, the dry goods man, has not been waited upon by any committee seeking to have Friday observed as a holiday, but he announces that he will comply with the Mayor's proclamation and keep his store closed all day Friday irrespective of anyone else.

Six Hundred Men on the Roll of Contractor Scrello—Italian Employes Paid According to Their Tickets

The Italians employed in building the trolley lines of the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company were all paid off last Saturday. It required $8,500 to meet the pay roll Saturday The men are paid every two weeks. Judge E. R. Collins acts as paymaster, and he had his hands full in seeing that some 600 men received their pay. Paymaster Collins drove all along the line between Westfield and Roselle and to Scotch Plains. Each Italian workman has a number and ticket identifying him. The rules of the railway company regarding the payment of wages are as follows:

The men will be paid every two weeks. Each man will be paid only his own ticket. Men having two tickets will be discharged. When men are discharged they will be paid upon presenting ticket at office. Men leaving the work of their own accord will not be paid until the regular pay day. Any man fund creating discontent among the men will be immediately discharged. The company has no interest in any boarding house, and the men will not be discharged for boarding where they please.

"POINT BREEZE CAMP."

A POPULAR RESORT FOR PLAINFIELDERS IN THE SUMMER.

It is on the Shores of Lake Wentworth up in New Hampshire—Plainfielders Who Have Enjoyed Life There.

There have been a number of Plainfielders this summer who have discovered the delights and pleasures afforded by an outing at "Point Breeze Camp," charmingly situated on the banks of Lake Wentworth, four miles from Wolfaboro, N. H. The season at Point Breeze Camp has been the most successful since it was started way back in the '90's. The camp was founded by E. E. Carhart. In 1890, C. H. Stevens, the present proprietor of the Camp, visited the place and was so pleased that the following year he built a cottage there and afterwards took charge of the entire resort. In 1895 an addition to the camp was built and named "Murray Hill Hotel," in honor of J. W. Murray of this city, who was one of the early guests.

The guests at the camp are like one great family and many pleasant days have been spent there. Lake Wentworth is one of the most famous bass fishing grounds of New England. This year the largest catch was made by Mrs. J. W Murray, of this city, the fish weighing four and three quarter pounds.

The Plainfielders who have found their way to this delightful resort during the past summer were: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sanford, Miss Sadie L. Sandford, Mr and Mrs. Townsend Rushmore, Miss Mary Rushmore, Murray Rushmore, Mr. and Mrs. W J. Roome, Clarence Roome, Howard Roome and Reginald Roome, Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Jr., Miss Virginia Hegeman, Harold Hegeman, Cupid Hegeman, Mr. and Mrs J. F. Scott, J. T. Scott, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McGee and Willard Wadsworth. H. D. Brewster and family and R. E. Tilney and family, all of New York, well-known here, were also among the guests.

MR GOURLEY DOES NOT INTEND TO BE PUSHED.

He Replies to Address Issued by Daly Cohorts.

ANSWERS THEIR ATTACK.

DECLARES THEIR GRIEVIENCES NOT TO BE WELL FOUNDED.

State Chairman Says That Boy a Will be Nominated and That the State Committee Has Acted Entirely Right in all Its Proceedings—Says That He Does Not Propose to Get Out of the Race.

Paterson, Sept. 27.—William B Gourley, chairman of the New Jersey State Democratic Committee, took occasion yesterday to reply vigorously to "An address to the voters of New Jersey," was promulgated yesterday by Congressman Daly and the rest of the committee of fifteen appointed in a recent silver conference in the Ridgway House in Philadelphia.

"Will I resign?" said Mr. Gourley, when asked whether he intended to step down and out, in compliance with the demand. "I am not of the retiring kind. I shall not be led into any controversy with the gentlemen. My sole desire is for party harmony. If these gentlemen do not desire party success, I am not with them. My quarrels are with my opponents in party.

"I may point out that the only fact set forth in this address, concerning the State Committee, is that the State Committee defied the loyal Democrats of the State by refusing to receive into their committee a true Democrat, a man chosen by his party to represent them on that committee, and that the committee did appoint one who was not accepted by his county as a consistent Democrat. This statement, which is the basis of the whole address, as far as it concerns the State Committee, is untrue. The reference is to the county of Burlington.

"Since 1895, the year of creating the State committee by selecting a representative from each county, it has been the practice to allow the county committee, in case of vacancy, to propose a man to fill the vacancy. A petition was presented from Burlington county in favor of E. P. Budd, signed by thirty-four out of thirty-nine members of the County Executive Committee. Another petition was presented, signed by five out of seven of what was called a central committee. This committee is named by the chairman of the County convention. The other committee is elected and is the body that named the election officers.

"The State committee unanimously adopted the recommendation of the executive committee and named Mr. Budd. It was stated that he voted for Mr. Bryan in 1896 and contributed toward the campaign fund, and was on the stump for Bryan in that fight.

"The signers of this address therefore have signed their names to a false statement, and I am sure will regret to learn this is so. Every one of them, I am confident, would have voted the same way if he had been in the meeting of the State committee.

"The gentlemen proclaim themselves as supporters of William J. Bryan. If this is so, it is not evident to them that neither he nor Mr. Budd, mentioned in the National convention and in the State convention than that of Bryan? If they want to see him elected, and have at heart the success of the party, they should, like all loyal Democrats, work with us to achieve success, and not attempt to create a disunited party. The new rule regarding county committees goes into effect this fall. We shall have a better organization than our opponents throughout the State, and, with prudent counsel, harmony and energetic work, shall restore to the Democracy its former record as the dominant political party of the State."

FINGERHUTH NOW UNDER ARREST, TOO.

Locked up in Somerset County Jail With Wife and Son.

CAUSE FOR IT IS A SECRET.

SUPPOSED THAT HE WILL BE HELD AS AN ACCESSORY TO MURDER.

Grand Jury Expected to Bring in an Indictment This Afternoon—A Claim Now Made That Roehricht Had a Wife and Children, Whom He Deserted, Now Living in Germany.

Somerville, Sept. 27—Developments in the Roehricht murder case are expected this afternoon. Yesterday the Grand Jury listened to the testimony in the case. It was the first to be brought to the attention of the Grand Jury, and, although there is a large batch of other cases to be considered at this session it is understood that the Jury will bring in an indictment in the case without waiting to consider any of the others.

Special Officer Totten went to Plainfield yesterday afternoon and went to the Allen farm in Washington Valley where Theodore Fingerhuth has been living since he was released the day after the shooting.

Fingerhuth was placed under arrest and brought to this place on the train leaving Plainfield at 8:12 o'clock last night. He was locked up in the county jail. Although no statement was made by the prosecution it is understood that Fingerhuth's arrest means that he will be held as an accessory to the crime.

Councilman Walter L. Hetfield and William G. DeMeza, counsel for Mrs. Fingerhuth, were notified by the Prosecutor to be here this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Shortly after that it is expected that the Grand Jury will bring in an indictment in the case. There will undoubtedly be an indictment of Mrs. Fingerhuth for murder with Theodore and Oscar Fingerhuth named as accessories.

It is possible that the prisoners may be arraigned before Judge Magie in the Court of Oyer and Terminer later in the afternoon. If not arraigned this afternoon it will take place in a day or so. Counsel for the Fingerhuths will then enter a plea of not guilty for all of them and then a date will be set for the trial.

Judging from what has been said in the case, one of the principal arguments of the defence will be that Roehricht was not the good man he has been painted and that he greatly overstepped all his rights and privileges, and that he went so far that the shooting was justifiable. A man named Charles Schrann, said to be prominent in the meat trust in New York, will undoubtedly be called upon by the defence to tell his story at the trial.

He says, it is alleged by the defence, that Roehricht has a wife and two children living in Germany. The wife is his sister. His father, Schrann says, started Roehricht in business in Berlin, but that the latter left there suddenly leaving only debts behind him. The German Mrs. Roehricht then secured a divorce in the German courts which is not recognized in New York, however. There are two children, a son twenty-six years old, and a daughter twenty four years old. Schrann declares that they will institute proceedings to recover their share of the property left by Roehricht in in New York and at Somerset Park. Schrann says that the woman in New York, supposed to be Roehricht's wife, was his housekeeper.

W. B Heidloff Takes a Wife.

NO BUSINESS TO BE TRANSACTED FRIDAY.

The Day to Be Observed In Honor of Dewey.

MOVEMENT IS IN FAVOR.

ALL THE MERCHANTS AGREE TO CLOSE THEIR STORES.

Proclamations of Mayors Rockfellow and Smalley Will be Generally Observed—Uncertain Ones Get Into the Movement When They Saw the Idea was Meeting With General Favor.

A goodly share of the population of Plainfield will move to New York Friday to honor America's naval hero, Admiral George Dewey. Those that will remain will, most of them, enjoy a holiday. The proclamation of the Mayors of the city and borough asking that Friday be observed as a holiday have had the desired result. All the stores, with the exception of the drug stores, barber shops and a few others, will close tomorrow night and remain so until Saturday morning.

Several of the clerks interested in the general observation of Dewey Day made the rounds of most of the stores and met with almost unanimity in favor of closing Friday. There were a few merchants who were inclined to hang back and see what the rest were going to do. When they found that the day was to be so generally observed, they joined in the procession and agreed to keep their establishments closed all day.

The department and dry-goods stores are all going to close. The shoe dealers are unanimous for the closing movement. All the groceries will shut their doors. The hardware men were among the first to agree to observe the day. The meat markets favor general closing. Then there are a number of other stores that have decided to make no attempt to do business that day.

In the borough, the day will be as generally observed as in Plainfield. The merchants there all favor closing and there will be no more business there Friday than in the city.

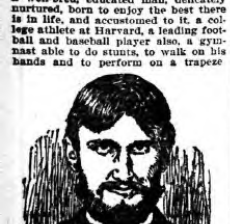
SCORNS HIS MILLIONS

JAMES E. HOW LIVING THE CHRIST LIFE.

His Grandfather Was the Celebrated Engineer—He Has Taken Monkish Vows to Uplift His Fellow Men. How He Proposes to Do It.

When all the world is struggling, working and exerting every effort to get rich, a young man, owner in his own rights of an estate said to be worth a million, lays it aside to dress in homespun and take up his place beside the lowliest of his fellow men. He is a well-bred, educated man, delicately nurtured, born to enjoy the best there is in life, and accustomed to it, a college athlete at Harvard, a leading football and baseball player also, a gymnast able to do stunts, to walk on his hands and to perform on a trapeze



[James Eads How.]

Later he was a student at Oxford. He is withall a man of brawn and sinew and strength of mind.

He arrived in New York City recently from the West, feeling that he had a great task before him and seeking the means to perform it. He announced to a friend that he wanted work. The friend, who finds work for hundreds of unfortunate men every year in the Bureau of Charities in Brooklyn, sought it for him also, just as he does for tramps who want to reform, for sailors who have outgrown their usefulness at sea and for the riffraff of humanity. There was almost nothing the rich man could not do; even a menial place, it was said, would be acceptable to him.

Imagine the Christ as the great Italian masters have painted Him and the reader will get an idea of the man. A great deal more might be said, for his personality, face and physical proportions carry an irresistible suggestion of the Saviour to almost everyone who meets him. He is a gaunt, spare man, with a long, slim face, long, slim arms and hands.

This interesting person's name is James Eads How. James B. Eads, the great engineer who built the Mississippi River bridges at St. Louis and also the jetties at its mouth, was his grandfather. Mr. How reveres the memory of his grandfather above that of all men. He emulates his grandfather's presistence, and like his grandfather he is determined to accomplish what he undertakes. It took nerve and grit to become foremost as a college athlete; it has taken more grit to renounce vast wealth and take monkish vows.

When Mr. How arose one day last week a warm breakfast awaited him on the table of a college chum who was his host. He did not eat it, not because he could not afford it, for it was free. He went instead to the Medical Mission in Fulton street, Brooklyn (walked over a mile to reach it), and there he bought a breakfast of pea soup, bread and coffee, which cost three cents. He is a strict vegetarian, and eats no meat. It took grit, an observer thought, to leave the beefsteak and savory coffee of his host and eat the pea soup in the Medical Mission on a hard bench and at a wooden table without any cloth. It would take grit, at least on the part of most men, but it seems to be no effort for Mr. How.

As he sat at the table an orthodox preacher accosted him. The preacher did not quite understand Mr. How, but it was apparent that he understood the preacher.

"What kind of Christian work are you engaged in?" asked the preacher.

"The hardest thing I have to do," Mr. How replied, "is to get away from the Christ and the Church, as commonly understood, so as to use what judgment I have myself."

Mr. How went back to his ideals to the beginning of the Christian era, and started on the plan of the early followers of Christ. He resolved to renounce the world and extinguish himself. He will not talk about himself, and he means to go through life with just as little as he can subsist on, doing all he can for others. The vanity of ministers eager for big salaries and preaching in superb churches he contrasted with the early apostles, and was not long in making up his mind which to follow, for he had already resolved to devote his life to Christian work. The early monks had subordinated themselves as the Christ did. Mr. How would not take Monkish vows except by resolve in his own mind, but having once resolved nothing should swerve him from his course. He began by extinguishing himself so far as he could by simplicity of attire, abstinence and frugal living.

A friend remembers when he arrived at Meadville, Penn., from Harvard, eight or nine years ago to attend the evangelical school. He had a banjo and a dress suit in his outfit. He was one of the fashionable young men and a favorite with the fair sex. When he left, the banjo, the dress suit and his social pleasures had been cast aside forever.

Mr. How has spent years in thought, the outcome of which is that the meetings was a plan to establish a new brotherhood among men, where it is, he thinks, sadly needed. It is the Brotherhood of Daily Life. One might think that, having done so much for it, Mr. How would take the highest office in the direction of its affairs, but not so. He would not put himself forward in any way. He would ont seem to put the Brotherhood forward, either, save in its teachings.

The plan of the Brotherhood is taken wholly from some of the orders in the Church, and the Brotherhood is to be engaged in such work as the Christ did. Mr. How would not take Monkish vows except by resolve in his own mind, but having once resolved nothing should swerve him from his course. He began by extinguishing himself so far as he could by simplicity of attire, abstinence and frugal living.

POPULAR SUPERSTITIONS.

Character In Shoes—The Four Leaved Clover Charm.

It is said that character may be read from an old pair of shoes. If the sole and heel are equally worn, the wearer is wise and energetic if a man, faithful and orderly if a woman. When the inner edges are worn, it signifies feebleness and irresolution in a man, sweetness and modesty in a woman. When the greater wear appears at the outer edges, it is an indication that a man is obstinate, persevering and bold, and that a woman is full of resolution and authority.

Some women have or profess to have a horror of spiders. The spider is, however, a bringer of good fortune, according to superstitious authorities, and to kill a spider is to incur ill luck.

TAFFETA COSTUME.

The four leaved clover continues to be the favorite pocte bonheur and is seen in the favorite pocte bonheur and is seen in gold, silver, enamel and jewels, or the real clover is incased in crystal and set like a jewel.

The picture shows a gown of sky blue taffeta having a plaited skirt, over which is a tunic of blue taffeta embroidered with white silk. The bodice, which is fitted at the back, has bolero fronts embroidered with white, closing by a white satin bow and gold buckle over a blouse of puffed blue taffeta. The sleeves are plaited across the top and have embroidered caps. The white satin belt is fastened by a gold buckle. The hat of white felt is trimmed with black plumes and pink roses.

FALL FASHIONS.

White Costumes and White Trimmings For Other Gowns.

White costumes are still much in evidence. In cloth, serge and crepe de chine they adapt themselves for autumn wear, both for in and out of doors.

A novel idea in tailor made gowns is the combination of pique and cloth, not merely the use of a pique shirt waist or vest with a cloth gown or the addition of removable pique collars, cuffs and revers, but the employment of stitched bands, applications and trimmings of pique sewed permanently on the cloth; also the cloth is sometimes perforated in designs which reveal pique beneath. The pique is usually white, and the transitory nature of these costumes is too self evident to require comment.

Many gowns for autumn and winter are devoid of trim, a border band of cloth, plain or embroidered. The cloth employed is very thin and fine.

The picture illustrates a tailor made jacket of red cloth. It is tight fitting and fastens disgonally with two groups of crystal buttons. The basque and revers are slashed, and all edges, as well as the sleeves, are bordered with rows of black mohair braid. A white linen collar and shirt bosom, with a black cravat, are worn, and a hat of black braided felt with red bowers, white lace and black quills.

Clear Cut.

The Rev. F. W. Groomstreet furnishes the London Spectator with an amusing epitaph.

When he was curate of Tetbury, Gloucestershire, in the fifties, the parish church contained, and no doubt still contains, a marble slab near the west door inscribed as follows:

"In a vault underneath lie several of the Saunderses late of this parish. Particulars the last day will disclose. Amen."

THE AUTOMOBILE FAD.

How It Has Spread From Paris to Newport.

The acme of up to date smartness is to own and operate an automobile. In Paris the use of the horseless carriage has become a craze. Along the Boulevard Haussmann, the Avenue Bois de Boulogne and the Champs Elysees automobiles are on pleasant afternoons as beautiful as equipages drawn by horses. It is estimated by the time of the world's fair in 1900 there will not be a single horse left in harness on the streets of Paris. The Duchesse d'Uzes, one of the most original of the fashionable grand ladies of Paris, introduced the fad to society. She was the first woman to propel her own motor carriage along the boulevards and through the Bois. Her son, who early became devoted to automobiling, was her companion. They were noted scorchers and had at least one encounter with the authorities. They were enjoined from further fast riding.

It was not very long until fashionable Parisian women were daft about the "teuf teuf," their nickname for the horseless carriage, given because of the noise the French petroleum supplied motors make when in action. Parties of automobilists are to be frequently seen on fine days wending their way out the beautiful roads to Versailles or to Fontainebleau. It is no unusual thing for parties to start early in the morning and make the run to Versailles in three hours, a distance of over 40 miles. They take breakfast at the end of the trip, the breakfast having been ordered in advance at hotel or club by the host or hostess.

Very ardent automobilists even make the trip to Nice or Trouville, Monte Carlo or other fashionable resorts in their horseless carriages, sometimes sending the machines back by rail and returning in that way.

The European motor carriages are large and supplied with every convenience for long trips, and as continental railway carriages are far from models of luxury the auto carriages are appreciated by the very rich.

Even baby carriages in Paris are now supplied with automatic motors, so that the nursemaids in the Bois de Boulogne have practically a sinecure and unrivaled leisure for flirting with the tall gendarmes.

In America, particularly in Newport, New York and Chicago, the use of the automobile is rapidly becoming a favorite diversion of society. Many wealthy families expect next season to dispense with their horses and use the horseless carriages entirely. The cost is less and the convenience greater. Besides, it is now considered the ultra chic thing to do.

The cost of an automobile is about $2,000. The American horseless carriages are run by electricity, which is cheaper and less objectionable in many ways than petroleum. After the carriage has been purchased it costs less than keeping horses and carriage if one considers the wages of a coachman, expense of harness and cost of feeding and caring for a pair of fine horses.

There is on Fifty-second street, New York, a firm that takes charge of the automobiles belonging to private families. They supply motormen who wear the livery of the family and charge only for the time the man is employed. They rent automobiles for the month for about $150, and the owner may have his monogram or coat of arms on the hired equipage. A telephone message at any hour will bring the carriage to their door, the company storing the motor with electricity so that it is always in readiness.

In Paris automobile parades and automobile racing are popular. Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who is noted for the originality of her entertainments, introduced the automobile parade at Newport recently. One of the parade, in which 19 vehicles, containing ladies and gentlemen whose names are familiar to society columns, passed down Bellevue avenue, where they were viewed in their flower decorated automobiles by thousands of admiring spectators, they enjoyed a funny contest on the grounds of Mrs. Belmont's residence, Belcourt.

Obstacles, such as dummy nursemaids and carriages, pedestrians, wagons and even stuffed horses, were placed about the grounds, and the contestants were required to pass these without grazing them. It was a severe test, yet only one slight accident occurred. Prizes were awarded to the most proficient automobilists and prizes for the most handsomely decorated carriages.

POOR PRUDENCIA.

How the War Has Saddened the Heart of One Little Filipino Girl.

A Story Of Reaf Life In Manila.

By Eliza Archard Conner.

POOR PRUDENCIA.
[From a photograph.]

You will thank the Lord you live in free America when you read the following story of a girl in Manila. It is quite true.

In the Philippine Islands persons of mixed foreign and Malay blood are called mestizos; feminine, mestiza. Sometimes these mestizos display thrift and good management, like white people, particularly if a proportion of the race mixture is Chinese. Such persons often become wealthy or inherit fortunes from their ancestors, and the richer they are the more they imitate the Spanish style of living, laziness and all.

One of the cardinal tenets of the Spanish social fabric is that a girl is to be watched and tended precisely as if she were a baby or perhaps a criminal or an idiot. She must not take a walk, must not work or get much education, must not be driven out in a carriage by the coachman, unless somebody is with her to prevent the total depravity of her nature from asserting itself. She is not allowed to know anything of the world till after she is married, and not even then unless she is a woman of unusual brains and independence and takes the bit in her own teeth.

The logical result is that the most absolutely useless human being on this planet is the average Spanish woman in Manila, whether maid, wife or widow.

Now let us go on with my story. Prudencia's father and mother were rich mestizos. They reared the girl in pinchero imitation of the Spanish style, showing thereby the silliness and vanity of human nature, since no Spaniard of high social standing would have associated with them any more than with his own valet or stableman.

The Americans came to Manila, changing the whole face of things. The Filipino insurrection flamed up in a night. Our soldiers fired native houses and cut up plantations for miles around Manila to drive out the rebels and protect the city.

Among those whose possessions went up in smoke were the parents of Prudencia. In one day their chocolate and cocoanut groves, banana gardens and ricefields were leveled to the ground, and of their home only the brick steps were left.

Homeless, ruined, not knowing whence their next week's living would come, they sped into Manila, the city where the American government feeds the wives and children of the insurrectos who are fighting against it. The father and mother consulted an American lawyer to ascertain whether they could recover damages for the loss of their property, seeing that they themselves had not been its enemies.

Oh, yes, they could, the attorney told them. The great and good United States government always paid for property necessarily destroyed in the war when it belonged to persons not in rebellion. But it would require time to recover what was due them.

The attorney showed himself kindly and interested in their welfare, so that one morning they made bold to consult him on a matter that vitally concerned them. How were they going to live while the lawyer was recovering their possession?

That was more than even he could tell them. Had they no way of earning money to tide over the waiting? he asked. No; there was no way, there was nothing. At least there was one thing, but it was not thought of, not for a moment.

"What is that?" asked the attorney.

"There has been offered to our daughter," answered the father, "a place as teacher in one of the municipal schools. It is a primary school, to teach young children, and our Prudencia could do this well."

"Oh, then," said the attorney, "you are provided for already."

"But, no," answered the father; "it cannot be. The little school is in Ermita. We live in the walled city, a mile and a half away. We are too poor to keep a carriage in which to send our daughter back and forth four times a day."

"But there's the street car quite convenient," said the American.

"But the senor does not understand. Her mother cannot accompany our daughter always in the tram car or go after her every noon and evening. We are too poor to hire a nurse or woman servant to do so. It would eat up all the earnings."

"But surely the senorita knows the way to her schoolhouse and can sit in the street car till she arrives at her schoolhouse."

"Oh, no, no, senor! She could never go alone. It cannot be," was the horrified answer.

It is true that Prudencia's Tagalo cousins and aunts and friends, young women with quite as much Spanish blood in their veins as she had and quite as pretty and intelligent, rode in the street car every day, and they rode barebacked and barefooted at that, and smoked cigarettes or chewed a nasty blood red betel nut on the way, quite able to take care of themselves in every respect, just as Prudencia would have been had not fate cursed her mother and father with a little money, thus enabling them to make of their daughter a cheap and monkeylike imitation of a Spanish woman. Even cigarettes and all their healthful, active life were better than hers.

The legal gentleman smiled. "Wait till the Americans have been here a year longer, and you'll let your daughter go alone anywhere she likes in the street car. You will find it will be not only safe, but entirely proper," he said.

But they only shook their heads in stupid unbelief.

The kindly attorney made another suggestion: "Rents are cheap in Ermita. Why don't you take a small house and have the whole family go and live there, somewhere near your daughter's school?"

"Even then our Prudencia would have to walk several blocks and alone four times a day," said her mother. "We could not let her do that, not ever. It is out of propriety. No, senor, alas, no! This means of living is cut off from us. We must starve or beg unless the good God helps us."

You will say that people like that ought to starve. I say so, too, the sooner the better, that they may the more speedily get off the earth and be preparing for another incarnation in which they will have more sense.

JET AND BLACK.

Both Will Be Popular During the Coming Season.

While in London I visited some of the famous "shops," as they call them, and I was struck by the rather somber appearance they presented. Black seems to be the keynote in gowns of all descriptions. Perhaps this is due in a measure to the court mourning. The Princess of Wales, however, has set the fashion of having very elaborate mourning attire, so that were it not for the crape upon it one might think some of the gowns for festal occasions.

After all, this is as it should be. There is no reason why a woman's mourning gowns should not be fashionably made. Mourning garb is depressing enough at the best. But, aside from the mourning garb, we must expect to see a great deal of black worn this season. So many rich and new black fabrics are offered that one finds choice difficult. There are the silk warp goods, endora, henrietta, melrose and drap d'ete, drap d'alma and crape cloths and blister and other crepons. All these may be worn for mourning or for any occasion not especially festive.

Black silks are almost covered with jet, embroidery picked out with jet and with jetted passementerie. One gown for a swell dinner was of black armure silk thickly sewed with jet, so that altogether it weighed nearly 40 pounds. Black velvet gowns for grand occasions and for the street will be among the handsomest of all the winter costumes.

For mourning attire there are some very handsome wraps and capes; also empire coats and other shapes, such as tight jackets and blouse effects. Some of these are of all wool goods, like the wool drap d'alma and cachemire de l'Inde. Broadcloth and venetian, melton and boucle will also be worn later in the season. All but the last two will be trimmed with crape. The melton and boucle will have black castle braid stitched on, and where buttons are required they will be of jaiin black horn. Everything in shape of wrap or jacket will have high collars, higher than ever, if possible. There is a new mantle where the body is blouse shaped and belted, with a flat revers collar and a high medici collar. The sleeves are cut like circular capes and joined. The top is sewed into the arm size, and the sleeve thus formed is left to fall in heavy folds.

For deep mourning these are quite or nearly covered with crape. Other sleeves are made very snug, almost as tight as they used to be some ten years ago, when it was said that a woman had to get up on a stepladder to get them on. The way she did it was to fall down.

The suits for what are generally called "growing girls" are very neat and pretty this season. I was looking at some cravanette suits recently. One had four clusters of soutache on the skirt, four rows on each, and the rest of it was all massed above the knees. The jacket was double breasted, but fastened with flies. It was scalloped and had several rows of soutache. Jaunty pockets and revers and coat collar finished it. The color was dark brown. Another pretty suit for a girl of 16 had the skirt of very dark blue serge made entirely plain. The jacket was of tan melton, double breasted and elegantly braided. A glance at the illustration will show how both of these looked.

For young girls there are many pretty felt hats, stitched round and round the crowns, made like Tam O'Shanters, a quill and a band are considered the right trimming for these. Others there are with more of the sailor shape, with birds, quills, plumes or rosettes of velvet or of felt as garniture. For dress occasions velvet hats of dark color with light satin pipings are handsomer. These are trimmed with loops and bows of alternate velvet and satin.

Plaids will be unusually prominent for girls this season, but for dresses only. All coats and cloaks are of mixtures or solid color in smooth faced or boucle. The woolly effects in outer garments will be carried out to a greater extent than ever before. There are some self colored camel's hairs that are as thick as fur, with long, silky hair. These will make beautiful cloaks for small children in the lighter shades of gray.

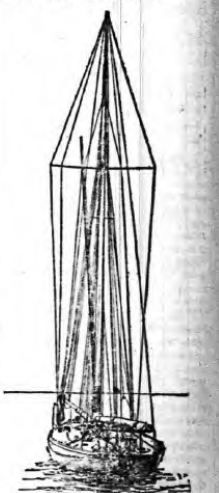
SHAMROCK'S BOOM.

THE NEW BOOM LONGER THAN THE OLD ONE.

Pictures of the New Challenger Show Her to Have Enormous Spar Plan —Headsails of Shamrock Probably Larger Than the Columbia's.

The shipbuilding firm of J. G. Fay & Co., Southampton, is constructing for the Shamrock a still larger boom than the one with which she is fitted at present, as it is thought that in the lighter atmosphere of America she will be able to carry more canvas.



SHAMROCK END ON.

The pictures of the Shamrock printed herewith are the first that have been published showing the spar plan of the challenger. It will easily be seen that the new boat has an enormous spread of canvas. Taking the water line of the yacht at 90 feet, and it is probably a little under that, the main boom measures 110 feet, and from the end of the bowsprit to the forward side of the mast is 82 feet, so that the base of the triangle for measurement is very close to 104 feet. The yacht in appearance is not unlike the Columbia, but the arrangement of sails is somewhat different. The head sails of the Shamrock are probably larger than those of the Columbia. The boom on both yachts is about the same length. The height of the mast and topmasts is very near the same, so what extra spread the Shamrock has is in her head sails.

The rigging of the yacht appears to be very light and simple. All the halyards lead through the deck and will be worked from the deck below. The masthead rigging is similar to that of the Columbia. Two shrouds lead to the bounds and two from each side of the topmast head. The spread is larger but appears to be light.

The picture of the yacht from a position aft shows her great beam and the length of the spinnaker pole, which is standing forward of the mast. The steel boom is round, not octagon shaped, like that which was carried on the Valkyrie III. Looking aft, the Shamrock has a somewhat "tubby" appearance. The construction of the boat, according to all reports, is a wonderful piece of work, and while everything has been done to make her as light as possible she is strongly put together and is braced in an ingenious way.

The Shamrock, according to reliable information, is 130 feet over all, 90 feet on the water line, and 25 feet in extreme beam. Her overhang forward is 19 feet, and aft it is 21 feet. The mast is stepped 30 feet from the forward end of the water line. It is a steel spar 106 feet long. From deck to hound it is 78 feet. The spar is made of three-eighth-inch steel, is 5 feet 9 inches in circumference and 18 inches in diameter. The bowsprit is 33 feet outboard, the gaff 68 feet and the spinnaker pole 85 feet long.

SHAMROCK'S BIG SPARS.

The sheer of the boat is straight and she looks very well. Fife always makes a pretty boat, and this one is no exception to the rule. Abroad there seems to be a disposition to find fault with the challenger. This is probably because as to be able to criticise freely if the Columbia successfully defends the cup, and it is doubtful if any reliable idea of the Shamrock's speed will be had until she appears in these waters.

Fitz May Meet McCoy.

Bob Fitzsimmons and Kid McCoy may fight before one of the New York clubs in September for the middleweight championship of the world. Plans for the meeting have been perfected, it is said, and both men are willing. The only thing left undone is the signing of the articles of agreement. Beyond a little disagreement over the stipulations of the Marquis of Queensberry rules everything is satisfactory to both men, and their signatures will be affixed to the articles when McCoy arrives from Denver within the next three weeks.

A CABIN BOY'S VIEW

THE ALABAMA-KEARSARGE DUEL TOLD BY TOM SPELLMAN,

Capt. Semmes's Speech to His Crew Before the Battle Began—The Sinking of the Alabama—Semmes's Leap Into the Sea and His Rescue.

Tom Spellman tells the story of the destruction of Admiral Raphael Semmes's battleship Alabama by the Kearsarge in June, 1864, near the coast of France, in the English Channel. Spellman is in his fifty-second year. He shipped on the Alabama as cabin boy when she was turned over by agents of Admiral Semmes at Birkenhead, England, by the Lairds on Aug. 20, 1862. Mr. Spellman, who is a genuine "old salt" gave a description of the Alabama, which, during her existence afloat with the ensign of the Confederate Navy at its masthead, was the terror of the ocean to the shipping of the United States. The Alabama was built in the Laird yard at Birkenhead under the superintendence of Capt. James D. Bullock of the Confederate Navy. She was brigantine rigged, with a maximum speed of 15 knots, which was fast time at that day. She went with sails or with steam or both. Her engine was a 300-horse-power with a condensing apparatus. The armament of the Alabama consisted of one Blakely 100-pounder rifled gun, pivoted forward; one 8-inch solid shot gun, pivoted abaft the mainmast; and eight 32-pounders in broadside. The crew consisted of 120 men and twenty-four officers. In leaving Birkenhead as a ruse an excursion was organized to Terceira, in the Azores, to which point a transport, loaded with war materials, had been sent. Once outside of Queenstown, his officers met the Alabama at Terceira. They sailed there in the Bahama. The excursionists, consisting of English ladies and gentlemen, who left Birkenhead on the Alabama, had been transferred to a tug in the Channel and sent home, so that when the Confederate Admiral took possession at Terceira he was then and there ready for his career and there was no delay in getting down to work.

The French Emperor, Napoleon III, declined to allow either the Alabama or the Kearsarge to go into dock at Cherbourg, and both ships, being near that port, had a battle, with the coast of France in the vicinity lined with spectators. This occurred in June 1864, and Tom Spellman, now a section hand, gave an account of the naval duel which hastened the collapse of the Southern cause. Admiral Semmes, standing on a gun carriage, delivered the following address to his crew:

"Officers and seamen of the Alabama: You have another opportunity of meeting the enemy—the first that has been presented to you since you sunk the Hatteras. In the meantime you have been all over the world, and it is not too much to say that you have destroyed or driven the flag of protection under neutral flags one-half of the enemy's commerce, which at the beginning of the war covered the sea. This is an achievement to which you may well be proud, and a grateful country will not be unmindful of it. The name of your ship has become a household word wherever civilization extends. Shall the name be tarnished with defeat? The thing is impossible. Remember that you are in the English Channel, the theatre of so much of the naval glory of our race, and that the eyes of all Europe are at this moment upon you. The flag that floats over you is that of a young republic which bids defiance to her enemies whenever and wherever found. Show the world that you know how to uphold it. Go to your quarters."

Capt. Winslow, the commander of the Kearsarge, accepted the challenge of the Alabama, and forty-five minutes after Admiral Semmes concluded his stirring address to his crew he stepped down from the gun carriage the action began. The ships approached each other at high speed, like two great eagles rushing to combat, firing broadside batteries into each other at a range of 500 yards. To keep from overlapping each other the opposing commanders each gave the same order, keeping a strong helm to port and fighting in concentric circles toward a common centre, which grew more and more diminished. Semmes, bareheaded on the horse block abreast the mizzen rigging with his glass in his hand, gave his orders in a clear voice which rang above the roar of the awful conflict. On the Kearsarge, Capt. Winslow, standing in the upper deck and directed his battle, his voice being heard between the broadsides cheering his men. Once Admiral Semmes undertook to fire a shell at Winslow—"to blow them solid shot. Our shells strike and rebound into the water without sufficient effect to disable the enemy."

With its decks covered with wounded and dying the Alabama settled stern foremost, and the waves were soon churning and drowning men. Among those who leaped overboard with Admiral Semmes just as the Alabama lifted her bows high in the air and went down with her flag flying was Tom Spellman, the Cotton Belt section hand. Along with his commander he was picked up by the English yacht Deerhound. He is one of the few living men who saw Semmes throw his sword into the sea and leap with the others of the survivors of the battle off Cherbourg, France, between the Kearsarge and the Alabama.

Surprised by Filipino Gentility.

"Speaking of the oft-repeated statement that the Filipinos are a very degraded, ignorant and uncivilized people reminds me of a night I spent at the Filipino club," said Charles L. Jewett of New Albany. "I was invited to attend the opening of the club. I had not been in Manila but a few days and everything was new to me. Out of curiosity I accepted the invitation and went to the function in my every-day duds, not dreaming but that I should be a very rude and coarse, if not comical, affair. Well, I want to tell you that I was completely surprised. The people drove up in carriages and the men were all attired in black clothes with white ties and a good many were in full dress attire. And, by George! if it isn't a fact that several of them carried crush opera hats. I was the poorest dressed man in the lot, but they all treated me with the greatest consideration, and I found them a polite and cultivated set of people. Of course, they were the cream of the Filipinos but the fact that the race can show such a creditable exponents shows that as a people they are capable of development."

BIG DOG FELT THE HEAT

The Seedy-Looking Man Diagnosed the Case and Tried to Treat It.

The big dog lay on the pavement in front of the Custom House in New York. He was a yellowish, brindly sort of dog, enveloped in a coat of heavy fur that seemed very much out of place with the thermometer at 93. So the big dog thought, at any rate, for his face expressed extreme weariness, and from his open panting mouth great drops fell on the sidewalk like hot flagstones. A sympathetic crowd of messenger boys and loungers gathered around him and volunteered counsel after the manner of the angels ministering unto Elijah.

"Hully gee! But he's a whale," said one.

"Newfoundland," suggested another.

"Naw, he ain't neither," said the shoestring man. "St. Bunnard; you can always tell 'em by his color."

"Italiano dog; verra good; sil" chattered the pushcart man, showing all his white teeth in the delight the suggestion afforded him.

"That dog don't act right, I tell you," said a seedy-looking man, impressively. "Look at them eyes. I shouldn't wonder if he was going to go mad. He wouldn't be the first one this hot weather, either."

The big dog turned his head slightly and looked up as if in appreciation of the speaker's acumen. Several of the crowd drew back.

"That's the idea," said the seedy-looking man. "Give him air. Most likely he's run all the way from Harlem down here in the first stages of hydrophobia that he needs air and something to cool his blood."

"Send for the ice man," irreverently suggested a small newsboy, who was quickly trampled on.

"That kid's all right," said the seedy-looking man, who was gaining confidence. "We got to do something. One of you fellers go up to the corner and another of you get a chunk of ice somewhere. Maybe we can save him yet."

Two of the messenger boys hurried away with the spirit of noble charity in their pace. The crowd by this time had increased to a dozen persons.

"Now," said the seedy-looking man, turning to a fakir, "gimme one of them fans and I'll keep down his temperature; they get back."

He seized the broad palm leaf, and stepping in front of the canine sufferer, described with much hearing these only accelerated their speed. The big dog opened his eyes in melancholy wonder, and settled himself upon the pavement.

Then a cool-appearing man in a blue suit came out of the Custom House, saw the New York dog, and said, "Here, Rex," and the big dog rose and followed him slowly down the street toward Broadway.

Five minutes later three policemen rounded the corner at double quick time, an ambulance dashed up, and the gong of an approaching fire engine was heard up the street. They were found only an overturned pushcart, whose owner was gathering up his wares and muttering to himself, and picking up a scattered stock of palm leaf fans, and a crowd of people watching from the second-story windows.

Something About 53,000 Elk.

The order of Elks is diffused throughout the whole country, says Leslie's Weekly. It originated in New York City in 1867, the founder being Charles A. Vivian, a ballad singer. It was at first restricted to members of the theatrical profession and to singers. In the beginning it had only thirteen members. Its scope, however, soon broadened, and it admitted other persons besides those to which it was at first confined. A social organization at the outset, it developed into a benevolent order having lodges in every State, and in the District of Columbia representatives of all the professions. First calling itself the "Jolly Corks," it then adopted the name of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. It is one of the most popular of all the fraternal orders of the United States, as is shown by the rapid increase in membership and the growth of the surplus in its treasury. The reports at St. Louis showed that there was a gain of 14,187 members in the order during the past twelve months, the present membership being 55,439. This is the largest increase ever made in any one year, bringing the total number of members, which is 6,384, followed, in this order, by Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, Indiana, Grand Rapids, Jackson, Michigan; Baltimore, Alleghany, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis and Pittsburg. All these lodges and no others have over 500 members.

Bees Hived in a Camera.

An enthusiastic amateur photographer of Phoenixville, Pa., Mr. Marion Lyttle, has a pride in his home, a rather costly camera, which when not in use he kept in a third-story room of his home. Recently, when Mr. Lyttons was too busy otherwise to take pictures, but finally he decided to go out and secure some views. When he got to the room he was surprised to find a half dozen bees flying about it. As he proceeded through the room with the camera in his hand a whole swarm of bees entered the box in line of a small opening in the black box cover. Then the owner placed the camera on a table and started an investigation, which he gave up when the truth flashed upon him that a swarm of bees, which had come in through the open window, had made a hive out of his camera. He has been dismissed as tenants, but the camera will have to be overhauled before any more views can be taken.

"When I am in Rome," he said, "I hall do as the Romans do."

NO MORE BALD HEADS

A CONSTANTINOPLE PHYSICIAN DISCOVERS A REMARKABLE REMEDY.

Ploughs the Head With a Scarifier, Cutting the Scalp, and Then Plants the Hair Like a Farmer Would Plant a Willow Wand.

Dr. Menahem Hodara, of Constantinople, announces that he can take a fragment of hair, and, by implanting it on the scalp of a bald patient, make it merge gradually into a new hair and grow into a long, heavy hair, with a root of its own.

He says that he has tried it upon several patients and has afterward demonstrated its success by microscopical examination.

Every one knows that a bit of willow twig, when stuck into the earth and let alone, will probably throw out roots and in time grow into a tree. Even dried-up looking sticks have been known to accomplish this.

Dr. Hodara virtually says that a hair will do the same thing. He does not imagine that it is because of the word. He does not take a hair that is attached to skin, or that has its root and follicle entire. His discovery is not the result of any mere grafting experiment. Dr. Hodara says in effect, that he can take the clippings of hair as they fall beneath the barber's shears and, from each of these bits of hair can cause a new hair to grow.

It has long been known that the human hair, if it is not diseased at the root, and that it closely resembled skin in its structure, but it has never been thought that it contained within itself the power to initiate a new hair. It has often been believed that it depended for its life and existence on the nutrient vessels which supplied its follicle, or death.

Dr. Hodara's discovery means that each hair, or fragment of hair, must contain within itself the same power that produces it. Hence the hair's new empire, shrivelled and dead.

Before beginning operation, Dr. Hodara carefully washed a selected part of the patient's head on which hair was luxuriant, with an antiseptic solution. This was repeated until the hair was thoroughly sterilized. Then about fifty hairs were clipped off with a pair of scissors and were laid in soak in a neutral solution of sodium chloride.

The next thing done was to render the bald spot on the scalp thoroughly aseptic. This was done by almost the same measures as those used to sterilize the hair.

After applying an anaesthetic spray to the part, Dr. Hodara took a sharp pen. Hodara picked up an instrument known as a scarifier and drew it horizontally across the bald patch. The result was six little cuts through the surface of the scalp. Changing the direction of the instrument, Dr. Hodara then made another set of incisions at right angles, until the surface of the scalp appeared to be cross-hatched with little cuts.

The slight hemorrhage which resulted was easily controlled, and Dr. Hodara then took up a pair of small forceps and began to select a hair. Picking up one by the middle, he held it in the forceps while he clipped it with scissors at each end until the resulting bristle was about an inch and a half long and was blunt at each end.

A gold book through a powerful lens showed the doctor that he was holding the hair right end up, for a hair has a root that lies in sockets like the bark of a palm tree. Then he selected a place where two cuts crossed and into the incision inserted the hair. Whether the cuts crossed each other on the bald spot Dr. Hodara inserted a clipped hair, and then inserted some of those that remained in the intermediate spaces. When he had finished the bald spot was sparsely covered with little bristles of hair.

Then a dressing was applied, and the patient was instructed under no circumstances to remove or even disturb it.

PLANTING HAIR ON BALD HEAD.

A week later Dr. Hodara examined the scalp. The cuts were practically healed, and he was pleased to note that every implanted hair was still in position.

Three weeks later another examination was made. The hairs were still in position.

Dr. Hodara picked up a pair of forceps and plucked one of the hairs. It came out easily, and was obviously in the same condition as when it was first placed in the scalp. Dr. Hodara thought the experiment had failed, but pulled out another.

That sample astonished him, for with the hair came a follicle. Dr. Hodara looked at it with renewed interest, and then laid it by the side of the first hair. It was perceptibly longer, although when he performed the operation Dr. Hodara had been careful to see that all the hairs he used were of the same length.

Another and another hair was quietly tweaked out, and it was found that many had grown bulbs, and in every way had acted as mere tree twigs might have acted if planted in good ground.

Examination under the microscope showed that the hairs had undoubtedly taken root and appeared to be likely to grow into good, long hairs.

A SKETCH OF MANILA.

Showing the Local Conditions of Passenger Traffic—Have Plenty of Conveyances.

VERY NARROW STREETS.

Trucks, Victorias, Carriages and Traps of Every Kind Must Have Under Cut for the Front Wheels.

Several Thousand Men Do the Work of Delivery Wagons — Four Men Trotting Along the Street With a Piano Strung Among Them By Ropes—Ten Cents All They Asked.

Horses are not used in Manila for draught animals, and freight trucks, spring wagons, etc., are unknown. Everything is on two wheels in the vehicle line, except the Victoria pleasure carriages, and these all have an undercut for the forward wheels. Narrow streets render this imperative. If the Americans introduce trucks, only the light, undercut style will be practicable.

The art of carrying burdens upon the head, for it certainly is an art, must be something Chinese or Filipino. It is an early age, and when ten years old, are already experts. I have seen women carry jars eighteen inches tall in this way without touching them with the hands, and I have seen a basket project far over to one side, balanced by a heavy object in the other end, anything under 100 pounds always goes on top of the head.

A TYPICAL NIPA HOUSE.

Next in the scale of burden-bearers are the coolies, the Chinese and Filipino coolies, who carry heavy articles suspended from poles across the shoulders, but the thousands of men engaged in that work in the city can accomplish in moving heavy goods is truly wonderful. Everything sold in the stores is carried home in this way, if it weigh less than 300 pounds, or is not too bulky to be handled. Even this limit of weight is exceeded by having several coolies carry it under a shed. I have seen four of them trotting along the street with a piano swinging from ropes between them, mattresses, large marble-topped tables, iron sofas, cases of beer, bales of hemp, and an infinite variety of things, are handled in the same way. They are for a short distance, equal to a nickel of our money, is all they ask for their services. In this way several thousand men do the work of a dozen horses. The coolie family on the move looks like a Roman triumph, with the soldiers carrying the booty of the conquered. Nothing is spared up, and a complete inventory may be had of the mover's household effects.

Everything not practicable for the cargadores to handle is carried on two-wheeled drags drawn by water buffaloes or carabaos. This is a short-legged clucky animal, somewhat resembling a cow, with a hide the color of an elephant, and almost devoid of hair. The neck is long, and the head slender and surmounted with huge, deeply wrinkled horns forming a perfect crescent. The patient ox of our country is hysterical in comparison with the uncouth ox of the water buffalo. It could win a slow race from a tortoise, yet it accomplishes wonders in transporting goods. A plain box with a rope handle shuffles loosely across its neck. A small hempen cord tied to its nose or to one of its horns completes its harness, and with this the master drives in a manner system I have not yet mastered, though apparently by merely shaking the rope he can get it to go where he wishes to turn, or, if riding it, by slapping it on the back with the hand. Slowly and majestically it plods along, shaking its head from side to side, and in a way almost marvellous avoiding locking the points into the wheels of passing vehicles. By these are not many accidents I cannot understand, for I have myself only escaped empalement several times by my agility. Forever when one rare occasions one of them becomes frightened and starts down the street at a lumbering gait, they are less dangerous to pedestrians than the little ponies drawing passenger vehicles.

Buying a Manila Girl.

On one of his trips from San Francisco to Manila, Dr. Rizal, surgeon of the United States steamer Warren, saw and admired a beautiful Manila child about 10 years of age. Speaking of her to a friend, he said: "Don't you think that would be a nice present to take home to my wife—a regular little Filipino doll? We can bring her up for a lady's maid."

"Why don't you buy her, then," said the friend.

"Oh, yes," said Bucklin, and he forthwith offered the mother a dollar for the child.

The Manila mamma handed over the girl with one hand and grabbed the dollar with the other. Mr. Bucklin took the wild young thing back with him, but she bit, fought, scratched, and kicked until his life became a burden. Every day boatloads of Manila mammas came alongside the Warren of the surgeon's wife and tried to get them. He refused 100 girls the first day, and finally to escape the consequences of his rash act he gave the little Manila girl back to her mother, together with a bonus of $2. This only increased the desire on the part of the Filipinos to sell their children, and Bucklin was the happiest man on board ship when she weighed anchor and left Manila harbor.

SOME NEW TROTTERS

ANIMALS THAT MAY BREAK ALL TRACK RECORDS.

A New York Sportsman Training a Pair of Antelopes—They Have a Long Stride But Light Weight—May Beat the World's Record.

A New York sportsman is at present training a pair of antelopes in trotting harness, which he considers will considerably lower the world's trotting record. The antelope has never before been considered seriously as a racing machine, but those familiar with them believe that they can be controlled by careful training as well as a horse, and are capable of wonderful bursts of speed.

The owner of the first team of racing antelopes is Mr. Donald Burns, who is famous as an animal trainer of wide experience. Mr. Burns is at present running his trained antelopes on a track near his home at Babylon, L. I., and expects to have them in condition to take part in the regular track racing events some time this fall. When Mr. Burns was seen last week by a representative of the New York Herald-Times, his expressed himself as confident that his strange racers would better the world's trotting record of 2:03 flat by two seconds.

"I have been found in training this pair of antelopes that their peculiar nervousness or wildness gives them no more trouble than a horse of like on the race course. The average antelope, if its training be commenced early enough can be brought to mind the whip and rein, and after two years old, and their racing life after that is about the same as that of a horse. They run very low, as the expression goes, falling and rising with their racing gait they move at their best speed, while their long thin legs move with great rapidity and evenness.

"Their gait is somewhat different from that of a trotting horse, their steps being slightly longer, but it is sufficiently like to allow them to enter a racing harness without much trouble. Variety of antelope is that they can only travel at their best pace for comparatively short distances. In their natural wild state they are accustomed to use their spurts of speed for more than a half to three-quarters of a mile, and it is only by careful training that they can be made to cover a mile.

This is due to the fact that they are naturally very short-winded, and their muscles are not developed to any good exertion. Their speediness is due to the fact that they weight from 300 to 500 pounds less than a horse, while their legs, with compound joints, are their mountain homes. They are still to be found in many of the Western States, as well as in Africa, Arabia, and other parts of the world. In order to catch them without inflicting the slightest injury they must be lassoed, and great care must be exercised that they are not injured to their very delicate legs, which are very easily sprained or disjointed. Once captured, they are, however, easily managed. The first step in training an antelope to trotting harness is to break or accustom it to the use of the halter. Their natural shyness is due to their timidness as to nervousness or fear so that it is a great mistake to force them into obedience. Mr. Burns first began by putting a halter around a fawn's nose about their necks and leading them about. After a few weeks of this they became very docile. The next step was to accustom them to the wearing of a driving harness. They resented any harness, and the first step to accustom them to it found them very skittish and unmanageable.

A fractious antelope behaves very differently from a horse, but is none the less difficult to control. An antelope will jump like a horse like a horse, though it has plenty of troublesome tricks of its own. Perhaps the most dangerous of these is its habit of suddenly springing, which it does with much more agility than any horse. It will launch itself through the air a distance of ten or twelve feet, coming to the ground instantly come to a dead stop. In this wild state the antelope frequently kills snakes by jumping upon them and landing on all four feet, stiff and close together. It can be imagined what havoc such a feat would work to a carriage and harness.

The next step in training the trotting antelopes at Babylon was to accustom them to the use of the shafts. The antelopes were first hitched separately to a pole long poles on either side and led about by a halter. Both of Mr. Burn's antelopes succeeded in breaking several sets of these poles before they were sufficiently accustomed to proceed in this way. The poles, of course, accustomed the animals to the use of shafts.

It was necessary to use very stout poles for the purpose, because the snake-killing jumps of the antelopes would soon splinter ordinary shafts. In his next stage of accustoming these experiments, led the antelopes by a very long halter, in order to keep out of the way of these long shafts. Step by step, after eighteen months of continuous training to accustom Mr. Burn's antelopes to an ordinary racing harness, they were found perfectly docile, however, almost entirely broken to harness, and the subsequent training has been aimed more particularly to develope their speed powers. Several pairs of a pair of antelopes with their slender bodies and long horns trotting peacefully about the country has naturally attracted a great deal of attention. The residents of Babylon, Long Island, have decided that this curious means of conveyance is merely the thing for a summer outing, and it is true that they are actually training to beat the world's record with much promise of success has been kept secret.

Not Always.

CEASE WORRYING.

Mary Boardman Page Tells How to Stop It.

The usual way people set about stopping worry is a wrong way," writes Mary Boardman Page in the September Ladies' Home Journal. "That is why it is so unsuccessful. If a doctor tells a patient he must stop worrying, the patient is likely to say impatiently, 'Oh, doctor, don't I wish I could! But I can't. If I could have stopped worrying a year a I would not be ill now'—all of which is probably perfectly true. And the doctor does not always know how to help him, because doctor and patient have an idea that it is impossible to repress worry through an effort of the will. This is a mistake. It is not possible to repress worry. You have got to replace it with something else.

"Let me illustrate this by a figure. Suppose you should go into a completely dark room, wishing it to be light. How would you set about the work? Would you try to scoop the darkness up in corners and carry it out at the door? Not at all. You *would just open the windows and shut*ters and let in the blessed sunlight. You would open the doors to admit the light. So it is with worry. The only possible way to get rid of it is to replace the worried attitude of mind with a cheerful, trustful one. And this can always be done when the person is sincere and patient in his desire to bring it about. All he has to do is to be passive and let love have her own perfect way with him."

A Speculation in Wheat.

"Deliver me from any more wheat deals with a woman," said a Jefferson man wearily. "Just read this letter. Do you see what she says? Calls me a robber and says she will prosecute.

"I'll tell you what brought out all that abuse. his woman decided some time ago to trade a little in wheat. She wrote, sending me $20, with instructions to buy her a thousand bushels. I did so, but the price of wheat went down almost as soon as I telephoned the order over to Kirby at the board. I made up my mind that she shouldn't lose if I could help it, even if I had to help her out myself. So I began manipulating for her on my own account. I put up $20 without being worried much, for I thought the price would go up soon, but it didn't, and I had to spend another $20 to save my own margin. There was $40 gone just to protect her little old $20. Before the market began to move again I had put in $80. When one day the price came up, very gradually. As soon as it got to a point where I could save myself I sold out. Any wise man would have done in my fix. As it happened, too, the price went back just after I had sold out, proving the wisdom of my action.

"No. I guess I won't do any more trading with women. They expect too much."

seems no end. But a plain, fine linen embroidered with either white or yellow silk is as good as any.

The design given is quite pretty when simple outline stitch is used, and when the work is done with wash silk the quality they will return from each trip to the laundry looking fresh and pretty.

Care of Flatirons.

These useful articles should be kept scrupulously free from rust, if they are to do justice to the ironer. When not in use they should be stood right up on a clean, dry shelf, and should be periodically rubbed with sandpaper so that perfect smoothness may be insured. Should an iron, through neglect, become rusty, it should be rubbed well with a mixture of lard and beeswax. When used in this, and then briskly and papered until smooth and bright. A suitable iron rest should also be provided for a hot iron, as it may do much harm if placed where it will rest on table, floor or window sill. Quite a respectable little fire was caused recently by a careless woman placing a hot iron covered with lard and wax on the floor and then forgetting it, when the wood smouldered under the heat and finally ignited. An iron is best heated over a clear fire, as thick smoke like or no dirt upon the bottom and heats it through very quickly.

A Revolution.

"Bicycles and short skirts have certainly brought about one revolution" said a man who likes to walk the streets and look at what is going in. He has forced the manufacturers who make the seat about their shoes to

"Women with long skirts are inclined to be untidy and about their footgear. This is a contradiction of their habit of holding up her dress to display a pair of button shoes with the holes loose and untidy and all run down at the heel. Now that women wear such things will bear me out that before the era of bicycle skirts three women in five were careless about this part of their make up, no matter how faithful the attire in other espects. The short skirt has made them careful."

A BOUNDARY LINE.

EXPERIENCES OF THE COMMISSION ON THE MEXICAN FRONTIER.

Difficult and Dangerous Work in the Deserts and Mountains—A Fourteen-day storm—The Effects of Mirage—City Receives Into a Mass of Bowlders.

Although the boundary line between the United States and Mexico was defined over half a century ago by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, after the Mexican War, there has seldom been a time since then when the actual location of this international limit has not given cause for vigorous disputes and often bloody border warfare between the Mexican and American settlers near the line.

After the treaty of 1853 a survey was made of the line, to effect some necessary changes. Monuments were put up along the arbitrary portion of the boundary west of the Rio Grande, but most of these have since been lost or simply rude piles of stone, and the case with which they could be destroyed or removed was soon discovered by the Mexicans, who, ever loath to miss an opportunity for a quarrel with their neighbors on the other side of the international fence, finally, in 1882, owing to continual boundary quarrels, a convention to settle them was arranged between the two countries. But on account of various delays it was not until November, 1891, that members of the International Boundary Commission were at last appointed. By the month of June, 1892, all work along the entire line, both surveying and monument-erecting, was finished. Two hundred and fifty-eight monuments, some of stone, and some of iron, had been placed along the seven hundred miles of boundary west of the Rio Grande. The interval between them were varied to suit the requirements of the different religions, but the distance averaged about two and three-quarter miles between monuments.

Some of the experiences of the members of the surry are well worth a more extended description than can be given here. The mountainous region for many miles about Nogales, Ariz., is one of the roughest and most arid on the continent. In this mountainous land was seen for the first time the strange and ungainly giant cactus, called the "saguaro" by the Mexicans. Its acidous fruit, when ripe, is used as food by the Papago Indians of the region, who eat it fresh, dried and preserved, and make from it also a slightly intoxicating drink. In the broad valley called the Moreno Flat, west of the Baboquivari Mountains and about fifty-five miles west of Nogales, the first standard there was encountered on July 3, 1893. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon, a dense, dark cloud suddenly appeared rising in the south. The brilliant sun was soon overcast, and in a few moments after the cloud was first observed the storm burst upon the camp. In one or fifteen minutes it was as black as midnight; the atmosphere was filled with loose sand, the valley to a height of several hundred feet; respiration became almost impossible, and it was only by breathing through a handkerchief held in front of the mouth that suffocation was avoided. In half an hour the wind began to subside, the darkness diminished, and in a little more than two hours the sun was again shining through the dust particles that still filled the air.

Wonderful mirages were seen while crossing the lonely deserts. Just before sunrise craggy peaks would appear, capped by similar inverted peaks, which would gradually merge into strange forms. Once a city, with all its buildings, appeared in a valley to the westward, but the morning sun resolved it into a mass of low bowlders near the base of a mountain. At another time, on the bare Yuma Desert, the reconnoissance party seemed to be in a level expanse of water, and every side by a vertical wall of rock, fifty to one hundred feet high, which gradually faded away and converged toward the river, but lessened in height until it finally vanished. The commonest deception was seen in the heat of midday, when the horses looked frightened with trees, lay apparently only a few hundred yards away. The details of this so perfect, even to the reflections in the water, that the party did not wonder that thirsty travelers were often lured from the road to procure this water, which they could be reached. The mirage distortion of the size and form of animals was also remarkable. In one case a herd of wild horses was seen for a short time at antelope and followed for several miles before the mistake was discovered. At times a jack-rabbit would loom up on the desert like a large mounted upon its haunches, while occasionally the legs of animals would be so comically lengthened as to make them appear mounted upon stilts.

Phrenology and Science.

Glossomancy is the "science," introduced by a Miss Erbere No of Paris, consisting of reading the character by the form and size of the tongue.

The guiding principles are as follows: If the tongue is long it is an indication of frankness; if it is short, of dissimulation; if it is broad, of expansiveness; if narrow, of concentration.

When the tongue is both long and large it is then that the possessor is a great gossip, frank to displeasingness, and thoughtless. If the tongue be long and narrow, its owner is only half frank, thinking as much as he uttered, but not always uttering all that is thought.

If short and narrow, it indicates deep cunning and lying; impenetrability and prudence. This tongue belongs to those persons always ready to make mistakes, but eager to inspire confidence.

Pensioning Teachers.

Referring editorially to the latest scheme of pensioning teachers, by passing a State law allowing municipalities to retire superannuated school teachers on pensions, if they so desire, the Newark News very sensibly says:

"That the proposed pension scheme is wrong in principle and unjust in practice should not at this day need demononstration. Except that their salaries have been paid from the public treasury there is no difference between worn-out school teachers and superannuated followers of any other pursuit. Any member of the community who has led a sober, industrious, frugal life has just as much right to ask for a pension when no longer able to support himself as has a public school teacher. While there is truth in the claim that the salaries paid school teachers are not as liberal as they should be, it is also true that there is no lack of applicants for positions, and that the remuneration is not disproportionate to that earned in other pursuits where each person is expected to make provision for his or her old age. Socialists hold that every person after reaching a certain age should be supported by the State; the pensioning of teachers should be deferred till the advent of that much-to-be desired day."

Goes Wide of Its Mark.

The expected address of the Daly-Atkinson faction of the Democratic party has made its appearance. Perhaps it is no more violent than was anticipated in view of the things that have already transpired and been said by the men responsible for the document, but as tending to strengthen the Democratic party in New Jersey it goes wide of its mark.

From a Democratic standpoint, viewing the influence and success of the party in the future, it is particularly unfortunate that a set of men like those headed by Messrs. Atkinson and Daly should have indulged in such acrimony and impetuosity against the men who are now in charge of the machinery of the organization.

It is foolish for the men who are responsible for the address to believe that they are going to be able to oust the present leaders in the organization from their places, begin the organization all over again and then obtain for New Jersey Democracy a representative influence for any particular candidate or set of principles. It is beyond the possibility of practical politics to do this.

Undoubtedly there is urgent need of conciliation on the part of both sides, a spirit of give and take, in order to bring about harmony in the party; but it will not be brought about by such actions as the Daly and Atkinson people are indulging in.

Referring to the presentment made by the Middlesex County Grand Jury condemning the laxity and carelessness of doctors and officials of New Brunswick, which resulted in the confinement of a man of sound mind in the Trenton Hospital for the Insane, the Newark News says that it "should lead to a repeal of the law of 1898, under which this person was committed. Under this law any person upon petition of a relative, fortified by the affidavits of two physicians, may be incarcerated in an asylum for fifteen days on probation. During that period he is to be examined by the hospital physicians, who report to the County Judge. If they find the person sane he is discharged, if they declare him demented, the Judge orders an inquisition of lunacy in the regular form. Thus while there is little danger but that a sane man would ultimately secure his release the law opens up opportunities for abuse and oppression. The mere fact of being committed even temporarily to an asylum is enough to shake the reason or cause the death of persons of delicate and nervous organizations."

This is the week when every patriot should deck out in the national colors, as much in Plainfield as in New York where Admiral Dewey and his crew will be personally.

No matter if Dewey has arrived a couple of day ahead of time and set askew all the plans made for his coming up the bay, he is just as welcome.

Henceforth no one will be permitted to vote in Delaware who cannot read the Constitution of the State and write his name.

EVERYTHING SUITS DEWEY

The Hero of Manila Bay Says Arrangements for His Reception Are All Right.

HE WANTS NO CHANGES

Says He is in the Hands of New York People and is Ready to Sanction Their Movements.

The Early Arrival of the Olympia Not to Interfere With the Original Plans for the Reception—Officially Welcomed by Mayor—Admiral Dewey Talks.

New York, Sept. 27.—While the arrival of Admiral Dewey was two days ahead of schedule time, the general plans of the various committees have not been materially interfered with in consequence. The only matter requiring specific change was the welcoming of the Admiral by Mayor Van Wyck, which necessitated this particular part of the function being performed to-day instead of Thursday as originally arranged for.

The Olympia was lying at anchor off Tompkinsville, Staten Island, when the Mayor and a portion of the reception committee boarded her and found Admiral Dewey in the best of health and spirits. After pleasant greetings had been passed between the veteran and hero of Manila Bay, Mayor Van Wyck officially informed the Admiral of the several features of the program that have been arranged for his entertainment and reception, and that the people of Greater New York extended to him the hand of hospitality, their hearts and homes in a royal welcome. The Admiral said that any arrangements the committees had decided upon were entirely satisfactory to him, and would see fit, and that he was a little ahead of time in arriving in New York harbor, that none of the original plans for the celebration should be changed, and he should consider himself in the hands of New York people for the balance of the week and that they are at liberty to do with him as they see fit, and their movements will receive his sanction.

Admiral Dewey was visibly affected said that he was not much of a speech-maker—never made a public speech in his life, and at this time felt that he had not command of language with which to express his grateful appreciation of the magnificent welcome prepared for him upon his return to his native land. He said he could not understand that he deserved so much attention, but for once, at least would be obliged to bow in humble submission to the whishes of his country.

Previous to Mayor Van Wyck's visit to Admiral Dewey, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Richard Croker, St. Clair McKelway and William McAdoo, of the reception Committee, called and tendered the Admiral the freedom of the city, and after a pleasant chat boarded the police boat Patrol and returned to New York.

Atlantic Highlands, N. J., Sept. 27.—Admiral Dewey was seen on his flagship, the Olympia, as she lay at anchor at the southwest spit. He was busy writing letters in his cabin. His breech lay open, a gun at his elbow, when the visitors to the flagship boarded. He made his appearance in a few minutes in the same white undress uniform, fatigue uniform of an Admiral, and his elastic step showed that he was far from the physical wreck the American people have pictured recently in their minds. His dog Bob, a Filipino dog, of brown furry coat was at his heels. The Admiral politely but firmly refused to talk for publication any of the many important questions upon which the people of the United States have learned to regard him as an authority.

He emphatically expressed his absolute confidence in the ability of the United States to settle the question of the Philippines, and as emphatically declined, even with a show of irritation, to talk about the attitude of Admiral Diederichs at Manila. He denied that the Filipinos were capable of running their own government. He spoke in a sanguine way of his health.

Bob he stamped as a figurehead.

He explained the reason for the arrival of the Olympia at Sandy Hook two days ahead of the expected time.

"We are in the habit of arriving in time, and haven't missed a place yet. Fortune was with us on the run from Gibraltar. When we weighed anchor about a week or last Saturday afternoon, I determined to make an allowance for at least one of the storms that a sailor must expect on the southerly course in this season of the year. So we shaped our course with three days' allowance for delays. The winds this week favored a quick run, and as we met no storms of consequence we found ourselves at home two days ahead of time.

"I am glad that the people expected us, and rather than run the risk of failing afoul of the plans that they have so generously made for our reception, I would have lain to and waited at the side. And then we are not in the city or at Tompkinsville, either, so that I do not anticipate that the cardiness of our welcome will cause any complication whatever. I suppose we must now surrender ourselves to the mercies of the American people."

In answer to a question regarding the situation in the Philippines, Admiral Dewey wheeled half way round on his heel and said quickly: "There are a good many questions on which I may be expected to talk, but I will have to defer to a great extent my opinions until I have reported to Washington.

"I shall go there on Tuesday, and I cannot say how long my stay at the capital will be. I have many intimate friends there, and so long as the Government sees fit to keep me there I shall feel at home. As to the Philippines, I am no talker. I never have and I wished that I could talk, but I never made a speech, and I'm too old to learn those tricks. You know as much about the Philippines as I do. Any intelligent American citizen who has followed with the right interest what has happened there since we whipped the Spanish fleet knows as much of that problem as he or any man a'boardship.

"Ever since I left the Islands I have read everything bearing upon the Islands and what has transpired there since we left that I could obtain, and the time I left I said that the insurgents were on their last legs. It's got to come, they can't stop it. They can't hold out against the Army and Navy. I believe then that they would be unable to secure the arms and ammunition, without which they could not wage war, but I have learned through the newspapers since that they have received the necessary supplies. That must be stopped, and the insurgents will find, be deprived of their arms, are good soldiers, splendid ones, and their powers of endurance are remarkable."

"Can you consider that the Filipinos are yet capable of self-government, at least enough so to allow of the withdrawal of American forces?"

"No, they are not. But in time they will be. It is bound to come out right. Bound to," replied Admiral Dewey, decisively.

"I will say this much, though, for the Filipinos. They are more capable of governing themselves than the Cubans are."

"Some of them I doubt not, are now capable of administrating affairs, but the great majority of them have the crudest ideas of an honest and efficient government. Their greatest fault is this: They don't know the meaning of the word 'honesty.' Of course, like all Malays who have had educational advantages they are wonderfully capable of imitative construction and are admirable artisans when trained."

At this point Admiral Dewey was asked what he thought of the mention of his name for the Presidency. The gallant seaman braced his shoulders, thrust out his right hand expressively and patted the breech affectionately. "There's one of the boys that did the work." The Admiral's Chinese steward passed the door just then, and Dewey pointing him out, said:

"There's Ah Leep. He's been in our service for fifteen years, and yet he can't ride in a parade. Our Chinese servants did some good fighting that day at Manila, and there's not a more loyal servant of Uncle Sam on board the cruiser than Ah Leep."

"But the Treasury Department has decided to let the Chinamen on board take part in the land parade," Admiral Dewey replied.

His face lighted up with a cheery smile and he called Ah Leep. Ah Leep stood quietly at attention while Admiral Dewey said slowly: "Ah Leep, the United States let Chinamen go land parade."

"Me very glad much, velly much," said Ah Leep. And then he hurried away to tell his fellow-countrymen of their good fortune.

"Now, that's the best news I have heard in a long time," beamed the Admiral. "Those faithful fellows will get their medals, but I had despaired of Ah Leep's going to land. Now please don't ask me another question for I can't answer any more. Take a good look about the ship and enjoy yourselves. The boat, isn't she? She never failed us and is as handsome a man-of-war as I have ever seen. She's in splendid condition. She will have to go in dry dock to have the hull cleaned, but she behaved splendidly on the way home. The English ports of course gave us the best receptions, but you know I could not accept every invitation that I possibly could, for I don't care much for that kind of thing. I'm in for it now though, I'm afraid."

They All Did Him Honor.

New York, Sept. 27.—Hundreds of despatches received here from all parts of the country convey the information that not a city, town, village, hamlet or crossroad, between Van Buren, Me., and San Diego, Cal., unless far removed from a telegraph office, omitted to-day to celebrate the occasion on hearing that Dewey was home. Tons of powder were burned in artillery salutes in scores of towns, and the ringing of bells, the firing of whistles and raising of flags and cheering of crowds were common to all. Vermont, the Admiral's native State, seems to outdo even its larger sister Commonwealth in the fervor of its plaudits.

ciation to assist the citizens of his town toward securing the much wished for extension. Mr. Wohlfurt exhibited a paper which contained the names of every property owner along the line with the exception of James Wilson, who was the only person opposed to the road being extended toward Washington Valley.

Some of the members made the suggestion that it was understood that the Brunswick Traction Company was anxious to get into Plainfield and it was possible that a right of way might be secured in another direction should the one at present proposed be not secured. After some further discussion Mr. French made a motion which was adopted, that the President appoint a committee of three to use their best efforts to assist in bringing about an extension of the Somerset trolley line. Messrs. James E. Martine, Robert Clark and Charles Hand were named as such committee.

Before the meeting adjourned, President Smalley offered the following resolution, which was adopted amid cheers:

Resolved, That the Plainfield Advancement Association feel that it voices the sentiments of every citizen of Plainfield when we extend to Admiral Dewey a most hearty and cordial welcome. Though a local organization, our patriotism is not circumscribed by narrow bounds; we feel that he belongs to us. We honor him as the nation's hero—a hero who has shown himself as capable a diplomat as a naval officer. We recognize in him one who has written his name high on the scroll of fame, and added new lustre and glory to our country's history. To a word, we welcome and honor Dewey as a typical American.

We urge upon every patriotic citizen of the city and borough of Plainfield to observe Dewey Day. At least let business men give this day to the nation's glory; let business be suspended, and that they decorate their homes with that emblem of the free, the stars and stripes.

Upon motion of J. B. Coward, the meeting adjourned to the third Tuesday in October.

WANT A NIGHT SESSION.

REPUBLICANS ANXIOUS TO MAKE NEW CITIZENS.

They Will Ask Judge Vail to Keep Court Open One Night Next Week so as Not to Lose the Prospective Voters.

The Republicans of this city, represented in this case by the city executive committee, are trying to persuade Judge Vail, of the Union County Circuit Court to hold a session some evening next week at which he will pass on the applications for naturalization papers. There is quite a bunch of foreigners of various nationalities, who make their home in Plainfield, who find it difficult to attend the day sessions of the court. So the city executive committee, which is chaperoning their conversion into American citizens, is going to try to arrange things so that they can go at night.

According to the present orders Judge Vail will hold court Wednesday and Saturday mornings of next week, beginning at 10 o'clock, when he will [administer the final oaths and pass on the applications for citizenship. On a previous occasion Judge McCormick held evening sessions so that the men who were busy in the daytime could attend without loss of time. That is what the city executive committee now wants Judge Vail to do.

SEVERED AN ARTERY.

Knife Slipped and Cut a Deep Gash in the Leg—Services of a Doctor Necessary.

John M. Hughes, of Jackson avenue, accidentally cut an artery in his leg Monday afternoon and will be laid up for several weeks in consequence. Hughes is a carpenter. He was making some repairs in the bathroom at the Central Hotel, 115 East Front street for the proprietor, William Schorb. While cutting a stick with his large jack-knife, the knife slipped and cut a deep gash in his right leg, severing an artery.

The wound was bound up and Hughes, not realizing the serious nature of it, insisted on finishing the job. He went home and Dr. Tomlinson was summoned. The artery was tied up and several stitches taken to close the cut.

Broke His Leg.

B. S. Brälder, an employe of Groceryman MacDonald, of East Front street, had the misfortune Sunday to break his right leg. With some friends Mr Brälder was up on the mountains enjoying the beauties of nature. In some manner he stepped into a woodchuck's hole and fell in such a position as to fracture his leg. He was helped to his home on Manning avenue, where Drs. Zeigio and Buchanan were called to set the bones. The fracture is a particularly bad one and will lay Mr. Brälder up for several weeks.

DOES NOT APPROVE OF DALY MANIFESTO

"Farmer Orator" Martine Deprecates Factional Controversy.

SEES NO GOOD TO THE PARTY

HE BELIEVES IN ABIDING BY DECISION OF MAJORITY.

Knows No Gourley or no Daly, but Only the Democratic Party—Principal Points Made in the Address Issued by the Daly-Atkinson Faction, Which Violently Attacks Present State Committee.

No man can accuse James E. Martine, familiarly known as the "Farmer Orator," of this city, with being untrue or lukewarm to the real interests of the Democratic party in New Jersey, or of not being a great admirer and steadfast advocate of William Jennings Bryan. Therefore it is interesting to know what Mr. Martine, as one of the Democrats whose loyalty and devotion to his party cannot be impeached, thinks of the address issued by the Daly-Atkinson combination yesterday. A local reporter met Mr. Martine Tuesday and asked him what he thought of the address issued to the Democrats.

"Well," said the "Farmer Orator," "from my education, and standpoint as a Democrat I only know of one party of Democrats. I know of no faction. True or otherwise, Democrats are Democrats and will support the regular nomination.

"I love my party and her teachings and I personally admire Mr. Bryan. I am an honest believer in bi-metallism. I believe the free coinage of both gold and silver is necessary for the well being of the masses—but there are other great issues that have come before people that will be met by the Democrats to party.

"I deprecate this factional controversy. It can bring no good to our party, nor to any member of it. It is only of profit to the Republican party Let it stop. Let us be true Democrats and abide the decision of the majority as declared in convention. Let us know no Gourley, no Daly. Let us drop personal controversy for welfare of country and the success of our party."

Representative Wm. D. Daly, as chairman of the committee appointed by the supporters of Bryan at a conference held in Philadelphia, September 23, to prepare an address to the residents of New Jersey in regard to the position taken by Bryan men in political affairs in New Jersey, yesterday made public the address prepared by the committee.

It is dated at Trenton September 25th, is addressed to the Democrats of New Jersey and is in part as follows:

"You have seen the destruction of our party planned by those claiming to be in sympathy with the traditions of the national organization, and who have been honored with the party's favors; and as true and loyal Democrats we condemn their actions. With them personal greed stands for the highest statesmanship, while self-aggrandizement is the sole motive of their disloyal activity. We insist that this element of the party shall have no voice in the councils of the party, directly or indirectly, or through their representatives.

"It is self-evident that loyal support cannot permeate the rank and file of the party in New Jersey when that same loyalty is not inspired by those who, through fraud and force, have usurped the leadership of the party organization.

"We declare that the Decocrctic Committee, as represented at Asbury Park, by its active and open hostility to the representatives of loyal Democracy there assembled, and by its indifference to the evils of the present administration, has offended the great mass of the Democratic voters of New Jersey.

"While we will support the candidate which the next Democratic Convention shall name, we will use every honorable means to secure the nomination of the leader of 1896.

"Recognizing that success of the Democratic party can only be attained by perfect loyalty and united action, we counsel unswerving support of the candidates nominated by the party for the pending elections. We trust and believe that the Democracy of the State will need neither warning nor admonition to see to it that no man shall receive a nomination for any office on the Democratic ticket who is not in thorough and hearty accord with the principles of this address and the platform of 1896.

"We seek no disaffection in the party. Men who were false in 18 6 cannot be trusted today as leaders.

"In pursuance of the spirit of the conference which appointed this committee, and in order to prevent future treason to the principles of democracy, we, the undersigned committee, representing the democracy of the State of New Jersey, call upon the loyal supporters of the party in 1896 to meet in conference at Trenton, N. J., on the fourteenth day of November, 1899, for the purpose of taking action looking to the organization of the party along the lines of true Democratic principles."

Signers of this address are William D. Daly, chairman; Allyn Brewer, Charles T. Atkinson, John J. Crandall, John F. Hall, John T. Wright, Thomas J. Pricket, Charlef Stokes, W. E. Hires, James F. Minturn, Anthony Kilgore, Samuel Witherill and Albert S. Dulin.

CAR HAD NOT STOPPED.

South Plainfield Woman Hurt While Trying to Get Off a Trolley Car.

When Bridget McDonough signaled to the conductor on a trolley car on West Front street to stop near Liberty street Sunday afternoon, she did not wait till the car came to a full stop. Instead she jumped when it was in motion, with the result of being thrown heavily to the roadbed and striking on her head.

She was rendered unconscious. Several witnesses of the accident carried the injured woman into the home of Mr McCarthy near at hand, and Dr. Fritts, the company's physician, was called. He found that the woman had sustained a slight concussion of the brain, but the injury was not serious enough to endanger her life.

Later in the afternoon she was removed to the home of Patrick McDonough in South Plainfield by the Muhlenb rg hospital ambulance.

MADE OVER $1,000 PROFITS.

Successful Fair Conducted by Bound Brook Firemen to Secure Money for Uniforms.

The members of the Bound Brook Fire Department are in a jubilant mood over the unexpected success of their fair which came to a close Saturday evening. Chief Fettengill announced Tuesday a. m. that the net proceeds would be considerably over $1,000. The contest between three of the popular young ladies of the town for a handsome gold watch alone netted $350, the winner, Miss Maggie Brady, collecting $150.

The object of the fair was to raise money for new uniforms, but as the money raised is so much in excess of the amount required, the surplus will be divided between the three companies and will be used in making some necessary repairs to their quarters.

SURPRISED ON DATE OF GOLDEN WEDDING.

A Notable Event in Lives of Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Leveridge.

MARRIED FOR FIFTY YEARS.

THEIR PLANS FOR A QUIET DAY WENT PLEASANTLY AMISS.

Who a Mr. Leveridge Went Home in the Afternoon He Found the House Full of Old Friends From Westfield and Cranford—Evening Brought Another Batch of Unexpected Guests.

To have lived for a half century as husband and wife under the most happy and auspicious circumstances is the lot that falls to but few couples, but Dr. and Mrs. Cornelius A. Leveridge, of 531 West Front street, are among the few honored and rewarded in life that way. Sunday was the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, which was performed in Quebec, Canada, September 24th, 1849. Mrs. Leveridge's maiden name was Ellenor J. Mills. She was the daughter of Dr. James Mills, of Exeter, England.

Mr. and Mrs. Leveridge had been trying to keep the event a secret from their relatives and friends, as they were anxious to enjoy the anniversary by themselves. But their plans went amiss in a most happy and surprising manner for them, as the events of yesterday demonstrated.

Monday afternoon Dr. Leveridge, as is his usual custom, came down town and spent a portion of the afternoon at the Asbestos Club. He returned home about 4 o'clock, but had no sooner reached the house than it began to dawn upon him that the golden wedding anniversary was not going to be so quiet after all. As he entered the house he was greeted and congratulated by a party of Westfield friends, but leaving them he started for the rear of the house for the purpose of changing his attire, when he suddenly came plumb against another bevy of unexpected guests—this time old neighbors and friends from Cranford, where he formerly lived.

The guests came expecting the celebrants to be unprepared for their reception, and so they brought along flowers for decorating the house and plenty of edibles for the repast that is an essential for all such gatherings. Mr. and Mrs. Leveridge soon recovered from their embarrassment over the unexpected arrival of their friends, and acted the part of the hosts in a most generous and happy manner. The afternoon was spent in social chat, short congratulatory talks to the celebrants and the presentation of a number of appropriate presents. Then after justice had been done to the refreshments the visitors left wishing Mr. and Mrs. Leveridge many happy returns of the notable day in their lives. A pleasing feature of the departure was the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

Then Mr. and Mrs. Leveridge settled down for an evening by themselves, but here again they counted without their guests, for soon after 7 o'clock another party of surprisers came in upon them. This time they were a few friends from this city, headed by Rev. W. C. Snodgrass and Rev. W. C. Nelson. More congratulations, sociability, presentations, addresses and the like followed till the evening passed away. At 10 o'clock the second set of guests left for home, leaving the hosts to dream and soliloquize of the pleasures of being held in such high esteem by friends on the occasion of their golden wedding anniversary.

Morse, Harold Nomer, Edwin Weeeman, Miss Emily Winant, Miss Katherine Dright, Louis I. Van Alstyne, Miss Anna E. Munkelwitz and A. G. LaBy teaux. A brief address on "Hope, Rally and Battle," was given by Alexander Millar.

COULDN'T STAY 'ROUND

Noisy Women Arrested for Trying to Get Into Flat They Were Evicted From.

The McIntyre flats on North avenue had their share of excitement last night. Two women, who gave their names in court this morning as Mary Nolan and Mary Dunn, made such a noise that their landlady ordered them out. On being requested Law Student Willis Sweeney to keep them there. Sweeney guarded the door and Mary Nolan was arrested by Patrolman Lunger after she had laid siege to the door for a while, and her friend was arrested later.

The memory of both prisoners was very lax Monday, but City Judge Runyon found out the facts from the witnesses and fined both women $5 each.

T. E. H. CURTIS' FATHER DEAD

Was a Prominent Business Man of New York, and Very Wealthy.

Sylvester Johnson Curtis, father of Thomas E H. Curtis, of 511 West Eighth street, and a member of the New York Stock Exchange since 1867, died Monday morning after a lingering illness from Bright's disease, at his home, No. 39 West Twentieth street. He was born in Meriden, Conn., September 30, 1826, and was formerly in the dry goods business. He entered the banking business in 1861, and retired in 1878. He leaves a widow, son and daughter.

Some six months ago he distributed nearly $2,000,000 worth of property among the members of his family. He has, however, left a large real-estate, the disposition of which will not be made known until the will is probated. The funeral services were held Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at his late residence, and the interment was at Middletown, Conn.

RAILROADS PREPARE FOR DEWEY DAY.

Extra Facilities on Jersey Central to Care For Crowds.

NO REDUCTION IN RATES.

BIG TRAFFIC EXPECTED BETWEEN NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.

The Regular Trains Will be Enlarged and Run in Sections if Necessary—No Extra Trains Probable in the Suburban Service—Rates are Cut Only From Places 125 Miles From New York.

New York has already felt the glow of excitement preceding the great Dewey celebration for several days. Every train brings many guests who have taken this occasion to visit the great metropolis. The influence of the approaching gala time is now being felt in Plainfield, although to a much less extent. But Plainfield is so convenient to New York that it offers many advantages to the visitors who come from one side of the continent to the other to honor the hero of Manila Bay.

There will undoubtedly be many guests in Plainfield homes over the time of the Dewey celebration. Some have arrived already and others are expected today, tomorrow and Thursday. It's just as easy, if not easier to get from Plainfield to the scene of the two parades as from the upper part of New York city. With all these guests besides the regular population of Plainfield and other cities and towns along the line of the Jersey Central Railroad, that railroad company will have its hands full to look after all the extra passenger traffic that is sure to appear Friday and Saturday if the weather only continues pleasant.

The present suburban service of the Jersey Central is sufficient to handle many thousands of people on those days. It will not be necessary to put on any extra trains in all probability. More cars will undoubtedly have to be run and it may be necessary, particularly in the case of the evening trains after the fireworks Friday night and the land parade Saturday night, to run some of the trains in more than one section.

Many of the strangers are taking the opportunity to see the Dewey celebration and also visit the National Export Exposition at the same time. Consequently the traffic between New York and Philadelphia will be very large. It is expected that the Philadelphia and Reading and Jersey Central will run a number of extra trains between the two cities during the time of the celebration in New York.

There is a noticeable increase in the baggage on all the through trains on the Jersey Central. This will affect the Plainfield office but little, although there may be some increase. The Central will do its biggest business in the suburban traffic, going to New York in the morning and returning at night, while the baggage will stay at home.

There will be no special rates between Plainfield and New York for the celebration. The Jersey Central does not differ from the other main roads, which only offer special rates in cities and towns more than 125 miles from New York. To these places on the Central as well as the others, the rate for the round trip is one and a third fare. The cheapest way for Plainfielders and their friends to go to the city will be to purchase or hire 50-trip tickets

ROSELLE RETALIATES NOW.

Lehigh Found to Have Encroached on Public Property—Will Have to Come to Time.

The anxiety of the Lehigh Valley Railroad lest the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railroad should steal the crossing at Aldene, has called the attention of the Roselle Borough Council to some of the shortcomings of the Lehigh, and as a result Frank Iler, counsel for the borough, has been directed to notify the Lehigh Valley to take a house, fences and a well out of the public highway.

The encroachments are near the crossing where the trouble was, and it is alleged that the fences fronting the railroad property inclose one-half of the street. Maps in the County Clerk's office call for a roadway sixty feet wide, but there is barely thirty feet between the fences.

An official of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, when seen Tuesday a. m. said he supposed his company would move the house and fences if compelled to, but he did not think they would attempt to move the well.

ROAD RACE AT 'PLAINS WAS PULLED OFF O. K

No Effort was Made by Rev. Mr. Shott to Stop the Contest.

JEPPE SORENSON WINNER.

THERE WERE NO ACCIDENTS OR DISORDER.

But Six Riders Entered and Only Five Started—Hummer, of Plainfield, Got a Puncture But Captured the Time Prize—Not as Good Time Made as at Previous Races—Next Race Oct. 7th.

The third one of the series of 16-mile road races, given under the direction of W. S. Emery at Scotch Plains, was run Saturday afternoon and attracted a large crowd. Although it had been given out that the race would be stopped and the contestants placed under arrest on a charge of violating the borough ordinance regarding fast riding on the streets, nothing of the kind took place. The race was run without interference or accident. There was no attempt on the part of the members of the Citizens' League or of any citizen to enter a protest. Generally speaking it was found that the citizens of the borough were much interested in the races.

Among the spectators was Rev. Mr. Shott and some of the members of his congregration. Mr. Shott watched the contest with apparent interest from in front of his residence. There was not the least semblance of indecency, the riders were all properly dressed and there was an entire absence of anything in the least resembling disorder during the race. Not a drunken man was to be seen and the best of order prevailed.

While the race was not as exciting as the ones previously held, it proved very interesting and was watched by nearly 1,000 men and women.

There were but six entries, owing no doubt to the published statements that the riders would be arrested if they attempted to race. However, the absence of a large number made the racing all the more spirited, and in a measure prevented possible accidents caused by overcrowding the course. The following entered:

Robert Angleman, George Woodland, Jeppe Sorenson, Charles Hummer, Plainfield; William Embleton, Westfield, and Arthur Chapin, Scotch Plains. At the last moment Woodland sent word that he could not start. The others lined up as follows: Robert Angleman, Plainfield, 4 minutes; Jeppe Sorenson, Plainfield, 3 minutes; William Embleton, Plainfield, 3 minutes; Arthur Chapin, Scotch Plains, 2 minutes; Charles Hummer, Plainfield, scratch.

The got a good start, the three minute men soon overhauling Angleman, who finding the race too hot dropped out at the first turn. Hummer was unfortunate in having a puncture on the first eight miles. Before he could secure another wheel the others had secured a big lead. At one time it looked as though Hummer would be lost in the shuffle, but he clearly demonstrated that he was made of the right stuff and was soon seen to be closing up on his opponents. Though riding at a magnificent speed the Plainfield man was unable to overtake the bunch. The good start secured by Sorenson was easily held by that rider and he crossed the tape a winner, closely followed by Embleton, of Westfield, and then Chapin, also of this city. Hummer was several lengths behind.

The first prize was won by Sorenson, of this city. Embleton, of Westfield, was second, and Chapin, of Scotch Plains, third. The time of the winner was 46 minutes and 30 seconds. Hummer covered the distance in 36 minutes and 25 seconds, thus winning the time prize.

The prizes were gold, silver and bronze watch pendants. The time prize was a pair of gold sleeve buttons.

Harry Lister acted as starter; Walter Long and George C. Smith were the timers, and William Walters and Matthews Sweeney were the judges.

The next race will be held Saturday, October 7th. It was Mr. Emery's intention to hold the race next Saturday, but in deference to Admiral Dewey, whom all of Scotch Plains desires to cordially welcome, the race was postponed one week.

The friends of Hummer and Chapin are trying to arrange a match race between these two fast riders.

DR LEWIS PREACHED ON DREYFUS TRIAL

France Dishonored Herself and Name of Christian Religion.

WORLD'S DEBT TO THE JEWS.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE BEST IN LIFE MADE BY THEM.

Danger to Personal and National Liberty Which the French Trial Brought About—An Appeal to Heaven-born Principles of Justice to be Applied to Every Day Life in This World.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, editor of The Sabbath Recorder, preached at the Trinity Reformed church Sunday evening from eighty-nine Psalm, the thirteenth verse: "Justice and Judgment are the Foundation of Thy Throne." His theme was: "Justice for all Men, Even the Jew." The personal presence nor the illustrations which filled out the sermon cannot be produced, but the following is a brief outline of what was said:

"For many weeks past the eyes of the world have rested on the city of Rennes in France, where, in the name of justice, the trial of Captain Alfred Dreyfus culminated in a condemnation which the civilized world has condemned as being the embodiment of injustice. Smitten by the fierce condemnation of the world, the civil power has hastened to grant a pardon to the man thus wronged, and thus has begun the undoing of a long series of unjust acts which we hope will yet acknowledge to the world the innocence of this martyr to militarysm and race hatred. This trial, and the interest of the world in it, are ample justification for the choice of my theme this evening.

"The throne of God rests on justice. All our hopes of forgiveness and help from God are based on His love and justice. All that is good in human experience, all that makes for righteousness and justice among men, starts in the justice of God. Pervert justice and all forms of ruin follow. The main case of the injustice which has been poured upon Dreyfus started in a race-hatred which is as undeserved as it is base and unchristian. Dreyfus is a Jew, and in condemning him France dishored herself and the name of Christian civilization.

"All the writers of the New Testament were Jews. We hold no word of inspiration but from Jewish pen. Christianity is the child of Judaism, and if the Hebrew race has failed to follow the teachings of Christ as fully as they ought, or if Christianity has been perverted from the basis on which Christ placed, it is yet true that Judaism and Christianity are so closely akin that the debt of the world of the firm is entitled to an amount of respect and justice which the world has long refused to render.

Dr. Lewis discussed the danger to personal and national liberty and justice whenever and wherever false witness, bribery, intrigue and the like come in to pervert and set aside right and justice. He said:—

"Keep the judical ermine unsoiled, from the simplest court of daily trial to the highest tribunal of nations."

"In closing he made appeal for the application of the heaven-born principles of justice in every relation of life.

"Nail the ten commandments and their teachings of justice, honesty, and purity to every business counter in Plainfield. He said:—"Hang them on the walls of every lawyer's office. Pack them into the outfit of every soldier. Nail them to the doors of the National Capitol, and put a copy bound in gold on the desk of the chief executive. Lay them at the desk of every business man in the land tomorrow morning. Hang them over every editor's table, and teach them to every school child. When this is done shames like the Dreyfus trial will be forgotten, and the world will rejoice in the fuller fruitage of our blessed religion, which was born amid the early throes of the Hebrew National life, and found its perfect ideal in the man of Calvary. As an ancient Pagan proverb could say: 'Let justice rule though the heavens fall,' what shall our Christian civilization answer to the unjust condemnation at Rennes?"

Dr. Lewis occupied the pulpit in Trinity church also in the morning, when his sut ject was "How Christ Enriches Human Life," from the text "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it abundantly," John 10:10, last clause. The sermon was a tender, uplifting one, and was thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated by the large congregation present.

Friday a Holiday in the Schools.

Friday will be observed as a holiday in the Plainfield public schools. So many of the school children will go to New York on that day to see the naval parade that the schools, particularly by the older children, would be practically deserted. So it has been decided to close the schools for that day and allow teachers and pupils to attend the nation's welcome to Admiral Dewey.

HOW A SHOT FEELS

REPORT OF SOLDIERS WHO WERE WOUNDED IN ACTION.

There Is a Tradition That Men Shall Not Have Feelings When Under Fire, But It Is Natural—Wounded Men Explain Sensation.

A man in New York set out after the recent war to find soldiers who had been wounded in action. He wanted to ask them about their wounds, to know how they acted when hurt, and especially what was the first conscious thought—the psychological effect, in short.

The investigation was attended with certain difficulties. In the first place a surprisingly small percentage of the of the invading army had been wounded. Soldiers had suffered all sorts of other things, from sunstroke to yellow jack, but Spanish marksmanship seemed less and less to be feared as the search went on. Even after the investigator corralled some men who had been shot, he had trouble in making them tell about it—a whole lot of trouble, in fact. Many of them were like the old sergeant of regulars, whose tale was as follows: "I was shot in the leg, sorr. Oi tumbled down, sorr. I felt like hell, sorr." There is a tradition that men shall not have feelings when they are under fire. When they tell of their feelings at all it comes in the nature of a confession—something to be apologized for. That is what drill and training are for as much as anything else—to create a habit that will be strong enough to resist nature. Consequently it was among the volunteers who had not prepared themselves so thoroughly as the regulars for this kind of crisis, that most of the interesting mental phenomena occurred.

There was one member of the Seventy-first Regiment who was shot in the leg, and he said that the mental chagrin he felt was intense chagrin. His people, he said, were of the "let the others go" variety of patriots. They did not formally bid him adieu, but the consensus of home opinion was against it. They took the ground that other lives, of less value either to their owners or society, were to be risked by a soldier, as well. He argued that he did not expect to lose either life or limb or health. Were the loss any of these certain he would not have enlisted. And he concluded that his chances were nearly as good as if he were to remain at home. Well, when he was shot down there in Cuba, the episode became part of disillusion in a way that was sudden.

["I Forgot All About Myself."]

complete, and not at all unnatural or grotesque. Swifter than the shot came the thought: "What will the folks say to me now? And how am I going to explain this?"

Another volunteer said that when he was shot he felt like standing up and telling the Spanish army that they had performed the feat of final demerit not only to this country, but to the whole universe. The idea of his getting shot struck him as having been compassed only by means of an inexcusable relaxation of attention on the part of Providence. He could not reconcile it with preconceived ideas. He said that he stood up and spluttered in the direction from which the shot had come like a mad baby until somebody came along and pulled him over backwards and told him to shut up. During his subsequent illness and delirium the volunteer became possessed of a perfect mental picture of the officer who shot him to the most minute change of expression and effect of dress. That Spanish soldier has as dis tinct a personality as he has himself, and even yet he seems more real and easier of identification than most people with whom the American has a working acquaintance. The volunteer said that so far as he knew the Spaniard's face was not one which he had ever before seen or imagined. It was only after his consciousness that he was able to separate what actually happened from what occurred in his imagination, and he knows now that the Spaniard was a dream.

"My regiment had taken to the shrub jungle on nearing the front from Siboney," said another volunteer, "and I was crawling through the jungle. I found myself following a man who was much bigger than I, so much bigger that I finally felt we were to stand in a row he would overlap me at all points. It was through no contrivance of mine that I wrote myself into particular man. It just happened for the same reason that he was following somebody else, in a way mon have, in connection with this thing. All the Spanish bullets were drilling nasty little holes in the air and spattering through the leaves above our heads. I remember being particularly grateful for not being as big as the man ahead of me. It was but a step from this to taking advantage of the cover his size afforded. I remember arguing with myself that I was not doing anything mean or contemptible; that the big man stood a greater chance and that I stood fewer by the arrangement. I didn't feel as though I was cheating him out of anything; in short, although I was dead sure that if he turned and caught me dodging when he dodged and stopping when he stopped, there would be strife within our lines. All at once there was a little twinge in my arm. It had the numbing effect, without the pain, of being struck on the funny bone. Somehow I knew at once what it was, and my first thought was for my friend, the big man. He was walking serenely away, notwithstanding the fact that he must have had a bullet hole through the middle of his stomach. I forgot all about myself and wanted almost breathlessly for him to stagger and fall. He kept right on until he drew out of sight, and when I realized that my bullet must have gone right through him without any effect at all my profound astonishment gave way to rage. I felt as though he had cheated me. I tried in vain to formulate some kind of remonstrance and hurl it at his retreating figure."

"Ever since the war," said another officer, "my memory has been developing details that were recorded for the time to the rear by my interest in the greater drama. Many of them, although small in themselves, illustrate the personal courage and devotion of the troops. There is one episode that in particular typifies the American soldier; I like to think so, at any rate. When I was shot I was lying down. When I first saw him he was already a dead man, if I ever saw one. He was on his feet, shambling along with that unnatural kind of motion that comes to men of great vitality when they are wounded beyond repair. His forehead was all puckered up, his mouth was closed tight, and his eyes were staring. He halted suddenly and shook all over. Just as he fell—even, as it seemed, in the very act of falling—he looked up and smiled at me. That was my first recognition came into his eyes, and then he straightened with a jerk and saluted me as stolidly as though he was on parade. His face was all torn and ragged, the wound from a shell probably, and the final effort sent the blood flying all over his face. There was nothing in the act of conscious dramatic effort. This well-drilled, well-disciplined, well-balanced private soldier of the United States army merely saluting me, his superior officer, and the thing that stood for his flag. He was a flat, flagrant piece of mechanism in the service of the professional instincts of any officer. I never knew his name or his record or his regiment, and I didn't want to know. I only knew that he was a soldier, and it has been the means of constant inspiration to know that we have that kind to work with."

A STORY OF GRANT.

How He Raised the Standard of Beauty at Dead Letter Office.

Most stories and reminiscences of Gen. Grant are of the military or political kind, but the following tale (and a pretty one) told by Assistant Attorney-General James N. Tyner, shows a new side of the great General's character.

"Several thousand letters go through the department of dead letters," said, Mr. Tyner, 'and jokingly commented on the unattractive appearance of the clerks. It is ridiculously true that if I could not raise the standard of female beauty.

"Naturally I regarded the matter as a joke, and replied that I would be glad to do so, and was open to suggestions.

"'Why, employ one handsome woman, and perhaps she will leaven the whole lot,' was answered, and when I assented he inquired seriously:

"'Would give a pretty girl an appointing?' to which I replied:

"'Of course I would." I replied, never dreaming, however, that he was in earnest.

"Then the next day a lovely young girl came into my office with a note from President Grant, simply asking me to fulfill my promise, without referring to the matter at all. I naturally questioned her closely and found her as innocent and unsophisticated as she was pretty. She was a Southerner and had come to Washington alone, but wanted a Government position, and, being backed by the President, I set her at work in the Dead-Letter Office.

"Some months after this I went around the world I spent a couple of months with him in Paris, and one evening as we sat talking of the past I asked him if he regretted appointing the girl.

"'Certainly I do, for I have good cause to remember her.'

"I intimated that I was satisfied there was a story back of his answer, and he was in one of his rare reminiscent moods he related the the following extraordinary experience:

"'It was just before the battle of the Wilderness that I mounted my horse and went for a ride. I was full of anxiety, and in my preoccupation I went outside of our lines and found to my dismay that I was being chased.

"'My horse was a good one and I rode for my life, but a little half concealed cabin, where I dismounted and said to the man who came to the door:

"'Are you a Confederate or a Union man?'

"'I am a Confederate," he answered proudly.

"'Well, sir, I am Gen. Grant. Can you hide me for a little while, as I am being pursued?'

"'How do you know that I won't betray you?" he inquired, curiously.

"'Because I can trust your face," I replied, and without more ado he seized my horse and led it into a little wood into a deep ravine back of his home, where a moment later he left me, after bidding me to keep perfectly still.

"'It was a long, uncomfortable night and I could see every object distinctly. About 11 o'clock I heard the bushes crackle, and for a moment my heart stood still, for I felt sure my host came cautiously up behind me.

"'Have you betrayed me?' I inquired sharply.

"'No, sir,' he replied, almost harshly; the pursuing party has passed, the coast is clear and you can return to your army.'

"He put me on the right road, and as I jumped into the saddle I grasped his hand and tried to thank him. I told him that if I could serve him or his he must let me know.

"'I never saw him again, but the day you spoke to me his daughter came to me with a letter from you, who was very poor, reminding me of my promise. And this,' concluded Gen. Grant, 'was the sole reason I wanted to raise the standard of female beauty in the Dead-Letter Office.'"

CARE OF THE TEETH

MOST PEOPLE PAY TOO LITTLE ATTENTION TO THEM.

The Most Common Causes of Bad Teeth—Acid Injures Teeth More Than Sweets—The Most Important Rule to Follow to Preserve Them.

It is curious what little attention people pay to their teeth. If anyone's boots happen to wear out he has them repaired at once, and when a button gets loose he has it sewn on, but unless a bad toothache drives him to the dentist he will let every tooth in his mouth wear down to a stump without giving it a thought.

Of course the result in most cases is bad dyspepsia, besides an exceedingly ugly disfigurement of the mouth.

Yet nothing is easier for people of ordinary good health than to keep sound teeth in their heads until they have reached a good old age. But to do this they should begin to take care of them when young—very young.

One of the commonest causes of bad teeth is taking food too hot. When you drink a cup of very hot tea the enamel expands, but if you take ice cream afterward, when you breathe the cold air, it contracts. This alternate swelling and shrinking makes the enamel flake off, leaving the soft dentine covering goes the spongy inner substance crumbles away in no time.

To prove how injurious hot food is, says the Philadelphia Inquirer, a dentist recently performed an instructive experiment. He sot a glass of hot and a glass of cold water, and pulled a perfectly sound tooth first in one, then in the other, and so on, backward and forward, several hundred times with the result that the enamel was completely worn off.

Every one knows the injurious effects of eating acids, and the many foolish girls drink vinegar to make their faces pale, and, as they think, interesting. Of course the teeth pay the penalty. A young lady of my acquaintance lately had lost almost every tooth in her head from sucking lemons, and some of my most profitable patients are people given to eating pickles. It is not necessary altogether to avoid acids, but a little jar of bicarbonate of soda should be kept on every one's washstand and the teeth should be rinsed in water in which some of it has been dissolved. This, by the way, is a sure-failing cure for that kind of toothache that attacks the whole jaw at once.

Some people say that sweets are bad for the teeth, but this is not quite true. that. West Indians, who actually live on sugar during the harvesting of the cane, have ivories like snow and without a flaw. But sugar does not have begun to decay the sugar lodges in the crevices and a little microbe, who makes his home in the mouth, conperts it into acid. That acid, in turn, attacks the phosphate of lime which composes the dentine, and then, certainly, sugar is bad.

But cracking nuts with the teeth is destructive. If you crack nuts you are sure also to crack the enamel. Therefore, don't crack nuts with them on the ground and stamp on them.

Tooth powders and tooth washes are answerable for many a toothache and decayed tooth. They are often sold are gritty; pastes contain injurious chemicals, and though both help to whiten the teeth they inevitably wear away the enamel. Most of the washes such as tincture of myrrh, keep the gums more or less inflamed and finally loosen the teeth. Hard tooth brushes ruin the gums.

The best way to clean your teeth is to wipe them with a bit of a sponge attached to a handle, using tepid water containing a trace of some mild antiseptic. If you use a brush rub it up and down, not across the teeth.

Smoking tobacco cannot fail to color the teeth yellow, and probably it weakens the gums and brings on decay. But if you can scarcely be induced to do without your smoke for the sake of a few teeth.

But whatever precautions you take one or two of your teeth will probably begin to go. The moment this happens visit a dentist and have the cavity filled. Then comes the most important rule with regard to the teeth. And you will save money by the operation, for it is cheaper to have a tooth filled today than replaced twelve months hence.

The Czar's Physician.

A health magazine, Omega, says: The Czar of Russia, Russia, instead of being an invalid just ready to die, is a man of good health and great ability to work, and he is also a hygienist to a far greater extent than is generally believed, and his physician is also a hygienist in so far as cleanliness of fresh air are concerned. He is thus spoken of in relation to the last Emperor:

"Fresh air was the creed emblazoned on his banner, and fresh air he would have at any cost. No practitioner had more stoutly demanded the assistance of this valuable aid to nature. Fresh air was his life. Insistence doubtless occasioned much heart burning among his patients, who, like many others in our country, have a great fear of fresh air in the sick room. Zaccharin entertained no such qualms, and with brusque petulancy insisted that doors and windows be opened. When he visited the Czar he found him surrounded by the Czarina and other members of the family sitting in a stifling atmosphere, ignoring the presence of the exalted individuals, he loudly demanded air, remarking at the same time, in tones of deep reproach: 'What a shame that it is disease-breeding. And in this air you allow Russia's little father to die! And then, without more ado, he roughly tore down the curtains and threw open the windows."

Silk Spun by Shellfish.

A shellfish, known as the pianna, in the Mediterranean has the curious power of spinning a viscid silk, which is made in Italy into a regular fabric. It is found in the shellfish, in the first place, for the purpose of anchoring itself to the rocks. It is able to guide the delicate filaments to the proper place and then glue them fast, and if they are cut away it can reproduce them. The material when washed in soap and water, dried and straightened, gives a soft, fine, coarse filament yielding three ounces of the fine thread, which, when spun, is of a lovely burnished golden-brown color

LEADERS DEFEATED FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP.

Worth, Reed and M. T. Townsend Carried off Honors.

ANDERSON OUT OF FORM.

GEORGE C. WORTH WAS LOW MAN FOR THE AFTERNOON.

Senator Reed Scored Again for the Trophy—Worth Becomes a Factor in the Contest—Is Now Tied for Fifth Place—Miss Daisy Elsberg Increased Her Lead for Buttfield Cup—Many Out on Links.

The leaders for the McCutchen Cup were not in it at all on the links of the Park Golf Club Saturday afternoon. George C. Worth, who is rapidly developing into one of the steadiest players in the club, came to the front again deepite the fact that his handicap has already suffered severely at the hands of the greens committee and made low score for the day, thereby becoming a factor in the race for the trophy.

It was neither too warm nor too cold for golf and there was a large attendance at the course in consequence. For some reason, however, there were comparatively few who took part in the weekly competition for the McCutchen Cup. Among the visitors during the afternoon were many ladies. There were nine entries in the cup competition and five cards were handed in.

Worth made his first round in 60 and his second in 58. He played a steady game and showed much improvement in driving over his old form. There is little likelihood of his handicap being reduced, as it usually takes a lower net score than 98 to win first place.

Senator Charles A. Reed and Councilman George T. Rogers made their rounds together. The Senator was not playing quite as well as the week before, but he managed to finish second with a net score of 100.

W. de la R. Anderson and Morgan T. Townsend played together. Townsend was third with 105 net. His gross score of 110 was poor for him. Anderson was way off his usual form and failed to do anything better than 113. He has been unable to practice of late.

As a result of the play Saturday Worth has advanced from eleventh to fifth place, and now can be considered as a possible candidate for honors. Senator Reed stepped from seventeenth and is now tied for eighth place. Morgan Townsend went from eleventh to eighth, and is now only half a point behind his father.

The scores were:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
George C. Worth	118	20	98
Charles A. Reed	130	30	100
Morgan T. Townsend	110	5	105
George T. Rogers	131	21	110
W. de la R. Anderson	119	6	113

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

W. de la R. Anderson	12½
Meredith Dryden	10
Clifford W. Cooley	10
Charles E. Faber	7
C. W. Faber	7
Geo. T. Rogers	6
George C. Worth	6
Samuel Townsend	4½
Morgan T. Townsend	4
Charles A. Reed	4
Wm. A. Townsend	3½
T. T. Douglass	3½
H. D. Hibbard	3½
Wm. Hibbard	3
W. J. S. Thiers	2
Fred S. Thiers	2
A. S. Squires	2
Wm. Hall	1½
Volney F. Green	1½
Fred S. Overton	1½
Clarence Rogers	1½
Augustus VanDeventer	1½
H. D. Miller	1
C. W. McCutchen	1

Miss Elsberg and Miss Howell were both out and contested for the Buttfield cup. They were in better form than the week before. Miss Elsberg's greater handicap enabled her to defeat her opponent by four strokes. There is little doubt now but that Miss Elsberg will win the trophy. Their scores for the nine holes were:

	Gross.	Hand'cap.	Net.
Miss Daisy Elsberg	84	18	66
Miss Sadie Howell	74	4	70

There has been no official announcement of the number of points yet scored for the Buttfield cup, but an inspection of the past scores shows the following competitors and the points scored by them:

Miss Daisy Elsberg	20
Miss Elizabeth Terrell	14
Miss Adelaide G. Ball	3

DINNER AT GOLF CLUB HOUSE.

Charming Affair Given to Jolly Party by Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Andrews.

A jolly number enjoyed a dinner at the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club house Saturday evening. Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Andrews entertained a party of about twenty. Mr. and Mrs. Lozier and Mr. and Mrs. D. M. VanVliet entertained the guests.

The new furnishings of the clubhouse are most charming in effect and will make the members of the club more pleased than ever with their organization.

Deuse M. VanVliet, of Washington Park, also entertained a party of four at dinner at the clubhouse. Vincent Lozier, of Netherwood, gave a dinner to another party of seven.

E. P. Williams and daughters, the Misses Florence and Eleanor, sailed Saturday from Liverpool for New York after spending a month abroad.

HURRAHS FOR THE G. O. P. IN SOMERSET

Senatorial Aspirant Allows Himself to be Interviewed.

FRELINGHUYSEN'S IDEAS.

WHATEVER REPUBLICAN IS NAMED HE THINKS WILL WIN.

The Young Politician Talks Very Confidently of the G. O. P. Prospects in Somerset—A North Plainfield Republican Thinks He Would Win—The Candidacy of M. L. Suydam May be Strong.

The fact that Joseph S. Frelinghuysen has been frequently and favorably mentioned as a candidate for Senator from Somerset county led me to seek an interview with him at his office, No. 80 William street, New York. Mr. Frelinghuysen's active participation in the McKinley and Hobart Presidential campaign, and also in the Voorhees campaign, made for him an extensive acquaintance within and beyond Somerset county.

"You may put it down as one of the coming events," Mr. Frelinghuysen said, "that it is pretty certain to occur, that the next Senator from Somerset county will be a Republican. I cannot speak for Senator Reed, or for anybody but myself. He knows better than any one else whether he is a candidate or not. We are the best of friends, and if he should be renominated he can count on my support, just as he did three years ago. So, in fact, can the candidate of the party whoever he may be. Our business in Somerset county is to elect a Republican State Senator, and that is what we are going to do. This is a time when we need Republicans in the Legislature, in view of the fact that we are soon to choose a United States Senator. The importance of having as many Republicans in the United States Senate as we can get there, cannot, in my opinion, be over estimated, in view of the issues which are already developed or which are pretty sure to develop within the next few years. To me it would seem that no Republican in New Jersey can afford to lose sight of this situation, and I am sure the Republicans of Somerset county are going to stand loyally by the party."

As to his own candidacy, Mr. Frelinghuysen was not disposed to say much, but he did say that if the Senatorial nomination should come to him he would do his best to be elected, and that he would do a great deal.

As a testimonial to the strength and sincerity of Mr. Frelinghuysen's Republicanism in Somerset county, a Plainfield Republican remarked: "If we should nominate 'Joe' Frelinghuysen for Senator, all doubts of Republican success would be removed from the minds of everybody. He is clear, popular, has no entangling alliances of any kind, and is one of the most indefatigable workers that pull in the party traces, and he never has to be watched for fear that he will kick over them."

To the list of Republican candidates for Senator in Somerset county the name of Mather L. Suydam has been added. The report is being circulated, and it comes from a source which is regarded as authentic, that Mr. Suydam has the support of ex-Senator Thompson. However, Mr. Thompson has been quoted as favoring the candidacy of ex-Sheriff Dilts, and it may be—in fact, it is probable—that Mr. Thompson has not fully committed himself to any of the candidates. So far Major E. J. Anderson, who is one of the shrewdest leaders and tacticians in the Republican party, and who beat Mr. Thompson in county, has not made any pledges to anybody. There is plenty of evidence that if Mr. Suydam should become an out and out candidate he will have a large following. He is one of the best known Republicans in the IIId Congressional District. His interests in Somerset and the adjoining county of Middlesex are large and varied.

BLOSSOMED FIVE TIMES.

Remarkable Night Blooming Cereus at the Scott Press Works.

The famous night blooming cereus at the Scott Press Works, which usually has four series of blossoms each year, has outdone itself this season.

A few days ago it produced the fifth series this season and what was unusual the blossoms were fully open during the day, probably owing to the cool cloudy weather.

Last year this plant had sixty-five blossoms. This year it had thirteen, twenty seven, thirty-five and twelve each series, eighty-seven in all.

Cadets to Reorganize.

It is expected that the Plainfield High School cadets will reorganize this week for fall and winter drill. A number of the old cadets have left school but there is plenty of new material and it is expected that the corps will be larger than ever this year. The new officers have not yet been appointed.

ISSUED $180 CHECK TO A STRANGE NAME.

Mayor Rockfellow Made the Defendant in an Action.

CAUSED BY TORREY FAILURE

DREW THE CHECK AS A FAVOR TO GENERAL SWENCK.

The Check Made Out in the Name of One "J. C. Monroe"—Cashed by Banker Torrey for General Swenck, but Another Check Given to Pay the First One Was Not Honored by Bank.

Mayor George W. Rockfellow is the defendent in an action brought before Justice Abbott by Oscar Richter, a lawyer, of 302 Broadway, New York, who is also the trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of D. M. Torrey, formerly a broker in New York city, but who made an assignment about a year ago.

The suit was brought last July on behalf of the plaintiff by Reed & Coddington, of this city, who sue to recover the amount of a check for $180, which Mr. Rockfellow issued on October 1st, 1896, made payable to one J. C. Monroe. Mr. Rockfellow issued the check at the request of Gen. S. W. Swenck, who lives in the vicinity of Oak Tree. The check, it appears, was paid by D. M. Torrey. It had been endorsed "J. C. Monroe." The check was drawn on the First National Bank of Plainfield.

After passing through Mr. Torrey's hands it was sent to the National Park Bank at New York for deposit. Subsequently this check, so Mayor Rockfellow says, was paid by another check which has became mislaid, also issued at the request of Gen. Swenck. This check was finally protested by the First National Bank in this city. Mr. Richter, as trustee of the Torrey estate, now brings suit to recover on the check. There have been several hearings of the case. Friday morning Attorney William A. Coddington, of the firm of Reed & Coddington, representing the plaintiff, and Attorney Nelson Runyon for the defendant, argued the case.

The peculiar thing about the case is the fact that Mayor Rockfellow testified that he had no acquaintance with any person by the name of "J. C. Monroe," and had never seen him. Mr. Richter, the trustee far the Torrey estate, has testified that the books of the assignee do not show any transaction connected with the check. The case has attracted considerable attention. Justice Abbott reserved decition.

FORTY DAYS IN JAIL

A Familiar Face in City Court Decides the Judge in Imposing a Severe Sentence.

It was a familiar face that appeared before City Judge Runyon Friday a. m. John Mitchell is an umbrella mender hailing from no place in particular. In connection with his trade, he also canvasses the town for stray articles and incidentally lives to a large extent on the charity of well-disposed persons. Mitchell has been here before. He finds Plainfield a delightful section in which to work.

A month ago he came before the Judge and went down to the county jail for twenty days. That was because he couldn't raise a fine of $5. This morning the Judge recognized the face and was not favorably impressed.

Judge Runyon doubled the sentence and Mitchell went down the road for forty days in default of a fine of $10.

Entertained Friends.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wise, of Grandview avenue, entertained a number of their friends at their home Friday. The evening was passed with instrumental music and songs by Miss Carrie Pangborn and Mrs. Wakefield of Somerset place. During the evening refreshments were served. There were about thirty-five ladies and gentlemen present. Mr. Wise was formerly the chief marshal of the borough and he and his estimable wife has many friends.

FREED FROM HER VOWS AS A WIFE

An Absolute Divorce Granted to Sarah R. Robinson.

CRUELTY AND DESERTION.

THOSE WERE THE CHARGES AGAINST THE HUSBAND.

Couple Were Married by Rev. D. J. Yerkes in 1875, and for Several Years the Husband was a Conductor on the Central Railroad—Mrs. Robinson Now Keeps a Boarding House.

In the Court of Chancery at Trenton, Tuesday, Chancellor McGill granted an absolute divorce to Sarah R. Robinson, of this city, from her husband, Emery H. Robinson. The decree was secured by Former Judge William A. Codington, of the firm of Reed & Coddington, and was granted on the grounds of cruel treatment and desertion.

The couple were married in this city by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church. November 3d, 1875. For a time they lived in Dunellen.

Mr. Robinson was for several years a conductor on the Central Railroad. He is new living in New York city.

PORTSMOUTH TO BE THERE.

New Jersey Naval Reserves Gratified by the New Decision of the Dewey Parade Committee.

Members of the Batalion of the East, Naval Reserves of New Jersey, were extremely indignant when it was announced that the plan and scope committee of the Dewey Celebration had decided not to assign the old war sloop Portsmouth, training ship of the battalion, as a stakeboat in the naval parade. Joy took the place of indignation among the men yesterday over the counter announcement that the Portsmouth could could be used as a stakeboat, after all.

It was first the plan of the committee to tow the Portsmouth to the station and anchor her there as a stakeboat. That would cost between $200 and $300, and when the St. Mary's, which is of like type and rig to the Portsmouth, was offered free of all cost, the committee decided to accept the offer. General Howard Carroll has written Commander Irving, of the New Jersey Naval Reserves, that his committee has kept the place beside the St. Mary's for the Portsmouth, but that the committee had no money to spend in towing her to the anchorage. General Carroll expects the Jersey men will take up their position at their own expense.

QUIET HOME WEDDING.

Miss Lottie Grace Voorhies Becomes the Wife of J. F. Green, of Buffalo.

A pretty home wedding took place at noon Sept. 20th, at the residence of Mrs. J. D. Voorhies, of Oak Tree, when her daughter, Miss Lottie Grace Voorhies, was united to John Frederick Green, of Buffalo. The bride looked charming in her traveling dress of pearl gray cloth with white silk trimmings. She carried a bouquet of maiden hair pin and white asters tied with pearl satin ribbons.

The house decorations were of smylax, lavender and white asters. An arch under which the bridle couple stood was of the same. The Rev. Mr. Maison, of the First Presbyteran church, of Metchen, performed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Green took the 3 o'clock train on a short bridal tour, and on their return will reside at Hotel Netherland, New York. Owing to a recent death, only the family and near friends of the bride and groom were present, including Mr. and Mrs. William Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. Walter H Dorlon, Mrs. Spreg and Mrs. Huntington, of New York.

Going Into Business For Himself.

J. P. Hutchison, for the past five years manager of J. H. Leggett's pharmacy, has purchased the Opera House Pharmacy at Cranford, nearly opposite the railroad station in the opera house block. He takes possession October 1st. Mr. Hutchison has made many friends in this city by his careful and conscientious work. He is a competent pharmacist and graduated with high honors from the New York College of Pharmacy. He will undoubtedly make a success of his new venture.

HOW SILK IS MADE AT WATCHUNG MILL.

Local Manufactory of Silk Fabric in Full Blast.

THIRTY LOOMS ARE GOING.

EXACT MACHINERY USED IN MAKING THE SILK.

The Raw Silk is First Dyed Out of Town and Then Brought Here to be Woven Into the Rich Fabric—The Machinery Used in the Process—Ralph Whiteley and Wm. R. Stansberry are in Charge.

It isn't any easy job to properly weave a silk fabric. It takes skilled workmen and some very exact and complicated machinery. A glimpse of the mill on the second floor of the Scheppin building, West Front street, operated by the Watchung Silk Company, gives some idea of the wonderful industry.

The local silk mill is now in full operation with thirty looms busy. As the proper facilities for that work are yet lacking, the dyeing of the raw silk is done elsewhere. The silk, properly colored, is brought here in skeins. It first goes to a machine called a winder, where it is transferred to bobbins or spoons and queer little arms called "quillers," for use in the shuttle of the loom. Then the silk threads are unwound from the bobbins into the warper to the number of some 5,000 side by side. The "warp" thus prepared is rolled on cylinders ready for use on the looms. On the looms the cross threads or the woof is woven in. Every time a new warp is placed on a loom it is necessary to fasten every one of those 5,000 threads to another by hand.

Some of the looms are equipped with as many as four different shuttles so that the silk fabric may be made with more than one color. Stripes and figures can thus be arranged. Most of the labor came here from Paterson, the centre of the silk manufacturing district. It is the intention of the Watchung Company to teach some local help to handle the looms and other machinery as soon as possible.

Ralph Whitley, a man of great experience in the silk business, is manager of the Watchung Company's mill and has been very successful so far. William R Stansbery, of Scotch Plains, looks after the business end of the concern.

DARLING IS SENTENCED.

Goes to State's Prison for Twenty Years.

WAS ARRAIGNED FRIDAY.

PLEADED NON VULT TO THE CHARGE OF MURDER.

His Counsel W. S. Angleman, Made A Strong Plea For Mercy In His Behalf—Presented Affidavit Of Witness of Shooting—Darling Goes To State Prison Monday.

William Darling, who shot and killed Harry Dunham at New Market four years ago, pleaded non vult to the indictment of murder in the first degree at the Court of Oyer and Terminer Friday morning and Justice Collins sentenced him to a term of twenty years in the State Prison.

The arraignment Friday was a surprise as it was generally understood that Prosecutor Voorhees was not yet ready and that the arraignment would not take place until Tuesday.

The plea was the result of an understanding between the Prosecutor and W. S. Angleman, of Plainfield, counsel for the defence.

The killing of Dunham took place August 20th, 1895. Darling was indicted for murder in the first degree shortly after the fatality took place. Darling was finally captured this summer at McConnellsburg, Fulton county, Pennsylvania, and has since been lodged in the Middlesex county jail in New Brunswick.

Darling was brought before Justice Collins Friday morning. He was apparently cool and self composed. He showed no signs of nervousness. After Lawyer Angleman had offered the plea of non vult, which had already been accepted by the prosecution, he made a strong appeal for mercy for his client. His speech was an excellent one.

During his remarks he introduced an affidavit by Edward Mitchell, a colored man who witnessed the murder. Mitchell declared that the quarrel started during a game of pool at Dantz's hotel New Market. Dunham made an insulting remark about Darling's mother and there were several words passed. Then Mitchell said that Darling fired a shot over Dunham's head to intimidate him. Dunham started for Darling as if to come to close quarters and Darling shot again, the bullet striking Dunham in the head.

Prosecutor Voorhees made no reply to Lawyer Angleman's speech, and Justice Collins immediately sentenced Darling to a term of twenty years in State's prison. Darling showed no signs of agitation when the sentence was pronounced.

According to law, the prisoner remained in the county jail forty-eight hours after he is sentenced to State Prison. Monday morning Darling was taken to Trenton to serve his term. No attempt will be made to secure a slighter sentence.

PUSHING TROLLEY WORK.

Tremendous Amount of Grading Will Have to be Done Along Jerusalem Road.

Work on the trolley is being rushed between Westfield and Scotch Plains. The workmen are now very busy in the woods off the Jerusalem road. A tremendous amount of grading will have to be done, the line passing directly through the woods till nearing Scotch Plains. The rails have been laid nearly to Prospect street. Colonel E. W. Hine, Contractor L. M. Serrill and Engineer H. C. VanEmburgh went over the line yesterday and talked over grades and other parts of the work. Trolley wires are being strung at Garwood and in the southern portion of the township through which the trolley passes. The road work done by the trolley is being appreciated by the citizens and property owners.

MURRAY PRIMARY SYSTEM ADOPTED

Republican Committee Decided the Matter Last Night.

IT AFFORDS A SECRET VOTE.

FEW MINOR DETAILS OF OPERATION MAY BE CHANGED.

The Plan Originated by Mr. Murray Was Given a Trial Last Year—It Was Thought the Old Method Would be Returned to This Year, But the Committee is to Continue Murray System.

The introduction of the element of secrecy in the method of balloting at the local Republican primaries last year, according to the Roger F. Murray system, called forth considerable comment, favorable and adverse. It was said that the G. O. P. would return to the old method this year. The decision was left to a sub-committee of the city executive committee, composed of J. B. Dumont, chairman; Ernest R. Ackerman and W. B. Codington.

A meeting of the sub-committee was held Sept. 26th, when it was decided to continue the Murray system at the primaries preceeding the State election in November. Assemblyman Roger F. Murray, the originator of the secret ballot system used in last year's primaries, was present.

There may be a few minor changes in the details of the plan that experience has shown to be advisable but the general idea will be retained.

At the primaries preceeding the city election in December, the same method of balloting will be used. There will be a nominating primary, however. If there is only one list of candidates nominated, then no electing primary will be held but the one will stand as the decision of the ward where it is held without further action.

SENATOR KEAN'S NEW LINE.

Trolley Road Between Elizabeth and Elizabethport is Now in Operation.

United States Senator John Kean's new trolley road began operations Thursday in Elizabeth. The line is now two and a half miles long and runs between Broad street, Elizabeth, and the Staten Island ferry at Elizabethport. The first car to run over the road was decorated and carried Senator Kean, his brother, Julius Kean, Alderman Patterson, Superintendent Smith, of the North Jersey Traction Company, Supervising Constructor Turner and guests.

It is the intention of the company to extend its lines and to run to Plainfield if it can overcome the opposition of the property owners, who object to what they term the low awards for the 40 feet of their property frontage, which will be required to widen the avenue from 66 to 100 feet. Senator Kean has offered $250,000 for the property affected.

A Pleasant, Profitable Evening.

Capt. Geo. D. Morrison led the prayer meeting in Trinity Reformed church Sept. 20th, and after a very helpful half-hour of prayer, Scripture exposition and singing, Mr. Morrison gave a brief, but very interesting account of a visit he and his daughter had made through the streets of Manila and into the hospital at that place, after the routing of the Filipinos by our troops and warships in February last. At the close of his remarks Capt. Morrison paid a glowing tribute to the stalwart western men in the U. S. army and comparing their gentle, compassionate disposition to the sneaky, treacherous Spanish soldier or Filipino. He attributed the great difference in the men to the fact that the average American soldier had during his boyhood been an attendant at Sunday-school, while the enemy had no such opportunity, as Sunday-schools were not in existence in those islands under Spanish rule.

The High School Cadets

The Plainfield High School cadets have not held any drills as yet. It is expected that Capt. Geo. F. Edwards will call the old members of the company together the first of next month, enroll the new boys in the High School cadets and announce his appointments for officers. The cadets will not take part in the Dewey parade in New York. There will not be time for the boys to get together and so the plan, once thought of, has been given up.

Mad Dog at Avon Park.

The residents of Avon Park had a scare Monday morning when a dog appeared which it was believed was mad. Edward Campbell went after the intruder with a shotgun and killed the canine before any people or other dogs were bitten.

To Enter Lehigh University.

Everett J. Peck and Arthur Peck, of Myrtle avenue, left today for Bethlehem, Pa. The former is now a Junior at Lehigh University while the latter has just entered that institution as a Freshman, having graduated from Leal's School last June.

NOTABLE GRADUATES OF THE HIGH SCHOOL.

Men Who Have Made Their Mark in This World.

HIGH IN THE PROFESSIONS.

SEVERAL ARE ENGAGED IN COLLEGE WORK NOW.

Corporation Counsel Marsh Was One of the First Graduates—Many of Them Followed up Their High School Learning With Courses in Colleges Which Fitted Them for the Life Work.

Those who have taken time to think of the distinguished people who secured the basis of their education in this city and are numbered among the graduates of the Plainfield High School, find quite a lengthy list of notables, many of whom have a national reputation.

Taking them in the order of graduation, Craig A. Marsh, corporation counsel of the city of Plainfield and one of the leading lawyers of the State, was among the first. He graduated in 1872, received the degree of A. B. from Union College and B. L. at the Columbia Law School Among his classmates were William M. Stillman, another of Plainfield's best known lawyers and prominent men, who afterwards went to Rutgers College, and Arthur F. Kimball, who now occupies the chair of physics at Amherst College. Professor Kimball graduated from Princeton, receiving the degree of B. A. and was made Ph. D. after a course at John Hopkins College.

In the class of '75 there was William D. Murray who practices law in New York and has a charming home in this city. He is known throughout the country by his prominent connection with the Y. M. C. A. work, and is now a member of the national committee of that organization. He graduated from Yale, where he was made an A. B.

The following year Rev. Dr. Everett D. Burr graduated. Dr. Burr is now one of the leading Baptist clergymen of Boston, and was prominently mentioned for the presidency of Brown University when that position was vacant.

Frank W. Runyon, now editor and proprietor of the Plainfield Courier-News, was a member of the same class. He graduated from Cornell University after completing his High School course.

In the class of '77 there was another newspaper man, Ernest O. Chamberlain, who won his way to the head of his profession and became city editor of the New York World. He died as a result of the terrible strain of his duties at the time of the destruction of the "Maine."

Miss Kate F. Kimball, who is now general secretary of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, with headquarters in Cleveland, O., was also a member of the class of '77.

Prof. B. Rush Rhees, who graduated in '78, is one of the most distinguished of the High School alumni. He completed his education at Amherst College and afterwards reached the position of professor at the Newton Theological Seminary. This summer he was chosen president of Rochester University.

Miss Georgia L. Chamberlain, now private secretary to President Harper, of Chicago University, was a member of that same class.

Among the graduates in 1879 was Franklin Baldwin Wiley, who graduated later from Harvard College, and has now become literary editor of the Ladies' Home Journal.

George E. Vincent, son of Bishop Vincent, was among the members of the class of '98. He graduated from Yale, receiving the degree of A. B. He is now professor of sociology at the University of Chicago and at the head of the Chautauqua educational system. He was one of the most promising candidates for the presidency of Yale University, to which honor Prof. Arthur T. Hadley was finally raised.

Among the other members of the class of '80 is Ernest R. Ackerman, of this city, who is prominent in the commercial world and well known in the Republican party.

Edwin H. Lewis, a son of Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, of this city, completed his High School course in 1882. Later he was made principal of the High School, from which he graduated, and went from here to Chicago to become a professor at the University of Chicago. He is now one of the leading professors of the Lewis Institute at Chicago.

Among the later graduates of prominence are Lieut. Tileman N. Horn, now in the U. S. Artillery, and Wm. N. Runyon, city judge of Plainfield, and a rising young lawyer.

Case Has Been Settled.

The action brought before Justice McIlett some weeks ago by John F. O'Donnell, a New York lawyer, against Mrs. Josephine A. Hull, of Park avenue, for services rendered in an action for divorce, has been settled.

STATE TO SEND BOOKS TO RURAL SECTIONS.

The Traveling Library Idea Will Soon be Carried Out.

WOMEN URGED THE PLANS.

TWENTY LIBRARIES OF FIFTY BOOKS EACH TO BE STARTED.

To Secure One of These Libraries Some Responsible Person will Have to Make Application for It and Agree to Act as Librarian—One Community May Have Use of Books for Six Months at a Time.

As soon as the members of the State Library Commission return from their summer outing they will be called together for the purpose of perfecting the plan for a traveling library within the State. The idea is not a new one, but it was not until Gov. Griggs suggested that an appropriation be made by the Legislature two years ago to defray the expense of making the experiment, that the people of New Jersey gave it a serious thought.

The Federation of Women's Clubs took a lively interest in the suggestion and induced the Legislature last winter to appropriate $500 for the purchase of books and paraphernalia necessary to the conduct of the library.

The purpose of the Commission is to send books of a miscellaneous character to small towns in various sections of the State where there are no circulating libraries or reading rooms, and give the residents the benefit of up-to-date literature without expense to them.

The appropriation will enable the Commission to purchase 20 libraries of 50 books each, and the cases in which they are to be kept. To secure one of these libaries, application must be made for it by some responsible person in the community into whose charge it will be given. The intention is to have the library located in the postoffice or a store, where it will be available to the people during the day.

The person into whose keeping the library is given, is to act as librarian. He will be required to keep a record of each book given out, so that it can be traced to the person borrowing it, at any time.

The holder of a book is to be allowed to keep it a week or more, after which time one cent a day must be paid for its use. This is the only charge made for the use of the books.

A community may have the use of the books six months, at the end of which time it must be returned to the State Librarian, to be put in repair if necessary, and sent to some other town.

The impression prevails in some quarters that the books to be circulated in the traveling library are those already included in the State library. This is not true. Books will be especially purchased for the traveling libraries and will be selected upon suggestions made by the Library Commission and by members of the committees which intend to avail themselves of the opportunity to get the benefit of the libraries.

State Librarian Buchanan says that no applications for the libraries have yet been made and he thinks it is because the people haven't a thorough understanding of what the proposition means to them.

It has been the result in other States where the scheme has been tried, that persons with means have donated libraries of the traveling kind that have been named in their honor and several members of the Woman's Federation of Clubs have expressed the opinion that this will be done in New Jersey when the plan has been perfected.

The Federation meets at Atlantic City within a few weeks. It is expected that there will be 1,500 women present, representing the wealth and culture of the State. They have asked that one of the libraries be placed on exhibition in the convention hall so that they may have a clear idea of what it looks like and how it is to be handled.

Fitting Themselves as Lawyers.

The Law School of the University of New York will open its fall term October 1st. Carl Stedman Brown, of Mercer avenue, who was compelled to drive up his studies there last winter on account of ill health, will complete his course. John H. VanWinkle, Jr., of Duer street, will also be a member of the senior class. There are several of Plainfield's law students who are contemplating a course at that institution.

Big Money in Peaches.

The Hunterdon Democrat says it has been many years since the peach crop brought so much money to that county. There have been larger crops, but the prices ranged low. Baskets and picking cost the same for peaches selling at 20 cents as when they bring $1 a basket.

Music to Have the First Call.

The first entertainment of the season at Hope chapel will be held there Friday evening, October 6th, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society. It will be of a musical character.

REINHART CUP WON BY WHITNEY BAKER.

Made Lowest Score of Eighteen Competitors.

MORRIS DUMONT SECOND.

LOST HIS CHANCE ON THE EIGHTEENTH PUTTING GREEN.

Cup Won for the Seventh Time—J. H. P Wharton Has Won it Twice—Gurney Was Only Scratch Man Entered—Not up to His Usual Form—J. W. Baker Excelled His Best Score—Won With 78 Net.

The Reinhart cup furnished a lively competition on the links of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club Saturday afternoon This time it passed into the hands of J. Whitney Baker where it will remain until played for again in the spring. Baker only won out from Morris Dumont by one stroke and the sixteen other competitors who handed in their scores were comparatively close behind.

The day was a fine one for the sport and the course was consequently crowded. The golf committee has been putting the course in excellent condition and the improvements were much appreciated.

The Reinhart Cup competition is a men's handicap, eighteen holes, medal play. It was offered in 1896, by J. W. Reinhart, to be competed for twice a year until won by one member three times when it was to become his individual property. In November, 1896, Dr. F. C. Ard won the cup. J. H. P. Wharton captured it in June of the next year and Fred W. Walz made low score for it in September, 1897. Last year Olaf Saugstad won it in July and J. H. P. Wharton scored his second victory in October. Last June Henry V. Ryder won in a field of twenty eight competitors with a gross score of 95, which his handicap of 13 brought down to 82. Frank Reinhart, at scratch, was second with 85. J. H. P. Wharton was fourth and Baker, the winner Saturday, was well down the list with 94, playing scratch

There were nearly thirty entires, including three of the winners of the Cup on previous occasions, but only eighteen cards were handed in, which did not include any of the trio, Dr. Ard, Saugstad and Ryder. All of the scratch men except Lester Blenney were absent. A. Gurney has been playing in particularly good form of late, the handicap and the rest of the competitors were advanced two and three strokes according to their recent showing Gurney made the lowest gross score of the day, 85, but it was six higher than his score that won the Josiah Browne Cup, a week ago.

J. Whitney Baker excelled his best record of the past by one stroke, finishing the eighteen holes in 87 Morris Dumont had one stroke better than Baker in the handicaps but finished two behind in the gross score, It would have been a tie but Dumont flubbed a wee bit of the last green and spoiled his chances of another opportunity to win the Cup. Frank Schoonmaker was third with a net score of 81. After the showing William T. Kaufman made last week, it was expected that he would stand well up in the list. He failed to get anything better than tenth.

The scores handed in for the cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
J. W. Baker	87	9	78
Morris Dumont	99	10	79
Frank Schoonmaker	93	12	81
A. G. Henderson	102	18	84

A NEW PARISH SCHOOL

CONNECTED WITH SACRED HEART CHURCH IN ELIZABETH.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Plainfield, Participated in the Dedicatory Exercises Held Yesterday Afternoon.

Nearly all the members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of this city, accompanied by the Independent Fire and Drum Corps, went to Elizabeth Sunday to participate in the dedicatory exercises of the new parochial school of the Sacred Heart Church of Elizabeth. The Hibernians marched from their headquarters on West Second street to the North Avenue station, where they took the train for Elizabeth. When they reached Elizabeth they participated in a procession in which there were 2 000 members of Catholic societies represented.

Major Dennis F. Collins of the Second New Jersey Regiment and Knights of Columbus, was grand marshal, assisted by Postmaster Whelan and a large corps of aids, his chief of staff being City Clerk Manning.

There were scores of American flags in the procession, which was viewed by the Brothers at the Central Railroad arch and by Mayor Mack, of Elizabeth, near the new school house.

Right Rev. Hillery Pfrangle, Abbot of St. Mary's Abbey, Newark, was on the platform with the pastors of the Catholic churches in Elizabeth and several priests from the Benedictine Order in Newark.

The new school is a handsome edifice of brick and stone, three stories high, with accommodations for several hundred pupils. It is nearly ready for occpancy.

A MAN IN THE CASE.

Two Irate and Jealous Women Come to Blows on Front Street—Fined $5 Each.

Mary Gartland and Mary Currin met Saturday evening on Front street, near Exchange alley. Mary Currin began operations by landing her fist on the other Mary's neck. Then Mary Gartland fell into the melee from the force of the blow. She returned the compliment with her umbrella and was in fair way to do stunts to Mary Currin when Roundsman Frederickson and Flynn arrived and interferred with the proceedings.

The trial last Monday was as exciting as the encounter Saturday night. The keen knowledge of Judge Runyon soon brought out the fact that there was a man in the case, the brother of the Gartland faction, who had once been to see the other combatant.

The Judge found them both guilty and fined them $5 each, which was paid.

NEW JERSEY IS IN JUNIOR ORDER REVOLT

Believed State Lodges Will Refuse to Pay Per Capital Tax.

MAY GO INTO THE COURTS.

ARBITRARY ACTION OF NATIONAL COUNCIL IS RESENTED.

In Event of State Charter Being Taken Away Legal Measures Will Probably Be Taken, and if Torey Fall the State Membership May Secede—History of the Troubles in the Order.

That the New Jersey membership of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics will join in the revolt against the national council is deemed almost certain by officers and individual members of the order. This action, it is expected, will be taken when the State Council meets at Trenton in October.

Local lodges are now being urged to instruct the representatives to the State council to vote not to pay the per capita tax to the national body. This will precipitate the issue. Whether the national council will retort by taking away the State charter, as was done in the case of Pennsylvania on Thursday, or whether it will weaken and rescind the measures which have caused the rebellion, is a question which few members attempt to answer at present.

That the States having the greatest strength in point of membership have not proportionate representation in the national council seems to be at the root of the trouble. The total membership of the order is about 183 000. Of this five branches have approaching 126,000, divided as follows: Pennsylvania, 77,00); New Jersey 30,000; New York, 9,000; Virginia, 8,000; District of Columbia, 1,800. On account of their numerical strength the branches named have collectively been known as the "Big Five."

Past Councilors and Past National officers are life members of the National Council. On account of this fact the control of that body has gradually passed from the hands of the "Big Five" into that of the weaker States. No perceptible effect of the change was felt until last June. Then the Council assembled in Minneapolis, adopted a number of laws which members of the large divisions pronounce to be arbitrary, unjust and unconstitutional.

The statement of the objects of the order was changed materially. The name of the order was changed to "United Mechanics," subject to a vote by States, each State having but one vote. The method of representation in the National Council was changed so as to still further give the control of body to the weaker States. Each State under the new law gets three representatives-at-large and one for each of 10,000 membership or fraction thereof. Thus Pennsylvania gets eleven in place of twenty-nine members in the National Council.

In addition to these changes in the law of the body, the National Council raised the per capita tax from eight cents to twenty-five cents, employed a number of its life members as special organizers, put a number more in national offices, and, it is claimed, adopted a number of other measures which have increased or will largely increase the expenses of the order, without commensurate return. Over $40,000 it is said, has been spent in organizing in the west, and only $9,000 received from investments.

While the acts of the National Council caused discontent at once, actual rebellion did not take place until last month, when prominent individual members from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Virginia and the District of Columbia met at Trenton. These men, though not invested with any authority from their respective States, decided to issue an appeal to the local councils of the "Big Five" to resist what they only termed the the tyranny of the National Council. Copies of the appeal were sent to all the councils in the five States and to many individual members of the order as well.

In response to the appeal, Virginia, New York, the District of Columbia and Pennsylvania have one after another refused to pay the per capita tax. The action of New Jersey is only needed to make the revolt complete, so far as the "Big Five" is concerned.

"I think there can scarcely be any doubt at all that New Jersey will refuse to pay the per capita tax." said Warren S. Furman, past councilor of East End Council and past representative in the State Council. "There is, so far as I have been able to ascertain, practically no division of sentiment on the question. The acts of the National Council have been unfair, tyrannical, and, we claim, unlawful. Should the refusal to pay the tax be met with a taking away of our State charter we will, in all probability, go into the courts. If the courts should decide against us we will simply secede, and reorganize under another name."

DEFINITIONS OF TERMS

Uncommon and Technical Terms Used in Treatises of Agricultural Colleges.

FERTILIZER COMPONENTS.

Complete fertilizer is one which contains the three essential fertilizing constituents, i. e., nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash.

Nitrogen exists in fertilizers in three distinct forms, viz, as organic matter, as ammonia, and as nitrates. It is the most expensive fertilizing ingredient.

Organic nitrogen is nitrogen in combination with other elements either as vegetable or animal matter. The more valuable sources are dried blood, dried meat, tankage, dried fish, and cottonseed meal.

Ammonia is a compound of nitrogen more readily available to plants than organic nitrogen. The most common form is sulphate of ammonia, or ammonium sulphate. It is one of the first products that results from the decay of vegetable or animal substances.

Nitrates furnish the most readily available form of nitrogen. The most common are nitrate of soda and nitrate of potash (saltpeter).

Phosphoric acid, one of the essential fertilizing ingredients, is derived from materials called phosphates. It does not exist alone, but in combination, most commonly as phosphate of lime in the form of bones, rock phosphate, and phosphatic slag. Phosphoric acid occurs in fertilizers in three forms—soluble, reverted, and insoluble phosphoric acid.

Potash, as a constituent of fertilizers, exists in a number of forms, but chiefly as chlorid or muriate and as sulphate. All forms are freely soluble in water and are believed to be nearly, if not quite, equally available, but it has been found that the chlorids may injuriously affect the quality of tobacco, potatoes, and certain other crops. The chief sources of potash are the potash salts from Stassfurt, Germany —kainit, sylfinit, muriate of potash, sulphate of soda, and sulphate of potash and magnesia. Wood ashes and cotton-hull ashes are also sources of potash.

FOOD COMPONENTS.

Water is contained in all foods and feeding stuffs. The amount varies from 8 to 15 pounds per 100 pounds of such dry materials as hay, straw, or grain to 80 pounds in silage and 90 pounds in some roots.

Dry matter is the portion remaining after removing or excluding the water.

Ash is what is left when the combustible part of a feeding stuff is burned. It contains chiefly of lime, magnesia, potash, soda, iron, chlorin, and carbonic, sulphuric and phosphoric acids, and is largely in the bearing bones. Part of the ash constituents of the food is stored up in the animal's body; the rest is voided in the urine and manure.

Protein (nitrogenous matter) is the name of a group of substances containing nitrogen. Protein furnishes the material for the lean flesh, blood, skin, muscles, tendons, nerves, hair, horns, wool, casein of milk, albumen of eggs, etc., and is one of the most important constituents of feeding stuffs.

Gluten is the name given to one of the most important of the nitrogenous substances classed together under the general term "protein." "Wheat gum," obtained by carefully chewing wheat, is a familiar example. It is the glutten of flour that gives consistency to dough.

Carbohydrates.—The nitrogen-free extract and fiber often classed together under the name of carbohydrates. The carbohydrates form the largest part of all vegetable foods. They are either stored up as fat or burned in the body to produce heat and energy. The most common and important carbohydrates are sugar and starch.

Fiber, sometimes called crude cellulose, is the framework of plants, and is as a rule, the most indigestible constituent of feeding stuffs. The coarse fodders, such as hay and straw, contain a much larger proportion of fiber than the grains, oil cakes, etc.

Nitrogen-free extract includes starch, sugar, and the like, and forms an important part of all feeding stuffs, but especially of most grains.

Fat, or the materials dissolved from a feeding stuff by ether, is a substance of mixed character and may include, besides real fats, wax, the green coloring matter of plants, etc. The fat of food is either stored up in the body as fat or burned to furnish heat and energy.

MISCELLANEOUS TERMS.

Alkali soils.—Soils found in arid or semi-arid regions, which contain an unusual amount of soluble mineral salts (alkali), which effloresce or bloom out in the form of a white powder or crust in dry weather following rains or irrigation. Two distinct classes of alkali are known: White alkali, composed largely of sulphate of soda and common salt, which is comparatively harmless; and black alkali, composed largely of carbonate of soda, which is highly corrosive and destructive to vegetation.

Humus is the name applied to the partially decomposed organic (animal or vegetable) matter of the soil. It is the principal source of nitrogen in the soil.

Micro-organism, or microscopic organisms, is a plant or animal too small to be seen without the aid of a compound microscope.

Bacteria (plural, Bacteria) is the name applied in common to a number of different or closely related microscopic organisms, all of which consist of single short cylindrical or elliptical cells or two such cells joined end to end and capable of spontaneous movement. Many kinds of bacteria are harmful and cause diseases and other injurious effects, but many are beneficial. Among the latter are those which give aroma to tobacco and flavor to butter and cheese, and those which enable leguminous plants to use the free nitrogen of the air.

Bacillus (plural, Bacilli) is a genus of kind of Bacterium.

Culture, as here applied to bacteria or other organisms, is the product of their growth under artificial conditions.

Pure culture is a culture containing one kind of organism. Pure cultures of yeast are used in wine making, and pure cultures of bacteria are used in butter and cheese making, and for other purposes, to insure a uniform product.

Sterilized milk or cream, properly speaking, is that in which all the germs have been destroyed usually by repeated heating to 212 degrees Fahrenheit,—boiling point), but in dairy practice the term is applied to milk or cream which has been heated once to a temperature of about 212 degrees Fahrenheit.

Pasteurized milk or cream is that which has been heated to a temperature about 155 degrees Fahrenheit,) which does not kill all the bacteria, but only those which are in a vegetating condition and ready to begin their activity at once.

The Man Behind the Plow.

There's been a lot to say about the man behind the gun,
And folks has praised him highly for the noble work he done;
He won a lot of honor for the land where men are free,
It was him who sent the Spaniard's kitty'lar back across the sea;
But he's had his day of glory ,had his little spree, and now
There's another to be mentioned—he's the man behind the plow.

A battleship's a wonder and an army's mighty grand
And warrin's a profession only heroes understand;
There's somethin' sort 'o' thrillin' in a flag that's waving high,
And it makes you want to holler when the boys go marchin' by.
But when the shootin' is over and the fightin's done, somehow,
We find we're still dependin' on the man behind the plow.

They sing about the glories of the man behind the gun,
And the books are full of stories of the wonders he has done;
The world has been made over by the fearless ones who fight;
Lands that used to be in darkness they have opened to the light.
When God's children snarl the soldiers have to settle up the row,
And folks don't have time for thinkin' of the man behind the plow.

In all the pomp and splendor of an army on parade
And all through the awful darkness that the smoke of battle's made;
In the hall where fowls glitter and where shoutin' men debate,
In the place where rulers deal out honors to the great,
There's not a single person who'd be doing bizness now
Or have medals if it wasn't fer the man behind the plow.

We're a-buildin' mighty cities' and we're gainin' lofty heights;
We're a-singin' songs of glory and we're settin' things to rights;
We're a-showin' all creation how the world's affairs should run,
Future years will look in wonder at the things that we have done,
And they'll overlook the feller, jist the same as we do now,
Who's the whole concern's foundation —that's the man behind the plow.
—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago News.

Importance of Pure Poultry.

At times it seems absurd to continuously harp on the importance of keeping full blood or pure poultry, since one intends to offer the eggs and increase of stock at "fancy" prices, but when one comes in close contact with the market he finds a large amount of poor specimens it contains, mainly from the west, we regret to say. It certainly seems as though much could justly be said in favor of pure bred stock. The argument may be used that if a shipper is inclined to raise and market poor stock, he will do it just the same with pure breeds as with dunghill fowls. To a certain extent this must be admitted, but the poor thoroughbred is the part of all vegetable foods. The poor common bred bird. Then, too, if a man invests considerable money in pure bred stock he is not likely to let them run out through neglect and insufficient food. Pure bred poultry pays in more ways than one. The eggs are larger, the chicks better formed, the birds easier to keep and manage, and the flesh is of superior flavor. It is true that the first cost is greater than for the dunghill fowls, but it may be reduced by buying pure bred eggs and hatching them under the common hen. Thus lies the foundation for the future flock at a small cost. The poultry raiser who caters to the large eastern markets can give "pointers" many of the "fakirs" who "peddle" may be a more intelligent or possessed of greater experience, but simply because he has learned that first-class stock and that only, pays.

Fowls in Nests.

Scald out the drinking vessels regularly at least once a week.

Boiled onions and potatoes, or pea-meal an excellent food to start chicks on. After the first week change gradually to cracked wheat.

There are two advantages in the large breeds. They are easily confined and when ready for market they bring more on account of their weight.

The Greatest Empire.

The greatest empire of the world is the British Empire, including over one continent, 100 peninsulas, 500 promontories, 1,000 lakes, 2,000 rivers and 10,500 islands. It surpasses the Assyrian Empire in wealth, but Roman Empire in population, the Spanish Empire in power and the Persian Empire in area all of which empires have passed away. The population of the empire—367,515,800—is 27 per cent of the population of the world; the 11,239,316 square miles of territory is 21 per cent of the land of the world.

In the course of a lecture to an unemployed audience Senator Depew, the Rongemont, talking of "the dear, dear days," explained that he had a good memory and a better imagination. An ambitious in the unobserved seats persisted in asking unanswerable questions, which ultimately fetched him an interrogation. "I have always found," said the wanderer, "that it was enough for one ass to bray at a time."

A Prominent Physician.

A prominent New York physician in discussing the merits of Ripans Tabules with a brother M. D. said: "Several years ago I asserted that it one wished to become a philanthopist, and do a beneficent deed—one that would help the whole human race—nothing could be better than to procure the Roosevelt Hospital prescription, which is the basis of the Ripans Tabules, and cause it to be put up in the form of a ketchup and distributed among the poor."

Sales Increasing.

The largest retail drug store in America is that of Hegeman & Co. on Broadway in New York City. A reporter who went there to learn how Ripans Tabules were selling bought a five-cent carton and asked: "Do you have much call for these?"

He was referred to a gentleman who proved to be the head of the department. He said:

"The sale of Ripans Tabules is constant and is increasing, due especially to the beneficial character of the testimonials in the daily press, and growing out of these, through the recommendation of friend to friend. Satisfied users of them is very general. When once they are begun I notice that a permanent customer for them is made. This, I believe, is through their intrinsic merit, which proves the bona fide character of the advertising. I think them specially useful in the general run of stomach troubles."

TEN FOR FIVE CENTS RIPANS ONE GIVES RELIEF

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES inserted in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at most druggists. The retail price of the TEN RIPANS TABULES is FIVE CENTS. This low price is to meet the demand for cheap medicines. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (50 tabules) can be had by mail by sending fifty-eight cents to the Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce street, New York. Ordinarily twelve RIPANS TABULES will be sent for five cents. RIPANS TABULES are now also to be had of some druggists, who sell the 72-cent vial (which contains six dozen tabules) at the reduced price of sixty cents, or one cent apiece.

An Elderly Lady.

An elderly lady living at Fordham Heights, a part of New York City, and who was known to be a warm advocate of Ripans Tabules for any case of liver trouble or indigestion, said to a reporter who visited her for the purpose of learning the particulars of her case: "I had always employed a physician and did so on the last occasion I had for one, but at that time obtained no beneficial results. I had never had any faith in patent medicines, but having seen Ripans Tabules recommended very highly in the New York Herald concluded to give them a trial, and found they were just what my case demanded. I have never employed a physician since, and that means a saving of $5 a call. A dollar's worth of Ripans Tabules lasts me a month, and I would not be without them now if it were my last dollar. At the time of this interview there were present two daughters who cheerfully objected to their mother giving a testimonial which should parade her name in the newspapers, but to do this the elder lady argued that it may be other cases just like mine, and I am sure I take great pleasure in recommending them to any one afflicted as I was. If the talking about my case in the papers enables some other person similarly affected to be greatly benefited, as I have been, I see no objection." The daughters, knowing how earnestly she felt about the benefit she had received, decided she was quite right.

ALFRED SPEER,

THE ORIGINAL

Port Grape Wine Producer in America.

The first native wine sold and used in San Francisco and Sacramento was from Speer's Passaic, N. J., vineyards, was shipped around Cape Horn before there was any railroad to California, and are now being used by physicians and first families there as the richest and best wine to be had

The juice of the Portugal Port Wine grape grown in N. J. is thick and rich same as the juice of pears and other fruits grown here. From California pears you can squeeze water as from a sponge; so with all fruits grown in California; while those grown in New Jersey are solid in substance—less juice but more thick and richer. The New Jersey apples, for instance, make a cider that was always popular the world over. If you want a wine for sickness or for entertainments don't take cheap, watery wines but choose a first class old, full bodied, high grade wine from Speer's Passaic vineyards. Sold by Druggists.

$3,000 LOSS BY FIRE IN GROCERY STORE.

Stock of V. L Frazee Badly Damaged Yesterday.

WAS IN REAR END OF STORE.

SUPPOSED TO HAVE CAUGHT FROM A HOT STOVE.

Discovered by Raymond Schenck, a Clerk, Shortly After 7 o'Clock This Morning—Fire Department Quickly on the Scene and Did Good Work in Preventing the Fire From Doing Worse Destruction.

The grocery store of V. L Frazee, at 151 West Front street, had a narrow escape from being destroyed by fire early yesterday. As it was, the rear of the store is badly burned and the large stock of goods contained therein is a total loss.

The fire was descovered about 7:15 o'clock by Raymond Schenck, a clerk, who first noticed smoke pouring from the ceiling and coming from the rear of the store. Mr. Schenck immediately made an investigation and was startled to find the rear room in a blaze. He at once gave the alarm and the fire department was notified from box 12, at Front and Somerset streets. With the firemen came a crowd of citizens, for that box always causes intense excitement, from the fact that it calls the firemen to the business section of the city where are located the large stores and costly buildings.

When the chemical engine and hose wagon from fire headquarters in charge of Assistant Chief Jennings put in an appearance the firemen found the smoke pouring from the front and rear doors of the store, while the rear of the place was a sheet of flame. Assistant Chief Jennings at once ordered a line from the chemical engine to be run in and with a stream from that the battle was begun. It was a hot fire and for a time the firemen found their hands full. The chemical stream had but fairly got to doing good service before First Assistant Murray and Fire Chief Doane put in an appearance. The latter then took charge of the fire. He approved of the good judgment of Assistant Jennings in not putting in a stream of water from the hydrant, although a line had been laid from the hydrant at Park avenue and Front street.

The efforts of the firemen were successful, and in twenty minutes the fire was under control and the destruction of the building averted. The rear room of the store was badly burned, however, and the stock of goods completely ruined. Mr. Frazee estimates his loss at about $3,000. He carried an insurance of $2,500. Fortunately he has a carload of goods at the freight depot and he will not be prevented from continuing business, although the fire will in a measure inconvenience him.

The fire is supposed to have caught from a stove, in which there was a hot fire, in the rear room. In close proximity to this stove were a number of empty flour sacks and some boxes which caught fire from the heat.

The building is owned by the estate of Mrs. Caroline P. Cutter, but is in charge of Fred Cutter.

The second floor of the building is occupied by Charles Krewson billiard parlors. No damage was done there. Neither did the butcher shop of Charles F. Koch on the west suffer any damage.

This morning's fire again demonstrated the efficiency of the chemical engine. A stream from the hydrant would not have had as good results in quickly extinguishing the fire, which at one time threatened the destruction of the building and adjacent property, but much more damage would have been done.

Off to His Field of Duty.

Rev. W. Thomas Kenny, colored, pastor of the Second Baptist church, of Rochester, Pa., and secretary of the Allegheny Baptist Association, composed of the colored churches of Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio, will leave Plainfield today for his field of labors. He has been visiting his sister, Mrs. H. W. Lewis, of Arlington avenue, and others of his acquaintances in t is city, during the past ten days.

Nimble Fingers to Sew.

The members of the Women's Association of the Congregational church will hold an all day sewing meeting today in the church parlors. Garments will be made for a missionary and his family now quartered in Alabama.

Mrs. Zisz, of Chatham street, who has been detained at the hospital for some time past for treatment, has almost recovered and expects to go home in a short time.

CRUEL MISCHIEF.

Somebody Telephoned to a Cranford Mother That Her Son Had Been Killed.

Cranford, Oct. 4—A telephone message delivered at the residence of F. H. Jones at this place at 6:30 o'clock Monday evening, caused Mrs. Jones to become hysterical and physicians were summoned to attend her. The message stated that her son, Frank Jones, a prominent young society man of this place, had been killed in New York city.

Frank Jones reached home safe and sound at 7 o'clock, and when he heard of the message at once set out to find who sent it. The police are employed on the case, but as yet no clue as to who sent the message has been obtained.

As soon as Mrs Jones saw her son she recovered from the shock, but is still in a nervous condition.

SEVEN SISTERS

Gather in the Home of Mrs. DeGroff in Dunellen to Celebrate Her Birthday.

There was an interesting event at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. DeGroff in Dunellen a few days ago, when seven sisters gathered to do honor and celebrate the birthday of one of their number. It was Mrs. DeGroff who had the pleasure of a visit from her sisters on the auspicious occasion when the ladies gathered to pay their respects and extend congratulations to the hostess on the happy event. Those who were present were: Mrs. James D. Miller, of Newark; Mrs. C. E. Boltz and Mrs. O. B. Garthwaite, of Rahway; Mrs. Anna B. Clark and the Misses Irene and Evelyn H. Crowell, of Plainfield. The above, with Mrs. DeGroff, are the seven daughters of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Crowell, of No. 10 Crain place, this city. It was the first time in some years that the seven sisters have been able to meet together. The interior of the residence of Mr. and Mrs. DeGroff had been prettily decorated for the occasion with flowers, potted plants and the National colors, giving the parlors an inviting appearance.

THE "STAR" CRASHED INTO A COAL TRAIN.

Switchman Neglected to Close Switch Yesterday.

TWO TRACKS WERE BLOCKED

ACCIDENT OCCURRED HALF A MILE EAST OF DUNELLEN.

Ellis Benward, Switchman, Left Switch From Westbound Passenger Track to Westbound Freight Open and Then Signalled All Right to Approaching "Star"—Five Coal Cars Were Derailed.

An open switch, half a mile east of Dunellen on the Jersey Central Railroad, sent the little "Star," the inspection engine of the railroad officials, into the middle of a westbound coal train at 6:10 o'clock yesterday. The "Star" was temporarily disabled, five coal cars were derailed and traffic was blocked on the westbound tracks for two hours. Fireman Jacob Duncan, of the "Star," was slightly injured about the head by jumping just before the collision. The blame is laid on Ellis Benward, the night switchman, who forgot to close the switch.

Benward lives in a flat on Front street, Dunellen, with his wife and several children. He was formerly a brakeman on the Jersey Central and had an arm crushed in an accident. Then the company made him switchman.

Yesterday Benward opened the switch from the westbound freight track to the westbound passenger track to allow the 5:28 New York local to pass from the yard where it was made up, to the passenger tracks. To those he talked with after the accident he said that he did not remember closing the switch again.

The "Star" was bound westward early yesterday after some of the officials. The open switch closed the block signals and they showed the engineer of the "Star," Arthur Kirkendall, of Jersey City, that there was something wrong in that block. So he slowed up. Switchman Benward, at his little house a hundred feet beyond the switch, waved his white flag signalling "all right."

The "Star" went ahead until the switch was almost reached. Then engineer Kirkendall saw the signal at the switch showed that it was open and yelled to his fireman to jump. Duncan, who also comes from Jersey City, jumped and cut his hand and head. He went to Muhlenberg Hospital where his wounds were dressed and he then went home.

The "Star" took the switch all right and crashed into the middle of a long train of empty coal cars that was passing. The train was drawn by locomotive No. 367 and was moving very slowly. The coal train parted and the first car that the "Star" struck was overturned the breaking of the air pipes set the air brakes on the rear part of the train and it stopped. But for the brakes it would have crashed into the "Star" from behind.

The engineer of the coal train kept moving and thereby saved the "Star" and his train from more serious damage. The "Star" remained on the track and derailed four more of the coal cars before it stopped. The brass work and the cylinder on one side of the "Star" was torn away and damaged. It was towed back to Jersey City later in the morning.

The wrecking train from Jersey City with the steam crane arrived in a short time. The wreckage was removed and both tracks repaired before 8:30 o'clock.

Benward admitted that he left the switch open and then signalled to the "Star" to come ahead. The blame therefore will be laid to him and he will probably be discharged. Had a fast passenger train passed instead of the "Star," the result would have been very serious indeed.

Some Plainfielders who were obliged to use the trolley cars last evening were forced to ride in open cars. Some people are beginning to think that the trolley company is in league with undertakers.

GIFT FOR ADMIRAL FROM DR. COLES

Occupies a Conspicuous Place on Olympia.

WAS A HANDSOME BRONZE.

IT WAS OF PARTICULARLY APPROPRIATE DESIGN.

Dr. J. Ackerman Coles, of Scotch Plains, found it at Tiffany's and Sent It to the Admiral—Received a Courteous Letter in Reply—Has Since Presented Admiral Dewey With Souvenir Spoons.

When the Olympia, Admiral Dewey's flagship, sailed into New York Bay last week, a handsome bronze, the work of one of France's greatest artists, occupied a prominent place in the cabin of the Admiral. This bronze was a gift from Dr. J Ackerman Coles, of Scotch Plains, to Admiral Dewey and was sent to him shortly after the news of the great victory at Manila reached this country. Of course, it was several months after that when the bronze arrived at its destination.

The bronze shows the figure of an eagle standing on a large rock. At the foot of the rock, on a smaller one, lies a dead heron, the cruelest of birds. Shortly after the capture of Manila, Dr. Coles was in Tiffany's store in New York. He found the bronze and noticed the particular appropriateness of it to the occasion. The eagle is supposed to typify the United States and the dead heron Spain. In the heron's tail, there were twelve feathers, one for each of the war ships in the Spanish fleet that Dewey destroyed. On the base of the rock where the eagle stands, the names of the ships and their captains, composing Dewey's fleet, are engraved. On the standard supporting the bronze, the names of President McKinley and his cabinet were engraved.

On receiving the gift of Dr Coles, Admiral Dewey wrote a note to Dr. Coles, cordially thanking him and expressing the hope that he might be able to thank Dr. Coles in person at no distance date.

Dr. Coles was at Tiffany's one day last week when the first of the souvenir spoons, right from the die, designed in honor of the Dewey celebration, was received by Mr. Tiffany. Dr. Coles immediately directed that the spoon be sent to Admiral Dewey with his compliments. The spoon was sent on board the Olympia as that warship lay at anchor in New York Bay.

THE STATE W. C. T. U.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY BEING HELD AT ATLANTIC CITY.

An Unusually Large Attendance of Delegates—Mrs. S. R. Krom Will Read a Paper on Subject of "Anti-Narcotics."

Atlantic City, Oct. 5—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the State W. C. T. U. opened last evening and will continue until tomorrow evening. There are an unusually large number of representatives present from all parts of the state and the programme, a lenghty one, is highly interesting and instructive. Plainfield is well represented by several members.

Every feature of temperance work is to be touched by bright and entertaining papers to be presented by the most able members of the Union, and no doubt a great advancement will be made along certain lines.

On the programme Plainfield has a place in the person of Mrs. S. R. Krom, who will present a paper on "Anti-Narcotics," and Mrs. A. M. Bodine, of Dunellen, also has a place on the programme, and she will lead the devotions tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. Mrs. Krom takes part tomorrow after noon.

Special meetings will also be held for the election of national delegates, etc., during the time of the convention.

Contests at Quoits.

There were some interesting contests at quoits after Tuesday evening's meeting of the Heptasophs. Messrs Bose and Laing were pitted against Messrs. Nash and Lounsbury. The latter team won two games out of three. Then Messrs. Nash and Lounsbury defeated Messrs. Addis and Laing, and Messrs. VanCamp and Armstrong outpointed Messrs. Kirch and Green. The assessment prize was won by Mr. Lounsbury.

ACTIVITY RESUMED AT Y. M. C. A. GYM

Formal Opening of Physical Department Tuesday Night.

"MEDAL CLASS" PRESENT.

GAVE AN EXHIBITION OF GYMNASTICS TO LARGE AUDIENCE.

Physical Director Leonard M. Smith Was in Charge—Newark Boys Did Some Excellent Work on Various Apparatus—Fine Club Swinging by Nine-Year-Old Lad—Supper to Visitors Afterwards.

The formal opening of regular class work at the Y. M. C. A gymnasium was held in the gymnasium last Tuesday in the form of an exhibition of gymnastics which was under the direction of Leonard M Smith, physical director of the Newark Y. M. C. A. Seven members of the Newark "Model Class" gave an exhibition of their skill in window diving, one of their number going through an open ring 14 by 11½ inches. Next came clubs and individual figures on the flying rings. The work was a sample of what can be done through practice.

High horizontal bar work was worthy of special mention, being composed of class and entertainment moves. While the gymnasts were resting, Master R. Smith gave a club swinging exhibition, which was a work of wonder for a boy only nine years of age. He is a member of the boys' class.

Parallel bars and the horse were also used in great style. High jumping was shown. The best done was 5 feet 4 inches, which was cleared by two members of the class.

The names of the members of the "Model Class" present were H. Albertson, G. Ketcham, H. Lehibach, R. Phillips, C. Widner, D. Long and W. Kramer. The exhibition was witnessed by fully two hundred spectators who filled the visitors' gallery and the vacant space around the gymnasium floor.

At the conclusion of the exhibition the visitors were given a supper at the building.

Starting with this week, the regular class work will be resumed. The Business Men's class will meet on Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons from 5:30 to 6:15 o'clock. The evening class will meet on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings from 8:15 to 9:15 o'clock. The boys' class will meet Tuesday afternoons from 4 to 5:30 o'clock, and Saturday morning from 10 to 12 o'clock.

The formation of a ladies' class was announced and the hours of meeting will be announced at a later date.

ATHLETICS AT RUTGERS.

Boom to Them is Due to Contributions From Trustees and the Four Classes.

Athletics has taken a decided boom at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, by reason of a liberal contribution which has been made to the Athletic Association by the Board of Trustees and the four classes. The Board of Trustees has contributed $200 to the funds for the use of the association, and the amounts contributed by the classes follows: Freshman class, $137; sophomore class, $67; junior class, $61, and the senior class, $151.

It is estimated that about $350 will be required to support the football team this year, and as the association was close to $200 in debt, there is now sufficient cash on hand to meet all obligations and end the season free of debt. This is gratifying to the faculty of the college, as well as to the students.

A MARAUDING FELINE.

Dunellen Faces a Demand for $6 for Damages Alleged to Have Been Done by the Cat.

At Monday evening's meeting of the Common Council at Dunellen a petition was presented from P. M. Ising, of Church street, asking the board to reimburse him to the amount of $6 for the loss he alleges to have sustained by the destruction of numerous chickens and ducks which have been killed by a cat owned by O. A. Douglass, editor of the Call. The petition did not state whether the cat in question was of a vicious disposition or of the Thomas gender. After a brief discussion upon the alarming increase of the felines in Dunellen and the fact that many of them are disturbers of the peaceful slumber of the citizens generally, it was decided to refer the petition to the law committee with power.

GOOD DAY FOR WEDDINGS

PASTOR GARDNER TIES NUPTIAL KNOT FOR TWO COUPLES.

Both Ceremonies Performed at the Grace M. E. Parsonage—One as Morning Waned and Other as Evening Came.

That springtime is not the only season when a "young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love" was shown by the fact that Tuesday Grace M. E. church parsonage was the scene of two marriage ceremonies. At 11:30 a. m. Martin W. Apgar, a dealer in general merchandise at High Bridge, and Miss Ella Farley, of the same place, were pronounced "husband and wife" by Pastor Gardner. At 7 p. m. Edward A. Hudson and Margaret F. VanAman received the sanction of the church to their marriage, and went forth upon their new and untried experience with the blessing of Rev. Mr. Gardner and wife.

NO TAVERN WANTED.

Citizens Again Oppose Mrs. Woodruff's Efforts to Get a License for Lyons Farms.

Mrs. Ada Woodruff, the widow who despite the opposition of the villagers of Lyons Farms, in Union county, obtained a license last year in the Union County Court to conduct an inn and tavern, is again in trouble.

The chief and only objection against her seems to be that the village in its long existence of 150 years has never had a tavern or hotel of any kind within its limits. The religious portion of the community were shocked when Mrs Woodruff last year applied to the court and got a license before they knew what was contemplated. They asked Judge Vail to reopen the case, but he refused.

Mrs. Woodruff's opponents now admit that she has conducted her place in a respectable, exemplary manner and that on this score there is no cause for complaint, but declare the sentiment of the village is against having any such business in Lyons Farms.

Mrs. Woodruff has champions and there promises to be a lively time in the Union County Court of Common Pleas next week when the widow's application comes up. Both sides will be represented by counsel.

A Head-On Collision.

Courtlandt Adams, of Netherwood avenue, and Charles Smith, an employe of J. W. Gavett, participated in a head-on collision Tuesday at the corner of Park avenue and Front street, while trying to turn the corner on their bicycles. Mr. Adams suffered the greatest damage. His front wheel was a total wreck, while Smith's wheel escaped with slight damage. Neither rider was injured to any extent.

A Mt. Pleasant Marriage.

Tuesday at Mt. Pleasant, at the home of the bride, occurred the marriage of Miss Etta Tappan, a prominent and well-known young woman, and William Ayres, of Metuchen, a well-known New York business man. The wedding was attended by the relatives and near friends of the contracting parties. After a honeymoon trip through the south, Mr. and Mrs. Ayres will reside at Metuchen.

Wife Says Husband Has Left Her.

Mrs. John Marrow, of Stebbins place, informs a representative of The Daily Press that her husband has left her and gone to Worcester, Mass. She also says that he left behind a number of creditors. He has been absent from the city for several days and his wife does not expect that he will return. Marrow is a machinist and worked in one of the local shops.

Mrs. LaForge, of New Brunswick, has returned home after a pleasant visit with Mr. and Mrs. Peter VanFleet, of East Third street.

GOSSIP OF THE WHEEL.

Properly Understood Bicycling is an Inexpensive Pastime.

It is said by some people that bicycling is an expensive pastime and that it is no cheaper as a means of transportation than street or steam cars. These people claim that repairs count anywhere near one cent a mile. As a matter of fact bicycling can be made a very expensive pastime or a very economical one. If the rider chooses he can spend as much money on a machine as on boating, golf and other sports—by keeping up to date in the matter of new devices and joining clubs. Veteran cyclists, however, say that it is easy to get out of bicycling the greatest possible amount of pleasure with a small expenditure. With a first-class wheel and a reasonable and intelligent use of it, the expenditure and repairs, apart from the tires, will be practically small. One may ride a machine year after year and the cost per annum should not be more than a dollar or two, and if a rider is experienced enough to attend to adjusting, and to look over the machine carefully before and after a ride, he may get through the year without any expenditure at all. As to the durability of tires there is a great deal of guess work. Sometimes tires will last three years, but if a rider is unfortunate in the way of punctures they may have to be replaced more frequently. A rider can repair his own tires, for the use of the tire repair kits now being sold can be speedily acquired.

A Chicago man, J. A. Carlisle, is working on some new tires that he believes will attract attention. In each case the principle is almost similar, although the application differs. In one of the tires air pockets are arranged on either side; in another three small inner tubes are arranged within the tire, each one independent of the other. A puncture in one does not affect the other. The idea is to prevent the total collapse of the tire in case of a puncture.

A swiveled lamp reflector is one of the latest devices seen on a machine. The device provides for cords running from the handlebar grips to the side of the reflector. By this means a flash of light can be thrown in any direction. The reflector can be moved by lifting it vertically.

Charles W. Miller, the long-distance champion of the world, has signified his intention of giving up the work which has made him famous, and in future will confine himself to middle-distance events. He has been working over the Manhattan Beach track for some time, and his trials for the 100-mile race have convinced him that he will have a fine chance at this kind of racing. Miller says that he is somewhat tired of the strain in the long-distance events, and, while he denies that he has been hurt in any way by those in which he has taken part, it is probable that he begins to realize that the terrible strain has told on him, and is trying to get into lighter work on this account. Miller expects to make a trip of Europe next year to ride against all the cracks over there in the middle-distance events.

Zimmerman has given up racing, and he acted wisely. He is not in the class with the flyers of the day. As far as he went Zimmerman has done very little to indicate that he comes favorably with the present day champions, his best race being against Bald, in which the latter beat him out in the sprint at the finish of a very slow race. The whole matter is still being discussed, as those who take one side contend that Zimmerman has gone back and those who take the other contend with equal vehemence that he never was in the same class with Bald, Cooper Taylor McFarland and the other fast racers of this season.

A new law adopted by the Connecticut Legislature requires all dealers in second-hand bicycles to take out a license and keep a book of record, explaining of whom and when the bicycle was purchased and fully describing the wheel. The law does not apply to those who take second-hand wheels in trade, but these dealers must keep a book giving a description of such bicycles. The penalty for non-compliance with the law is a fine and three months' imprisonment. The intention of the law is to keep a lookout for stolen bicycles and to identify any one dealing in them.

In order to determine exactly how fast orders are traveling in the parks of Rochester the commissioners there have caused posts to be be erected at intervals of 253 feet along the driveways. An officer looking at his watch as a cyclist passes one of these posts and noting how long it takes the rider to reach the next flag, can tell exactly at what rate he is riding by referring to a table the commissioners have furnished. The speed limit in the park is eight miles an hour. To ride at this rate means a mile in seven minutes and thirty seconds, and it should take a cyclist just thirty seconds to pass over the flags. In New York an idea can be gained of the speed by noting the time required to pass one of the blocks between the numbered streets. These are about 200 feet long. Multiplying the time for the block by twenty one will give a rough idea of the time per mile.

Base Ball Notes.

The proposed sprint race between Callahan, of the Chicagos, and "Win" Mercer, of the Cincinnatis, is off for the present. Callahan is suffering with a lame back.

It is probable that all the California talent now in the East will organize into a team to play exhibition games en route to the Pacific at the close of the season. Donlin, of the St. Louis team, is father of the scheme.

Umpire Manassau is said to be as good a billiard player as Adrian C. Anson. Before he became an umpire Manassau was a member of the United States Secret Service Department.

THIN GOWNS.

They Are In Great Favor For Indoor Wear.

The passion for thin and sheer materials has had a most delightful influence upon wrappers and those loose and dainty gowns which are worn in the bedroom. Muslin, gauze, liberty silk and crepe de chine in all sorts of variations are the goods used for such garments. The skirt is long and floating, even in front, the bodices are full and much trimmed and sleeves often open to reveal the arms. Circular ruffles decorated with tiny ruches, lace insertion or embroidery are the favorite trimming, or flounces which are tucked at the top instead of being gathered.

These transparent gowns are worn over a colored lining, which is or can be made separate from the gown itself, as it may serve for several outsides. It consists of a plain skirt and bodice, made quite tight and closed as inconspicuously as possible. No odd trimming is a series of frills around the foot of the skirt. Tinted plain silk is usually employed for these underdresses.

DIRECTOIRE HAT.

An illustration is given of one of the new directoire hats. The form is smooth, covered with sky blue moire, and the high crown is encircled by many bands of narrow black velvet. Clusters of loops of the velvet are fastened at the back by jeweled ornaments and fall on the hair. The front is a series of black plumes held by a chou composed of black velvet loops. FASHION'S FANCIES.

Attractive Additions to the Elegant Wardrobe.

Evening wraps are elaborate and luxurious. A new cape model is composed of puffings of mousseline de soie over taffeta and clings to the figure as far down as the waist. At that point there is a voluminous flounce of plaited mousseline de soie, trimmed with blue plaitings. Under the chin is an immense cravat with long, floating ends.

Accordion plaited gowns of mousseline de soie are to be worn. Also gowns of puffed mousseline, the puffs separated by insertion or lines of spangles.

Costumes of chiffon with accordion plaited tunics and applications of cream guipure over white satin are a charming and expensive novelty.

Many tunics are cut in points or scallops, and the same idea is repeated in the bodice, the points extending upon the guimpe. These tunics may match the body of the skirt or may be different. In lace or mousseline de soie they are very attractive.

The picture given illustrates an attractive fichu arrangement to be worn with a plain bodice. Its foundation is a round yoke composed of lines of insertion, each line being edged with fine passementerie. Around this yoke is a berthe of lace, and across each shoulder is a bretelle drapery of mousseline de soie, forming a chou at the top. In front is a large bow of mousseline striped with insertion and bordered with passementerie. From this fall two long ends of mousseline edged with lace, which forms ruffles, and trimmed at the bottom with bands of insertion. A full jabot lace finishes the back of the high collar, which matches the yoke.

A Fault In Churches.

It is a very difficult matter to make a church the right size. Every one we saw was too small for weddings and too large for prayer meetings.—Atchison Globe.

FASHION NOTES.

Modes For the Present and Coming Season.

Fashion is now to a certain degree eclectic. In the matter of skirts, for example, provided they are tight and molded to the figure from the waist down to the knee, all sorts of variations are permitted. They may be plain all the way down, may have a circular or gathered flounce or a tunic, and the trimming may follow any freak of fancy so long as it is comparatively flat.

The great desideratum is now to conceal the fastening of the skirt, and that is no easy matter when there is neither fullness nor fold under which it may be hidden. As for a pocket, such a convenience is often an utter impossibility, for it cannot be inserted without its opening being fully visible, and, moreover, if anything were put in it, it would make an unsightly protuberance. Where the skirt has a separate lining the pocket may be placed in that, or even in the petticoat.

The bodice shown in the cut is of taffeta, coded all over, and is of a soft mauve shade. The back is plain. The front has two plaits at the waist and is cut down in a V at the top. The sleeves are close and terminate just below the elbow. The collar, revers and cuffs are covered with applications of guipure. The soft belt is of pansy velvet and fastens under a chou of loops of fine black velvet ribbon. A similar chou is placed at the point of the V-shaped decollete.

ACCESSORIES.

Blouses, Skirts and Other Articles of Attire.

The blouse effect above the waistband, not long ago so well liked, is now quite abandoned and is seen only occasionally in full fronts.

As the form of skirts has changed very little since last winter, it is easy to remodel old gowns for the coming season. The full bodice may be cut over and made tight fitting, a yoke of silk, crepe de chine or gathered mousseline de soie being added. With fresh trimming to match on the skirt, the costume is practically new. The little ornamental capes which are worn this fall afford another opportunity for using old material. They are very small, are fancifully trimmed and often take the form of a large collar, with a flaring fanciful collar and an immense cravat with long, fringed ends.

Immense scarfs of net, gauze or mousseline de soie are tied around the neck in a small bow, the long ends falling half way down the skirt.

The picture shows a blouse bodice of antique guipure. At each side of the front are two bands of white taffeta stitched with pink silk and bordered with little ruches. These bands terminate in bolero. Across the front is a V formed by another band of stitched taffeta. The collar and belt are composed of stitched taffeta edged with ruches. The sleeves of white taffeta are covered with lines of pink stitching and have caps of guipure bordered by stitched bands, with ruches at the edges. JUDIC CHOLLET.

A New Way.

"So she gave you the mitten?" asked the young thing.

"Yes," said the major, "but her hand was inside of it."—Philadelphia Press.

SPORTS OF THE SAMOANS

Some of the Games at Which the Islanders Are Exceedingly Skillful.

BOXING AND WRESTLING

Cheating Is Considered Not Only Legitimate But Even an Important Feature of All Games.

Their Most Popular Sport Is Stick-Throwing—Whole Villages Take Part in the Contests Which Often Last Several Days—The Remarkable Skill Shown By the Participants.

Time is plentiful in the South Seas and cares are few. For the idle islander the day goes lightly by, and, as the day, so glides life itself. A very little delving just to encourage a most lavish nature to yield up its store of food, a little fighting to give life a zest, a great deal of making of speeches, says a writer in Outing.

These island sportsmen are actuated solely by the enjoyment of the sport itself, or of the rivalry to which it gives rise. They have no comprehension of the idea of fair play in anything; ethical considerations not only legitimate but even an important feature of the game, whatever it may be. But as each side is as alert to prevent cheating by its opponents as it is to practice it for selfish advantage, the matter just balances, so that, quite unintentionally, a Samoan game is usually a practical moral contest.

Boxing is common enough now among Samoan athletics, but it is an introduced sport. Old customs of warfare never include any such thing as an empty-handed personal encounter. When men were fighting they were armed; they used the missile spear at the beginning of the attack, and when they came within arm's length the club was used, a heavy club with sharpened edges which cut like an axe. Wrestling, on the other hand, is of unknown antiquity among the islanders, and has always been a favorite sport of the strong-set men. It could scarcely be expected that it would develop along the same lines as wresof course, very costly unless they are painted at home, which is not usual. Embroidery is sometimes mingled with the painted decoration.

The wedding gown shown in the cut is of white satin, cut in the princess style, with a round train. The skirt and the edge of the front which overlaps are bordered with an embroidery of white silk. The bodice is draped over a plaited guimpe of silk tulle, with a lace berthe which terminates in sleeve caps. The plaited sleeves of silk tulle have lace ruffles at the wrist. A spray of orange flowers is placed at the closing of the bodice. JUDIC CHOLLET.

NOVELTIES.

Fresh Ideas For the Autumn Wardrobe.

The newest form of the long redingote is buttoned at the side. The sleeve is half concealed by a second pelerine sleeve, like the sleeves seen on old fashioned visites.

For cycling and other outing gowns corkscrew, serge and cloth are, as usual, the preferred materials. There is, in addition, a soft silk called the "habit," which is a novelty this season. The habit bodice, pointed in front and with small tiling in other lands, and it has not, it would be fair to classify the Samoan style of wrestling. Any hand-hold above the hips is perrissible, but a mere hand-hold is naturally of little value in grasping a man fully oiled, as are these people at all times.

But the great sport among the Samoans is now, as it has been for long ages, the village contests at stick-throwing. At this interesting amusement the islanders are content to pass many days of noisy feasting. Success at the sport is the most highly-prized distinction a town can have; defeat is a stain which must be wiped out. Sometimes large wars have grown out of the fluctuating results of the sport.

The materials of the sport are simple. There is needed a long straight stretch of grassy ground, which is easily found in the central plaza of every native community, or, if not there, is never far distant in the cocoanut groves. This is the playing green. The stick is the second possession, for each player in time finds one stick which just suits him, and is very careful of the cherished possession.

After all this introduction of its accompanying features the game itself is simple enough. It is to throw the stick along the playing green in such a way that it may come to rest as far from the thrower as possible. Thrown directly at the mark and through the air, the light stick carries but a short distance, no matter how strong the thrower might be. But when it is thrown so as to hit the ground a short distance away and glance thence into the air, the combination of strength and skill tends to send the stick a long distance before it comes to rest. The stick is held between the thumb and the first three fingers held close together, the index finger being at the same time pressed against the butt of the stick. The player stands back from the casting line of perhaps a short run; at the same time he swings his arm backward over the shoulder, so that by the time his left foot is at the line he is ready to discharge the stick from his right hand at the level of the hip. The most successful players cause the stick to glance from the ground about thirty feet away. This glancing on the ground gives much greater force to the flight of the stick. It flies also much high and may cover two hundred feet or more before coming to the ground again. In this secondary flight the head of the stick is seen to be directed upward at a very at a small angle above the horizontal; the butt is at the same time revolving in a circle of about three inches and with a slow motion. This position is maintained to the end of the second flight. When the stick comes to the ground the point is still a little elevated, and there is a few additional feet may be gained by a slide along the smooth turf.

WHAT IS WORN.

Revival of White Stockings—Hand Painted Costumes.

It is announced that white stockings are to be again worn, and now it is a question how many women will consent to adopt them simply because fashion decrees their reappearance. Nothing is uglier and more unbecoming, yet there are blind followers of the blind who will doubtless eagerly endue themselves with the ugly things. Black hosiery is and will be generally worn, however, except for evening costume, where the gown is of a light color. In this case the stockings match the gown or the shoes.

Costumes of thin cloth of bright color, such as red or clear blue, are sometimes covered with pipe stretched mousseline de soie. The effect is said to be artistic.

The illustration given today shows a costume of mauve crepe de chine embroidered with flowers a shade darker. The long skirt has a circular flounce which is narrow in front, but rises midway of the skirt at the back. A flounce of Irish guipure borders the foot of the skirt, and another guipure flounce follows the head of the circular flounce and is caught up with a large chou of crepe de chine at the back. The blouse bodice is fastened behind. A berthe of Irish guipure is placed around the shoulders, passing across the top of the arms. A large chou of black tulle appears in front above the berthe. The belt is of pansy velvet. The black hat of braided felt is trimmed with black tulle and black ostrich tips.

FALL FASHIONS.

The Straight Sack Again Brought Forward.

An attempt has repeatedly been made to bring the straight, loose sack into fashionable favor again, and each time the attempt has failed. Now the sack is again being forced to the front, but this time with better hopes of success, for, instead of appearing as a dress wrap, embroidered and decorated expensively, a role for which its negligee shape unfits it, it is seen in materials suitable for traveling and outing wear, plainly finished and serviceable. In such form it may prove acceptable, as it imposes no constraint and is easily put on and off.

Short, tight coats matching the skirt are worn with silk bodices and shirt

The gown illustrated is of black taffeta and has a plaited tablier, which continues around the foot in the form of a deep plaited flounce, trimmed with two puffings of white mousseline de soie. Over this is a double tunic, edged with plaited ruffles of black taffeta, headed by bands of black chantilly over white satin. The fitted bodice has a full plastron, edged on each side with plaitings and chantilly over white satin. The yoke of chantilly over white satin has a berthe of white lace, headed by a puffing of black mousseline de soie. The black grosgrain belt is secured by an ornamental buckle. VARIOUS NOTES.

Items About Jewelry and Other Accessories.

The marriage ring is now extremely fine and thin if it is according to the mode, and the marriage ring par excellence, the one used by most Europeans, is not the solid, plain circlet it appears to be, but when it is off the finger may be shaken apart so that it is seen to consist of two interlinked, inseparable rings. These are so shaped that they fit together with perfect smoothness, no division being perceptible when the ring is worn.

Large combs are still worn. They are necessarily very light, so as not to tire the head or injure the hair, and, although they are ornamented when intended for dress wear, the decoration is always delicate, to prevent weightiness.

Ostrich plume boas are not yet in favor. The newest variety is in shaded tints running from light to dark.

A novelty is the monogram glove. Upon the back, in place of the usual lines of stitching, is an embroidered cipher composed of the enlaced initials of the wearer.

The bonnet illustrated is designed for a woman of mature age. The crown is embroidered with a jeweled effect, while the brim is covered by a plaiting of black lace. In front is a wired bow of ribbon with erect ends, and strings of the same ribbon are tied in a bow under the chin.

A DEMON WHEELMAN.

Breakneck Exploits of a Bicyclist Who Plays With Cable Cars.

Could you ride the Broadway cable slot on the hind wheel of your bicycle with the front wheel in the air? Inquires the New York Journal.

"Could you take off your coat and vest in front of an on-rushing cable car while pedaling backwards?

Maybe you could—once; but don't!

An amateur bicyclist in this city has blanched the face of nearly every motorman on the Broadway line. His feats attract crowds near Twenty-third street and Broadway every evening. Some people have been going to see this rider right after night during the past month.

"I expect to see his mangled body picked up every night I see him," was the way one of them put it.

The rider's name is John A. Ryland. He is attached to the Empire Theatre, but has never given stage exhibitions.

Ryland was riding in front of a car with his front wheel in the air when seen by the reporter. When he came to the house at which he intended to stop he swerved his bicycle into the gutter. Then he said:

"I ride for fun. My bicycle is made to stand the strain. There is no danger. Motormen get scared when I come suddenly in front of their cars, and new men stop short. After one or two experiences they get used to my style of riding and keep going.

"I practised week after week before I attempted any tricks in front of cars. The pavement bothered me at first. It is great sport and the element of danger makes it more interesting. If my bicycle should slip I would fall outside of the tracks."

Then Ryland jumped on his bicycle and, as an electric car came up Twenty-third street, he darted in front and threw the front wheel in the air. Then he rode half way up the block. His wheel was at no time more than six feet from the car. He turned to the track running west, grasped the back of the bicycle saddle and sprang in the air, twisting his feet over the top bar of the machine. Then he caught the pedals and, sitting astride the top bar with his back against the handle-bars, started up the street. Then he did the disrobing act.

First the coat came off. Then Ryland took off his vest and waved them at the motorman, all the time traveling backward ten miles an hour. At Sixth avenue Ryland put on his coat and vest, and, without changing his position on the wheel, steered out over the rough pavement, still riding backward.

Then Ryland saw a crowd gathering and said:

"There are too many people. It don't do to get such a crowd together."

Cycling Notes.

To keep the nickel parts of a bicycle bright use a solution of hyposulphite of soda, wiping it on with a rag and drying with a soft towel. Afterward use chamois to brighten the nickel.

The teeth of the pedals should be filed periodically. They become blunted by running through the mud and dirt, and by ordinary wear. If filed occasionally they will be as serviceable as when new.

A "forward" position causes many case of side-slip. This position tends to lessen the control of the machine, makes steering more difficult and anything slippery on the road will complete the necessities for a slip.

The roads of England have cost the government $750,000,000 in the last two hundred years. There are 180,000 miles of them, according to official reports. Compared to ours they make ours look like the popular thirty cents.

When a chain tire is not to be carried in the tool bag and a repair shop is not convenient, cyclists will find that a wire nail filed down makes a good substitute, where a rivet is necessary. Wire nails are now so common they may be found almost anywhere and the tip may be valuable to those who remember it.

Occasionally a wheelman should examine the cement tube to ascertain if it is ready for use. Cement hardens with time and when in that condition is not serviceable for repairing punctures. It should be kept as nearly air-tight as possible to prevent the hardening process.

The greatest trouble novices have is steering. It is no unusual sight to see them wobbling the front wheel in every direction. This can easily be remedied if the would be cyclist will keep his or her wits and remember not to look at the front wheel or very near it. By keeping the eyes as nearly as possible at least thirty feet away it will be found much easier to balance and steer. When the eyes are on the front wheel each little movement becomes aggravated and the effort to overcome the unsteadiness makes it worse.

The racing department of the L. A. W. is self-supporting. It derives its revenue from the granting of sanctions and from the registration of riders, and the expenses of the members of the board are paid therefrom. This is the only department of the organization which does not receive an annual appropriation. The other departments cause a great expense and thousands of dollars are spent annually, particularly in the road department, as Highway Improvement, but the department which governs all the racing men and tracks in this country pays as it goes and asks for nothing.

A Victory for Maryland Wheelmen.

The Maryland division of the L. A. W. has secured the consent of the street railroads of the City of Baltimore to commence the replacement of all the rails at crossings with rails that will not inconvenience wheelmen or other owners of vehicles when riding over them. The chief consul of the division secured the change by acting in co-operation with the city authorities, who have on other occasions recognized the power of this division.

THE SEASON OF SCHOOLS.

Why Knowledge is Always a Source of Pleasure as Well as Power.

EDUCATION OF TO-DAY

Influence of Intellectual Success and Culture on the Mind and Body.

Historical Scholars and Educators—Success of Jesuit School Masters—The Teacher Should be the Friend —Good Reading For Pupil and Teacher—Definition of Learning.

Apropos to the new education and the public school season, the writer hereof wishes to register a public protest against the emphasis ordinarily given to the doctrine "Knowledge is power," and take the argument for the doctrine, "Knowledge is pleasure."

This argument is the outcome of an exhaustive study of the literature of the subject and of protracted personal and professional observation, and is made in full confidence that in the evolution of the new education, the Roman axiom, "Knowledge is power," which has long been the motto of the party, will ultimately be relegated to deserved obscurity and its place as a motto be given to the axiom, "knowledge is pleasure."

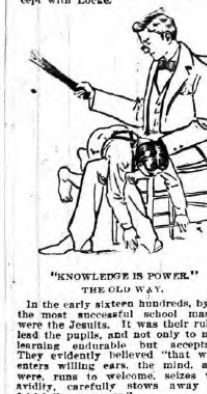
During the past two centuries countless millions of children have memorized "Knowledge is power" many millions of times without any adequate conception whatever of that "bewitching phantom knowledge." And while that conception of power was much more acute than their conception of knowledge, it was no more to the purpose for general speaking, their idea of power was that acquired when the teacher employed physical power, or force, as a means of driving in knowledge.

Under these circumstances, is it any wonder that much of what passed for education went into one ear and out of the other, without leaving any other impression than mental disgust for further education.

Of course, the author of the famous epigram "Knowledge is power," the poet Pope wrote: "He was the wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind." Carefully read Bacon's life and you will readily understand that the expression "Knowledge is power" was a very natural one for him. Spencer's remark that human progress on the largely the outfish maxims expressive of the will of the ruling forces in society, those who have health, wealth, knowledge and power, and are designed for their protection and the maintenance of their power, would seem to apply directly to Bacon's axiom, "Knowledge is power."

Although numerous writers, historical and contemporary, have directly and indirectly and frequently, at regular intervals, and in a desultory fashion, for over 2,000 years, referred to the idea that "knowledge is pleasure," that idea has never been given successful acquaintance. The idea has never yet acquired the prominence its promise of usefulness would seem to warrant.

Among the historical scholars and writers whose works strongly confirm the idea that knowledge is pleasure, we quote Plato, who was the author of the first systematic treatise on education and who therein insisted upon the beautiful and the good. Each precept of which Socrates delivered himself was recommended on the ground that obedience to it would promote the pleasure, the comfort, the advancement and the well-being of the individual. To make those happy who are undergoing an education was a favorite precept with Locke.



"KNOWLEDGE IS POWER."

THE OLD WAY.

In the early sixteen hundreds, by far the most successful school masters were the Jesuits. It was their rule to feed the pupils, and not only to make learning endurable but acceptable. They evidently believed "that which enters willing ears, the mind, as it were, runs to and seizes with avidity, carefully stows away and faithfully preserves."

The Jesuit Royalists, who flourished in France about 1625, "would banish all useless difficulties in acquiring knowledge and do what they could to help the pupils, and make study as much more pleasant to them than play and pastime." The magnificent vista opened to Milton's mental vision from the summit of the "Hill of Learning," strongly confirms the idea that, to him at least, knowledge is pleasure.

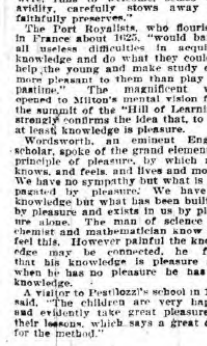
Wordsworth, an eminent English scholar, spoke of the grand elementary principle of pleasure, by which man knows, and feels, and lives and moves. We have no sympathy but what is propagated by pleasure. We have no knowledge but what has been built up by pleasure and exists in us by pleasure alone. The man of science the chemist and mathematician know and feel this. However painful the knowledge may be connected, he feels that his knowledge is pleasure and when he has no pleasure he has no knowledge.

A visitor to Pestlozzi's school in 1802 said, "The children are very happy, and evidently take great pleasure in their lessons, which says a great deal for the method."

The Froebel historians do not indicate he ever taught the doctrine knowledge is pleasure directly, but they do make it very plain this idea pervaded his life work.

Fifty years ago Dr. Joseph R. Buchanan, of Cincinnati, Ohio, taught the doctrine knowledge is pleasure thus directly and forcibly:

"Let children meet with forbearance, cheerfulness and true affection, on the part of all above them; let those older persons, who love their society, take charge of them, and be with them at their sports, as well as at their lessons; and let the influence of music be brought to bear, attuning all their feelings to accord, and education will be a most delightful process and the school a charming place that it would be impossible to keep the children away from it."



"KNOWLEDGE IS PLEASURE."

THE NEW WAY.

In the list of contemporary scholars and writers who reaffirm the doctrine knowledge is pleasure we find Sir John Lubbock, of London, who remarks that "Whatever our occupation it is most desirable to create for ourselves some other special interest, free from the prospect times of anxiety, of suffering and of sorrow; when these come it is an indescribable comfort to have some deep interest which will, as we may say, for some extent, enable us to escape from ourselves."

The identical idea meant to be conveyed with the greatest cleverness by that distinguished statesman and scholar, Hon. William M. Evarts, who said that "he would not take all the wealth of the world for the pleasure his knowledge had given him. His studies are his only recreation. If he were deprived of books or of power he would be the most miserable of men."

Herbert Spencer, that prince of English scholars, has written with his usual perspicuity on this matter as follows: As a final test by which to judge the worth of studies, the question—does it create a pleasurable excitement in the pupils—a pleasurable state A feeling is far more favorable to intellectual action than one of indifference or disgust. Everyone knows that things read, heard, or seen with interest, are better remembered than those read, heard or seen with apathy.

Whoever has marked the effect of intellectual success upon the mind, and the reflex influence of the mind upon the body will see that in the one case both temper and health are favorably affected, whilst in the other there is danger of consequences ranging from a querulous discontent and even of permanent constitutional depression. To all which considerations we must add the further one, that the relationship between teachers and their scholars is, other things equal rendered friendly and influence over the latter by the former is according as the system of culture produces happiness or misery. Human beings are at the mercy of their associations, and a misapplication of pains will not fail to be regarded with a secret dislike, and if he causes no emotion but painful ones, will inevitably be hated. Conversely he who constantly aids children to their ends, hourly provides them with satisfaction of conquest, hourly expresses sympathy with their difficulties and sympathies in their successes, cannot fail to be liked; nay, if his behavior is consistent throughout must be loved.

And when we remember how efficient and benign is the control of a master who is felt to be a friend, when compared with the tyrant who is only looked upon with aversion, or, at best, indifference, we may infer that the indirect advantages of conducting education of the happiness, they do not fail far short of the direct ones.

In the Sanskrit it is written: "Knowledge produces humility; from humility proceedeth worthiness; from worthiness riches are acquired; from riches religion, and thence happiness."

Of all things knowledge is esteemed the most precious treasure because of its incapacity to be stolen, to be given away, or even to be consumed. Knowledge introduced a man to good acquaintance, and as the humble stream to the ocean, so doth it conduct him into the hard acquired presence of the prince, whence fortune flowerth.

Learning to a man is a name superior to beauty; learning is better than hidden treasure; learning is a companion in a journey; for strange country learning is strength inexhaustible. Learning is the source of renown, and the fountain of delight in the Senate. Learning is a superior sight; learning is a livelihood, and a man in this world without learning is as a beast of the field."

It is a well settled principle that educational systems are not made—they grow. If the doctrine knowledge is pleasure can ever be made the controlling axiom, it must be by process of growth.

Probably every teacher of experience has noticed the pains which occur, so to speak, in the lives of some pupils, that it to say, from being indolent and indifferent and possibly a universal torment to the teacher, they become interested and zealous. This change occurred at the hour they realized knowledge was a pleasure. That knowledge the beginning of an epoch in the individual life, and so, too, this hour will mark the beginning of an epoch in educational matters. If the influence of the press and the pulpit and the forum for the next 200 years can be brought to bear to announce and reiterate in season and out the doctrine knowledge is pleasure. R. S. U.

WITH THE LOVERS

A Rattling Contest as Related in St. Nicholas.

Rupert Hughes' "Dozens from Lakerim" goes up from Kingston in the September St. Nicholas, to have some friendly indoor contests with the Trojan rivals.

And now the heavy-weight from Troy, one Jaynes, appeared upon the scene with his seconds. There was no ropes-off space, but only a collection of mats of the proper dimensions. Jaynes overshadowed little Bobbles as the giants overshadowed Jack the Giant-killer.

Bobbles, while he was diminutive compared with Jaynes, was yet rather tall and wiry for his light weight, and had an unusually long reach for one of his size. And now he was matched to box with a heavy-weight, but it was only for points, and he counted on his agility to save him.

In order to make the scoring of points more vivid and visible to the audience, it was decided that some headlines and that the gloves should be coated with shoe-blacking.

Bobbles proved himself an adept at that new boxing tactics, the ability to dodge. He rarely moved more than would take him sufficiently out of harm's way, and little mortal was his head from one side to to the other, a quick side step, or an adroit duck, saved him from most of Jaynes' attacks.

There were to be three rounds of three minutes each, with one minute's intermission between rounds. The three rounds were finished before either of the men was much more than well warmed up to the work, and before either had scored an impressive amount of points. Jaynes, however, claimed that Bobbles had landed more often than he, and that the sympathy of the audience was with the latter. The wrestling and interchange of blows Bobbles was usually quicker than he, Jaynes' blows were heavier, but Bobbles countered and dodged with remarkable skill; and when after three spirited rounds, the judges met to discuss the verdict they were to render, and there was some dispute as to the number of blows landed by each, the two men were brought together for inspection. Bobbles face and neck were as black as a picaninny's, but there were few dark spots upon his chest. Jaynes, however, was like a leopard, for the blacking on Bobbles' gloves had distilled him all up and down and around. As Jumbo remarked to Sawed-Off: "Bobbles certainly had designs on that big fellow!" The judges and seconds agreed that, on the point of defense, guarding, ducking, getting away and counter-hitting, Bobbles had considerably the best of it, and was the most speedy of the two. They were also inclined to grant him the greater number of points on his form in general, but especially on account of the disparity in size and reach; but when the counted the tattoo-marks on each, they found that here also Bobbles had made the higher score, and the judges decided to award him the prize.

Ten Pins at Home.

As the evenings grow longer the young folks may like to play a game at home which requires some activity, and a new with small ten pins that can be set up in almost any room in the house with the aid of a board upon which two narrow cleats have been nailed will supply more recreation than is at first thought. The pins should not be more than eight inches high and the balls about the size of a baseball. A lamp should be placed so that it throws a light on the pins, and along the alley. This can be done with a simply constructed shade.

Parents may be glad to know that after a few games of ten pins at home in the evening the young folks will retire to sound sleep, for the game gives just activity enough for proper exercise.

An Evidence of Bird Justice.

The English sparrow is the most universally unpopular of all birds. Because of its pugnacious habits of other birds, they are always ready to show their hatred of it. Whether it feeds on the eggs of other birds or not is a question, but it is certain that the nest that contains them is a well established fact. I can certify to the following incident, of what I have no doubt was justice meted out to one of these little sneak-thieves.

One morning on entering the barn I noticed a robin's nest no longer before a mud-swallows nest which I had permitted to be built there. I glanced up at the nest and saw, suspended from the end, one of the sparrows, dead. Upon closer examination it was found that the bird was hung by the neck at the end of a horse hair about a foot long.

It was carefully taken down for closer examination. There was a noose at the end of the hair, the knot being perfect. The end slipped far enough through, and bent in such a way that the knot could not be untied. It could not have been an accident—or, if possible, it was very improbable, to say the least. The noose was preserved and carefully laid away, as a relic of bird justice.

The swallows must have grown tired of the prosecution of the tormentors, and set a snare; or, coming upon it in the act of robbing, held it a prisoner in their nest until a noose was slipped over its head and it was allowed out, only to tighten the fatal knot as it attempted to fly away.—Ohio Farmer.

Mendelssohn felt intensely the meaning of music. "Comparing music with words," he said. "The Worte relchen nicht hinzu"—"Words do not go as far."

LONDON'S LATEST PASTIME.

Fencing as an After-Dinner Amusement for Ladies.

Fencing promises to become more and more of a fashionable pastime in London, especially among the fair sex.

The authority for this statement is Mr. McPherson, a professor of the art, who is just now taking part in a series of brilliant assaults d'armes in Paris, and whose presence among the champion swordsmen has given rather an international aspect to some of the bouts.

"In addition to the usual orthodox displays in the fencing rooms in London," he told a Daily Mail representative, "it is becoming frequent to see after-dinner bouts in the circles of the elite between a couple of expert fencers engaged for the occasion—a form of amusement which may yet disturb the serenity of the other lions, the German pianist and the Italian violinist.

"There is especially a movement among the fair sex strongly in favor of the foils. After all, there is more grace and skill in the world than the silhouette lunge brilliantly executed in a short skirt and gymnastic shoes. And besides, the exercise develops muscle, and that's what the sex goes in for nowadays.

"At least one lady fencer, Miss Lowther," continued Mr. McPherson, "is more than a match for the best amateur in England, and the equal of most of the professors. She has practiced fencing almost from childhood. More than one lady in London teaches the art, and altogether there is more ladies' fencing than men. This result is partly due to the enthusiastic advocacy of the foils by lady Colin Campbell, who is herself an expert. Mrs. Langtry is, of course, well known as another, and other actresses less known are diligent students.

"The Italian school of fencing prevails rather too much in London, and as the reproduction is only more or less like the original, London fencing leaves much to be desired. Certain amateurs, however, stand out brilliantly—Capt. Hutton, Mr. Egerton-Castle, and Sir Charles Dilke. The last named is indefatigable, and is well known in Paris for his prowess.

"Paris is, after all," he added, "the home of the foils. Whereas there are hardly more than half a dozen good salles d'armes in London there are some hundred and fifty in Paris, and the virtuosity of the exponents is pretty much in the same ratio. Rue, Prevost, Kirchoffer, Conte the Italian, and Baudry Deconet, the Belgian, are the present stars of the professional firmament.

"Latterly in France the foils have yielded in some quarters to the dueling sword, in which the play is notably the wrist, requires some activity, and a new with small ten pins that can be set up in almost any room in the house with the aid of a board upon which two narrow cleats have been nailed will supply more recreation than is at first thought. The pins should not be more than eight inches high and

THE TIP QUESTION.

What a Man Must Give in Order to Get Good Service.

"What ought a young fellow to give in tips?" said a young clubman to whom this important question had been propounded by a New York Tribune man. "Well, I do not know what other chaps give, but I make it a rule to take $25 in bills of different denominations for a week's visit to a Newport house, and $10 for a Friday night's visit to Long. To the man who valets me for a week I give $5. Five dollars to the butler, $2 to the butler, and $5 to the housemaid who makes up my room; the other $5 goes in $1 tips to grooms, footmen, etc. For the shorter visit I give $5 to the valet and $3 apiece to the others."

"That is too much for me," remarked one of his hearers, an impecunious young man of business. "I get through a week with $10, and about $5 or $6 of an over Sunday's invitation. It is rather hard on the rest of us for you to throw your big tips in the scale to such high figures. You should leave that to the married men—of course, their standard is higher—but we poor bachelors should be let off easy."

"Luckily for us women, we are never expected to tip as liberally as men, else I fear few of us could be 'invited back,'" said a young woman, taking part in the discussion.

"Fortunate for the poor devils that they don't expect it," interpolated her brother with a grin, "for they would never get it—women are always so mean."

"I give," continued his sister, scorning to notice his remark, "$6 for a week to the lady's maid, $2 to the housekeeper in charge of my room, and $1 apiece to the butler and coachman. That is what most of my friends give, and I think it is quite sufficient."

At restaurants a tip is the usual 10 per cent. of the order, so it is very easy to do what is expected. Only women do not seem to have grasped this simple rule of arithmetic.

On the great ocean liners the schedule should be well understood, for the traveler, be it male or female, who does less than the least ten dollars apiece for the stewardess and his particular attendant at table had better not come again on the trip unless he begins with a reformation, which at English hotels, as is well known, a gratuity is expected for the smallest service—the "boots" who brings the plundered requires considerable maneuvering.—Exchange.

Why the Sky is Blue.

The explanation of the blue color of the sky, as given by A. H. Thiessen, is that as the observer looks into space he sees the illuminated dust, or rather particles of dust floating in the air. The reason these particles appear to be blue is that they reflect to the eye like the blue rays of light, which form an effective barrier, while the red or coarser-waved rays pass on. That the dust particles are finer than the rays is due to their microscopic size. The finer the dust, the purer is the blue which is reflected or scattered. The bluest skies, therefore, are found on the tops of the dust particles are smallest; the blue of the sky, as viewed from the tops of mountains, is deeper and purer than that viewed from the plains. This is due to the fact that the air is very rare at great heights and can only sustain the finer particles of dust, while the coarser are found in the lower levels. The intensity of the blue sky for which Italy is noted is not owing to the absence of dust there than in northern countries, but to the fact that in the northern latitudes, in consequence of the greater coolness of the air, the vapor more readily condenses upon the dust particles. These particles thus become larger and less effective in turning back the blue rays alone. It follows that where the rays are reflected, and a grayish effect is produced. When the sky forms a background for white angular objects, it appears to be bluer by the contrast than it otherwise would, and after a shower, when the lower stratum of air is washed of its dust particles, the result is a deeper and paler blue. The reason the reds are prominent at sunset is that then the dust particles are between the sun and the observer, and the blues are reflected away from him, while the reds pass unobstructed to his eye.

Rockefeller Dreads Debt.

John D. Rockefeller, the "Oil King," whose wealth touches the $125,000,000 mark, won his first start in a business way working on a New York farm twelve hours a day, seven days a week, for twenty-five cents a day. He has earned his position as a multimillionaire by adhering to the principles of the following maxims:

1. It should be every man's duty to get all the money he can, keep all he can honestly and give away all he can.

2. Buy only what can be paid for, and look upon debt as an ogre that first paralyzes and then kills.

3. Live within your means and don't think too much of your neighbor's good fortune.

4. Keep a record of all expenditures and receipts, so that at the end of each year you can tell whether you are saving enough money to provide against the inevitable rainy day. Only one can make money; few can save it.

5. Live as though every act of yours was under the scrutiny of your bitterest enemy.—Saturday Evening Post.

Swallowed Her Tooth-Plate.

Mrs. John T. Jennings, of Amherst street, Buffalo, N. Y., had a most unusual cause. On the 15th inst., while eating dinner at her home, she swallowed a false tooth plate. The feeling of swallowing something was painful, and every effort was made to dislodge the obstruction, without avail. On the following Monday she was brought to St. Joseph's Home here, and the doctors tried in every way to relieve the trouble. All other devices failing, a surgical operation was performed, and the ribs, plate, and the plate was found an inch and a half from the cardiac end of the stomach and removed. Mrs. Jennings, however, was unable to rally from the operation, and died at 9 o'clock last night.—Baltimore Sun.

Bear Escaped.

"Steve," a big Russia ground bear, celebrated his introduction to Central Park yesterday by escaping from the pit and running several blocks through crowded streets, greatly to the terror of pedestrians, cyclists, and others. He should be guarded by his former owner, Steve Johns, a gypsy, and returned to the park.—Chicago Chronicle.

SYLPH-LIKE FIGURES.

Padded Hips the Thing if You Would Be in Fashion.

The fashion for padding the hips has become so common now, writes a Parisian correspondent, that I must speak of it as an established custom. Some people seem to have a horror of it, but then, when one thinks of it, what is there so much worse about putting little bustles on the hips than putting a little bustle at the back, and yet the most decorous of us wear those now for a dress is not fashionable without one.

And so, my lady, pad your hips if nature has not been sufficiently lavish with you, and be in vogue. All sorts of things are used for these pads. Some use hair, but that is heating and unwholesome, others swansdown, which is all very well in winter, but something like eternal torment for heat in the summer.

Some have layers of cotton batting, but that is heavy and drags one down, others use cushions of crinoline or canvas, but these are bulky and always getting awry, so that the best things to use are the little pads that come prepared like a bustle of fine feather bone run into satin or silk like the little pads for the back.

Of course, the padded hips give a very small effect to the waist, which itself is drawn in very tight just at the belt line, and the rest of the figure left to spread out as large as it wishes above, short corsets being worn to give the effect.

The hip pads should be made very secure to the belt or the effect is grotesque with them slipping all about or getting out of place to make one look as if one had a tumor. The best way is to have them made into each dress and fastened securely to the belt.

Some hip pads come in one with the bustle for the back and this is the best form of all, as it looks more like the natural figure than any of the separate affairs.

Bangs Revived.

It is said that bangs are coming into vogue again. Women with the broad, low forehead are fortunate, no one should not be persuaded by fashion to hide this light under a bushel; in short, they should not be beguiled into concealing their brows under a bang. As yet the bang has not arrived. Perhaps the little curling tendrils that fashionably lie about the face and over its forehead are the forerunners of bangs. When banged hair is becoming, it is very, very becoming; but when it isn't, like the bad little girl everybody knows about, it is horrid. Just at present the newest way of dressing the front hair is to brush it back and let it lie perfectly flat on the head in front, while it is puffed out on the sides. A fringe of little curls should fall naturally over the forehead, even if they have to be manufactured with a brushing curling iron. The hair should always be dressed so that it will form the most becoming background for the particular face that it tops and not according to the latest style

Modesty Forbade It.

The woman who had charge of a banquet recently given in Washington by a patriotic society of women noticed a man sitting at the toast she would be expected to respond to ten days or so before the meeting. To one young woman, whom she did not know personally, she sent the toast, "Our Flag." The young woman received it, and at once went to call on the head of the society in a state of great distress. She simply could not respond to the toast, she said. She didn't know whether a joke was intended, but she had been chaffed unmercifully about it already, and wouldn't go near the meeting if she were to be called on to speak on that subject. "Why, what on earth is wrong with that sentiment?" asked the head of the society. The pretty young woman hesitated. She blushed. "Well," she said, "you see, I am going to marry a man named Flagg."

The Servant's Table Etiquette.

While there is quite a difference of opinion among writers as to which side of the diner the waiter should place the soup, meat, water, etc., and remove the soiled plates, the weight of opinion seems to favor the left, as there is always less danger there of interfering with the needs of the person served—if engrossed in conversation he fails to notice the approach of the waiter. About dishes from which guests are to help themselves, there is no question. Those are invariably passed to the left. In serving, the larger dishes and platters are usually carried by a napkin in the hand, but smaller ones are passed on a tray. While the carver is busy the waiter stands at his left, ready to take each plate as served.

Rules for Cooking Porridge.

Chapters would be required for exhaustive treatment of the porridge family. The management of the inside of the saucepan into the various preparations known under this name is substantially the same with all. The milk must be fresh, the water clean and boiling, and never cooked in iron or copper; the cereal which gives it the acid character to the mixture should be good of its kind, not sour, musty or stale; each sort of porridge should contain a little salt, and the whole be carefully boiled in a double boiler, or in a vessel set within another holding boiling water.

Women and Their Ways.

The women of Finland are accorded almost every freedom that men enjoy. The country is described as "a veritable land for self-rights."

DOMESTIC AFFAIRS.

Timely Reminders and What the Housekeeper Wishes to Know.

A new way of serving eggs is always in demand, especially if a good supper dish is the result. First boil three eggs till hard and throw into cold water. Make a sauce by boiling a few slices of carrot, two onions and a bunch of sweet herbs in a quarter of a pint of milk and the same quantity of water for 15 minutes. Strain the milk is flavored, strain it, thicken with a piece of butter rolled in flour; add pepper and salt to taste. Remove the eggs and cut them into thick slices; arrange in a circle on a hot dish and set in the oven. Pour the sauce round the slices of egg, reserving about two tablespoonfuls. Chop the remains of the sauce with anchovy and pour in the centre of the eggs. Scatter chopped capers or parsley over the eggs and serve with croutons of fried bread round the dish.

When poaching eggs don't forget that a teaspoonful of vinegar in the water which they are cooked in makes them whiter and more delicate. Remember to salt the water. If they are dropped in muffin rings in a deep frying pan of boiling water they will be cooked quite soft by standing the covered pan (removed to a cool place) in water.

To clean sponges thoroughly dissolve a handful of coarse salt in a pint of water. Soak and knead the sponges in this mixture for some little time; then rinse under the water faucet, and they will be as good as new.

Steamers are now made with adjustable trays provided with two sets of cups. One set of cups is quite deep and are used for individual steamed puddings; the other set has smaller cups in which eggs may be steamed. Finally, the trays may be taken out and the steamer used for its usual purpose.

Here is a good way of using up meats left over: Take any kind of meat, cut in small pieces, as small as dice; put half butter and lard in a pan; let get very hot. Then put the meat in and shake it until it browns, and season; then put enough canned tomatoes to cover and let stew for about one hour. Meat cooked like this much better than salad in cold weather, and better than hash, so try it. I am sure you will like it.

If, when veal loaf is ready for the oven it is packed in a melon mold, it will be found to take in a much better shape. Wet the mold and closely pack in the meat. A short time suffices for it to take form, when it may be transferred to a baking pan and cooked as usual. It should be basted often with hot water to which a lump of butter has been added.

The successful making of an omelet is, according to experts, a matter of precision of detail. The word, therefore, of a French cook-book author for his skill in this line is of value when he advises that the salt and pepper should be sprinkled in after the eggs have begun to thicken in the omelet, indeed, shows signs of setting. To salt the omelet before it is put on the stove, as many do, is to add to the chances of its coming out heavy.

To make vinegar out of cider, put cider in a dry, warm place and put some molasses in it. Better, put something to work upon. In a short time it will make vinegar. You must not cover it tightly. Put a piece of cheesecloth over the opening so no dirt can get in.

Knitting wool can be made a fast color by soaking it in a strong solution of salt and water, taking it out after a few minutes' immersion and hanging to dry in the open air.

Fillets of haddocks make a useful dish of fried fish. Take as many small fillets of fresh haddocks as you require, and tie each in a knot. Flour thickly, dip in frying batter, and fry in deep boiling fat. Drain, and place paper near the fire and serve with a slice of cut lemon on each.

A shank of veal should be large enough for three dishes—the best meat, the stock for soup and a bowlful of good meat to make the "jellied veal." The shank is best for all these.

Thin and valuable gials can be hardened after this fashion. The it around with hay, place over a fire in cold water and let it heat gradually to one boil. Then let the glassware remain in the water until it becomes cold again.

In households where not only economy but the real art of cooking is practiced, the water in which rice is boiled is never thrown away. The major part of the nutriment goes into this liquid, and its addition to a soup is both valuable and palatable.

Cut warm bread and cake with a knife heated by being place in boiling water.

Their Fine Jewels.

Mrs. George Vanderbilt is said to have the finest rope of solitaire rubies in the world. Mrs. Astor has the same thing is said of Mrs. Webb's rope of pearls, which she is fond of wearing looped elaborately over a velvet corsage. Mrs. Astor also owns one of the famous diamond crown and Mrs. Stanley Mortimer has a coronet of emeralds and diamonds. Mrs. George Gould is wearing jewels, including a rope of pearls and one of diamonds. Mrs. Clarence Mackay possesses a curious set of jewels, consisting of Hindoo rujah. The rings are attached to one another and, though each one is for a separate finger, they must be worn at once.

The quaint grandmother pole bonnets that have been worn to some extent this year are revived for the fall in the large Directoire hat. Miroir velvet is to be found for hats and bonnets and gorgeous flowers and insects for trimming

How to Get People in Church.

How to get people into the churches to listen to the Gospel preached by ministers, is a problem that has forced itself into discussion among the local religious workers many times. It will be interesting, therefore, to learn what other persons have been grappling with the same question think of it.

One such is a pastor of a Boston church. He avers that it "requires skill to attract people to church," and the most spiritual sermons "a-all little in empty pews," and "souls cannot be saved unless they can be reached and be brought under gospel influence." The Rev. gentleman dislikes to bear the name of a sensational preacher, but he "may sometimes try to attract young people by announcing subjects like the Dreyfus case, or the return of Admiral Dewey, in order to get a chance to preach Christ to the people."

He believes in advertising, too, and has not only increased the space bought weekly of the newspapers, but has engaged for the posting each week of 15x20 foot bills advertising the plans and the special services of the church, and for the distribution of placards to be hung in shop-windows. All this will increase the church expenses about $500 a year, but the pastor shows his faith in his plan by offering to be reponsible for this amount, if the added prosperity of the church should not relieve him of the burden.

New Jersey and Corporations.

That New Jersey is the favorite legal home of big corporations is shown in the fact that there were 1,945 corporations chartered and authorized to issue capital stock to the amount of three and a half million dollars in the State during the fiscal year of the corporation department, which ended Saturday.

Nearly two hundred of these corporations are each capitalized at $2,000,000 and upward. Six hundred of them each have a capitalization of $1,000,000 or better.

Fifteen thousand corporations in every section of America are today operating under the laws of New Jersey. By the incorporating of these concerns, the State has legalized the issuance of stock aggregating nearly eight billions of dollars.

This year has witnessed the formation of more corporations in New Jersey than any other in the history of State.

For the twelve months just ended the State has received in filing fees alone $728 023,54, as against $125,000 for the previous fiscal year. That the receipts are not larger is due to the fact that New Jersey charges a very modest fee for launching a corporation. The fee for filing a certificate of incorporation is less than in any other State of the Union, outside of Delaware, which is just now making a vigorous effort to induce corporations to go there, and West Virginia, another competitor, which, however, limits the authorized capitalization of any single company to $5,000,000.

Of the gigantic corporations or trusts legalized by the State none, outside of the Standard Oil Company, has ever come to New Jersey and erected a large plant. The Sugar Trust, having a capitalization of $72,506,400, has two refineries in the State. The United States Rubber Company, capitalized at $39,688,500, has also a comparatively small amount invested in New Jersey. The American Cotton Oil Company, capitalized at $30,000,000, is another concern to have a small amount of money in use in the State.

Plainfield Patriotism.

That all Plainfield should have taken a day off Friday to pay homage to Admiral Dewey and his brave crew on the occasion of the first of the public ceremonies welcoming them back to a loving and appreciative nation, is highly significant of the patriotism that obtains in this community.

So far as we know this city is the only town in the metropolitan section that so unanimously and thoroughly acquiesced in the spirit of making yesterday a holiday. It is evidence that Plainfielders are not only loyal and devoted patriots, but also that they are willing to sacrifice something personally that they better impress upon the world their respect and admiration for that noble body of men who fought the battle in Manila bay.

DOES COFFEE AGREE WITH YOU?

If not, drink Grain-O—made from pure grains. A lady writes: "The first time I made Grain-O I did not like it but after using it for one week nothing would induce me to go back to coffee." It nourishes and feeds the system. The children can drink it freely with great benefit. Grain-O is the strengthening substance of pure grains. Get a package today from your grocer, follow the directions in making it and you will have a delicious and healthful table beverage for old and young. 15 and 25c.

QUEER FOLK. THOSE PEOPLE WHO LIVE ON THE SHORES OF THE FJORDS OF NORWAY.

Queer Customs of These People Who Never Bow or Offer Their Hands When Calling At a Neighbor's House.

Inhabitants of the shores of the fiords and the valleys of the coastrange of Norway are the most taciturn of people. The manner of calling at a neighbor's house neither bows nor offers his hand. He does not even take off his cap. He simply says "Good day," or some the customary Norwegian greeting. "Thanks for the last." Nor is the host distracted from whatever he is doing by the entrance of a visitor. He merely looks up and responds, "God bless you" or "No thanks needed," but his words and recent leave the visitor in no uncertainty as to whether he is welcome or not.

When a farmer is about to take a journey he parks his wife with the time up and gives his wife minute orders concerning the work to be done during his absence, but it never enters his head to mark the parting with a "Goodby" or a pressure of the hand. There is the same absence of greeting or any signs of satisfaction on his return. The first caresses are the horses and then, surrounded by his children, who always expect little presents upon these occasions, he unpacks the purchases he has made in the city. He does not kiss his wife nor greet her in any way, and she, on her part, does not allow her momentary attention to be disturbed at all by his coming.

Old Ellert Sundt who, some forty years ago, made a laborious investigation of the matter, came to the conclusion that the Norwegian is a peasant: "It seems to me that your wife ought to leave her work and give you her hand and a 'How are you?' when you come home."

The peasant could not restrain his mirth. He said: "Why, all the farm hands would laugh at us."

"Did you ever hear of a farmer saying 'Good day' to his wife when he came home?" Sundt asked.

"Yes," the peasant answered. "There was a man in the parish a good many years ago who had that singular habit."

Love-talk and affectionate demonstrations of every kind are avoided studiously, even between parents and children. The children receive the best possible care. It may be mentioned, incidentally, that each child has its own little chest containing among other things one shirt for each year of his life. But parents never kiss children who have left the cradle. The customary "Good morning, mamma," and "Good night, mamma," almost universal elsewhere, are unknown in Norway.

Even when the grown son or daughter leave the paternal roof to seek occupation elsewhere no handclasp is expected. When the daughter leaves as a bride she does offer her hand to her parents, but in token, not of farewell, but for gratitude for benefits received in the home.

Courtship is carried on by means of an intermediary, usually an elderly man. They are called in the aid of the parents and after expressing his desire to borrow a plow or buy a calf and beating about the bush gradually he works up the object of his visit. If he finds that the suitor is acceptable he leaves, promising to call again soon. Meanwhile the news is imparted to the girl. She, as a rule, is of the same mind as her parents, as sentimental considerations count for little with her.

Months may elapse before the suitor makes his formal offer. Next the parents have further parley with the aged deputy of Hymen in regard to dowry, wedding presents and other details, and then the betrothal takes place.

As for the wedding itself it may be remarked that it is usually as brilliant and showy as possible. A special cumstance is that the bride leaves her home and is conducted by her father to the bridegroom's house a week before the wedding day. On that day she sits like a statue among her female relatives and friends. Her long and usually golden hair hangs down her back. Her bosom is covered with gold and silver pins and brooches adorned with dangling disks. Around her waist is scores of long and massive girdles made of gilded plates of silver bearing the prettiest designs of the German Renaissance masters. A piece of old Norwegian gold smith's work—and on her head is the old-fashioned, tall, painted crown, usually made of gilded silver or copper. The wedding festivities do not differ greatly from those of other countries. There are musicians in plenty, a lavish "spread" and the guests often number 300.

Squaws As Lacemakers.

Specimens of the beautiful lace that is being made by the Chippewa Indians are now seen in a few of the fashionable houses of New York. They are mainly in the form of table covers, bed spreads and piano covers. The lace is purely adapted for these purposes, as the designs are bold and forcible and show to great advantage when placed over a delicately colored silk lining. In quality and style, however, the lace is quite a subject to variation as is that of any other make, and ample opportunity is therefore afforded for the individuality of the worker to assert itself.

It is to Miss Sibyl Carter, of New York, that the Indians owe their knowledge of lacemaking. In 1901 she conceived the idea of teaching them this accomplishment. The head work that followed was made while it displayed their patience and nimbleness of touch, was quite unsuitable. The accomplishment of that Miss Carter, aided by the Episcopal Mission, sent to them, was Miss Pauline Colby. She speaks of her pupils as being most eager to learn. She says that the idea once grasped they work with an accuracy which far surpasses that of white women.

From the first the lace found a ready sale among wealthy New York women, who encouraged the work by giving large advance orders. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan have fine bed-spreads of it for which they paid $200 apiece. Mrs. Astor, too, has been a liberal patron. The Indian women receive at the rate of 10 cents an hour for the completed work.

Blood flows through the bones of very young children almost as freely as through the veins.

HARRISON'S MURDER CASE.

How He Won One of the Few That Voorhees Ever Lost.

The scars are almost healed. The small boys of the Civil War period are growing gray, and Hoosiers who used to be afraid to go into Kentucky and Kentuckians who dared not cross into Indiana now "jug" for catfish from the same skiff and swap war lies and plug tobacco in perfect amity. The war must be over.

Ben Harrison's appearance in one of the greatest lawsuits in the world's history—the boundary dispute between Venezuela and Great Britain—is not his first celebre by any means. He may recall one in which he participated when he was twenty-five years younger than he is now, with Dan Voorhees as opposing counsel. He may remember it because it was one of the few murder cases Voorhees ever lost. The State of Indiana had found fault with one Bill Smith—that was not his name, but truth serves—because Bill had killed a farmer. It was a most unprovoked murder, for Bill and a party of roystering companions had stoned the farmer's house, and when he appeared without the most to make physical protest they set upon him most savagely. He was stabbed to death with a jackknife in the hands of Smith. Harrison was called in to assist the Prosecuting Attorney. It was a great day at the county seat, and the courthouse was packed to witness the battle royal between the two giants of the forensic arena. Smith was a very unpromising candidate, for nature and a bad upbringing had made him somewhat degenerate of him to begin with, and his own efforts had not improved his makeup. While the witnesses were being examined he leered, grinned and spurted tobacco juice vigorously extracted from a quid which, from the swelling in his cheek seemed to be about the size of an ordinary egg of commerce. Voorhees, calling each juror by his first name—"Bill," "Jim" or "Jack," as was his wont—made a most touching plea for the young man, begging his twelve peers to "give him just one more chance." He rung the changes on that text for three or four hours, and the more eloquent Voorhees became the more Smith grinned and expectorated.

When Voorhees had finished Harrison walked close up to the prisoner, regarded him most attentively for a length of time that seemed an hour to the jury and spectators, and in a tone

NO BASKET BALL AT CRESCENT RINK.

Board of Education Decided Against Renting it.

THE COST WAS TOO GREAT.

SO GIRLS WILL NOT PLAY B SKET BALL THERE.

Some Talk, However, of Renting the Y. M. C. A Gymnasium For One or Two Afternoons a Week For High School Girls—Board Meeting Was a Very Short One—Other Routine Business.

The girls of the Plainfield High School will not play basket ball in the Crescent Rink this winter unless the Girls' Athletic Association foots the bill. The Plainfield Board of Education considered the matter at the regular monthly meeting last Monday and decided that the charge of $150 for the use of the rink, without light and heat, was too much.

The regular October meeting of the Board was held last Monday at the Stillman building. The report of Collector Martin showed school taxes to the amount of $671.91 collected, together with $41.12 interest, making a total of $713.03 which was deposited in the City National Bank. There was the regular batch of bills ordered paid.

Mr. Lounsbury brought up the question of awarding a contract for the carting of the ashes from the public schools. He had received a bid of $120 from Fernando Brown and it was signed that it be accepted. Last year the work cost $110, but there was more to be done this year. The building committee, of which he is chairman, was given power in the matter.

Then the Board went into executive session during which time the renting of the rink for basket ball and drilling was considered. No final action was taken on it as Superintendent Maxson did not report favorably on it. It was practically a decision on the part of the Board against renting the rink. There was a discussion of the possibilities of securing the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium for one or two afternoons a week for the use of the High School girls.

Surprise for Colored Society Folk.

Colored society folks will be surprised to learn of the marriage of Miss Rosa Shelton, of 1333 Watchung avenue, and Samuel Lewis, of Richmond, Va. They were married last Friday in New York and are now spending their honeymoon there. The bride is a cousin of H. S. Bossieux, of 745 Watchung avenue. They will probably reside at Richmond, the home of the groom.

The Firemen's Parade.

Arrangements are now about complete for the firemen's parade that is to be held in the borough next week Thursday. If the weather is favorable event will be one of the largest in the history of the borough. The members of the borough companies have received their new uniforms and everything is satisfactory.

Friday Last Day of Grace.

Those affected by the sale of property to satisfy the several amounts due the borough account of the assessment levied in connection with the opening of Watchung avenue will have until next Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock to settle their accounts. At present there are about forty people who have not settled.

BRUNSWICK COMPANY WANTS TO COME HERE

Superintendent Radel Feeling the Pulse of Plainfield.

WOULD BUILD A BELT LINE.

SEVERAL DIFFERENT ROUTES ARE PLANNED FOR TROLLEY.

The Traction Company Officials Visited Plainfield Yesterday and Looked Over the Ground—Promise to Do the Right Thing by the City if a Franchise is Granted to Their Company.

There now appears to be reasonable chances that Plainfield will in a short time have trolley communication with New Market, Metuchen and South Plainfield, in connection with the present facilities of reaching Dunellen, Bound Brook and New Brunswick. The idea is to construct a belt line that will take in the places mentioned, and a number of influential Plainfield people have succeeded in securing the interest of the Brunswick Traction Company in the scheme.

Monday afternoon Mr. Radel, of the Brunswick Traction Company, came to Plainfield in company with Mr. Rand, of the same company. They met several Plainfield people who are interested and the matter was talked over in a practical, business-like manner. The trolley company are now willing and desirous of reaching Plainfield through a belt line system.

With the belt-line system will also come cheaper fares and Plainfielders will be able to ride a greater distance for less money than at present. The Brunswick Traction Company are anxious to secure patronage in this city, especially so on account of the way they have been treated by the Plainfield Street Railway Company. They claim to have been treated shabbily and have been unable to form any reasonable agreement with the Plainfield company.

The exact route to be adopted for the trolley from Metuchen to this city has not yet been decided upon, but there are two or three different routes, any one of which can be secured. It is claimed that consents have been secured and if the franchise can be secured the road will be built within a short time.

The election of officers was held and resulted as follows: President, Phillip Suffren; vice-president, Stacy Reynolds; secretary, Miss Anna E Manktelow; treasurer, Harold C. Nomer; chairman of lookout committee, Harold Tomlinson; prayer meeting committee, Miss J. Louise Jenkins; social committee, Miss Katherine Dwight; flower committee, Miss Alice Miller.

Caught Between the Bumpers.

Wm. Ellis, aged 22 years, a brakeman on a P. & R. freight train, was caught between the bumpers of two freight cars at Westfield Saturday evening about 8 o'clock. He was brought to the hospital in this city, where he is doing so well that he will be able to return to his home in Philadelphia in a few days. He was crushed across the chest, but the injury was not serious, although it knocked him out for the time being.

Samuel St. J. McCutchen and family, who have had a cottage at Belmar during the summer, have returned to their home on Rockview avenue.

Mrs. J. Farrington and daughter, Louise, of Bound Brook, are spending a few days with Mrs. Farrington's brother, S. H. Perrine, of Park avenue.

PROPOSED SPEEDWAY.

EVERY ASSURANCE THAT PROJECT WILL BE CONSUMMATED.

It Passes Through a Fine Section—Two Drives Are Provided For—Plans Drawn For It by Engineer Hubbard.

Now that Plainfield is assured a handsome drive and speedway there is a great deal of interest manifested in the scheme. Workmen are employed every day on the new road, which is Woodland avenue, and before snow flies the avenue will be well opened up. It extends from Prospect avenue, near the Darling property, to the property of Councilman George F. Mellick just beyond the grounds of the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club, Evergreen avenue, Denton avenue, Cedar avenue, Randolph road, Belleview avenue to city line, thence past the Hillside Cemetery and Hillside Tennis and Golf Club grounds.

Two drives are provided for. One will be of dirt and will be used for a speedway. The other will be a macadamized road. Sidewalks will be laid on each side of the roadway which is to be 60 feet wide. In the centre there will be a row of handsome trees that will provide plenty of shade and will add greatly to the general beauty of the drive.

The work is now so well under way that success is assured, and another feature that will add much to the value of the property is the opening and laying out of Woodland Park. To this as well as in the new driveway the property owners all along the line are evidencing a great deal of interest, and are not at all slow in putting up the necessary cash to carry on the work.

Plainfield has needed for a long time a speedway, where lovers of fine horses can enjoy themselves and not molest or be molested, and there are certainly a sufficient number of such people in the city who will give their aid and money to further such a scheme.

Elaborate plans for this great improvement have been drawn by Civil Engineer F. J. Hubbard, and are now on exhibition at the real estate office of S. D. Drake, North avenue.

MAY TEACH IN COLLEGE

PROF. MORRIS OFFERED A CHAIR IN RUTGERS' COLLEGE.

Professor Has the Offer Under Consideration and May Leave Dunellen School Where He is Now in Charge.

Prof. Morris, superintendent of the public schools of Dunellen, has received a flattering offer from the trustees of Rutgers' College to a professorship in that institution. It is understood that Professor Morris has the offer under advisement and that it is quite possible that he will accept. If Prof. Morris decides to accept the offer from Rutgers he will probably tender his resignation to the Board of Education at once.

Who his successor will be has not yet been decided upon. It is understood that the Board may take some action upon the matter at tomorrow night's meeting.

Since Prof. Morris has been in charge of the Dunellen schools he has given entire satisfaction. His contemplated change will be a surprise to the citizens of the borough as it was to the members of the Board.

ENGINEER WAS ASLEEP

He Paid Penalty For Negligence By Death.

BAD WRECK ON LEHIGH.

A REAR END COLLISION EAST OF NEW MARKET.

Occurred a Little After 4 a. m. Monday and Blocked the Tracks—The Signals Were Set Against the Trains Proceeeing, But Engineer Did Not Heed.

With the engineer asleep at his post, a locomotive at the head of a heavy freight train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad crashed into the rear end of a coal train a mile east of New Market at 4:21 Monday morning. The engineer, Peter McGlynn, of Jersey City, paid the penalty of death for his negligence. He was crushed beneath the wreck of his locomotive. The remainder of the crews of the two trains escaped injury. The locomotive, a caboose and six large coal gondolas were piled up across both tracks and the rails were torn up for some distance.

Monday afternoon a train of fifty-four loaded coal cars of the gondola type left Packerton over the Lehigh Valley Railroad, bound for Jersey City. The train was pulled by locomotive No. 778 one of the large camelback freight engines. Peter McGlynn was the engineer. He boarded at 9 Zouave avenue, Jersey City. He had a wife living in New Brunswick. His parents live in Philadelphia. McGlynn came to the Lehigh Valley in 1893 after the strike. After acting as fireman for a time he was promoted to engineer. He was a non union man. The fireman of the train was Harry Jones, of Jersey City. The conductor was Norman Gardinier, of Newark.

At Bethlehem, Pa., they caught up with another coal train drawn by locomotive No. 264, Engineer Young, of Easton, and Conductor Miller, of Easton. Both trains were running extra as is the custom with all slow coal and freight trains. The first train gradually pulled away and was not seen by those on the rear train until just before the collision.

A mile east of the New Market station there is a railroad bridge over New Market pond. Just beyond it there is a siding from the east-bound track. A hundred yards back there is a semaphore which automatically shows a danger signal when the switch is open. A quarter mile back is another semaphore showing the green cautionary signal automatically when the switch is open.

The first train, drawn by engine No. 369, started to enter the switch and go on the siding. The two semaphores showed be red and green lights, warning following trains. A flagman also was sent back. When locomotive 778 rounded the curve at New Market Fireman Jones heard Engineer McGlynn singing to himself as he was accustomed to do when he grew sleepy. The singing died away and Jones heard it no more.

When the train came into the straight stretch from New Market to the Samptown curve it was moving at a slow speed, not over seven miles an hour. Fireman Jones did not look ahead and had no idea of the proximity of the other train until he heard a noise at the side of the track. There was a flagman standing there. Then he looked ahead and saw the lights of a caboose on the track only a short distance away.

With a shout to Engineer McGlynn to look out, Jones stepped off the moving locomotive. As the speed was not great, he alighted without difficulty. It was not until then that Engineer McGlynn put on the air brakes. The brakes were connected through for only three cars and failed to stop the heavy train in the short distance that remained. There was plenty of opportunity for the engineer to jump, but it is supposed that he thought the train was moving so slowly that there would be no serious results from the collision.

Although it will never be known for a certainty whether McGlynn was asleep or not, there seems little doubt but that he was as he must have seen the warning semaphores and the caboose lights ahead had he been awake. It is supposed that the fireman's shouts roused him.

When the locomotive struck the caboose it pushed the first train along the track nearly fifty feet. Then something caught. The caboose shifted to one side and the engine was derailed. Then it tipped over on its right side crashing into the last car of the standing train. McGlynn was struck in the abdomen by the corner of the coal car and then crushed beneath the ruins. He was instantly killed. One of the rails was turned upward and pierced the bottom of the tender projecting ten feet into the air.

The east bound milk train was due at the time. The first train had started to go on the switch to allow it to pass. The flagman of the first train stopped it just before it crashed into the wreck. Two cars and the caboose of the first train and the locomotive and four cars of the second train were wrecked. Both tracks were torn up. Wrecking trains arrived shortly from Perth Amboy and Easton. The steam wrecking crane from Packerton arrived later this morning. Assistant Train Master J. A. Droege, of Jersey City, went to the scene of the wreck and took command at the field telegraph station which was established there.

The west bound track was opened for traffic at 10 o'clock and the other will be used this afternoon. Until they were opened, the passenger trains on the Lehigh Valley were run over the Jersey Central betw en Cranford and Bound Brook.

MAYOR DECIDED AGAINST

JUSTICE ABBOTT SAYS HE MUST PAY PROTESTED CHECK.

The Check Was Issued to "J. C. Monroe," Whom the Mayor Said He Did Not Know, at Request of Capt. Swenck.

Justice Abbott Tuesday a. m. rendered a decision in favor of the plaintiff in the action of Oscar Richter, of 302 Broadway, receiver for D. M. Torrey, a banker in New York who failed several months ago, against Mayor George W. Rockfellow, of this city, to collect a check for $180 which the Mayor had drawn and Torrey had cashed, but which was afterwards protested at the First National Bank in this city. The case has attracted considerable attention owing to the parties concerned in it.

On October 1, 1896, Mayor Rockfellow drew a check for $180 in favor of "J. C. Monroe," at the request of Capt. S. W. Swenck, a retired army officer, and gave it to the latter. Swenck resides on Park avenue in the suburbs of this city and is an intimate friend of the Mayor's. Shortly after that the check was presented to Torrey with the name of "J. C. Monroe" endorsed on the back of it. Torrey turned the check over to the National Park Bank of New York for collection, and it was paid by another check drawn by Mr. Rockfellow on the First National Bank of this city. When this latter check came back to the First National Bank in the course of business it was protested and never paid

After the failure of Torrey the protested check was found by Receiver Richter, who brought suit to recover the amount of it from Mayor Rockfellow. On the stand Mayor Rockfellow stated that he did not know of "J. C. Monroe," but had drawn the check at the request of Capt. Swenck.

LANDED ON COBBLES.

Painful Experience of a Plainfield Cyclist Trying to Ride Down the Mountain.

John Thompson, a machinist, living in Stebbins place, met with an accident Sunday evening about 7 o'clock which nearly cost him his life. Early in the day he rode his wheel over the second mountain to visit some relatives. Returning home he attempted to ride down the mountain. In doing so he lost control of his wheel and was thrown a considerable distance against a pile of stones. His head was severely cut and his neck wrenched. For a while he lay in a semi-conscious condition. He was found by a man coming to Plainfield and was assisted to Dr. Pittis's office on Somerset street, where the latter worked for several hours in treating the man's injuries. About 11 o'clock Mr. Thompson was removed to his home, where he is doing as well as can be expected.

NEW RESIDENCES ARE GOING UP ALL OVER.

Permits for Eleven New Houses Granted This Month.

NETHERWOOD IS BOOMING

MANY OF THE NEW HOUSES ARE OF ELABORATE STRUCTURE.

Rapid Growth of Netherwood District is Remarkable, Three Big and Two Small Residences Being Planned—Other Buildings Being Put up in Various Sections of the City Which Mean Improvement.

Plainfield is feeling its share of the prosperity that is sweeping over the country. During the month of September which ends today, work has been started on eleven new houses, several of them elaborately planned residences, which are now in a varying state of completion. Others will be started soon.

The rapid growth in the Netherwood district is remarkable. Plans have been filed this month with the building inspector for three more large residences there. Two smaller ones have also been started. Runyon and Manning are putting up another frame dwelling that will be a very handsome one when completed. It was designed by Fred L. Lancaster. The mason work is being done by John Mitchell and the carpenter work by J. Manning. The house is being built on LaGrande avenue near Woodland avenue. There is another handsome frame dwelling going up on that same street. John N. Mitchell, the owner, is doing his own mason work. The carpenter is J. O'Manning. William H. Clum was the architect.

Charles H. Hand has a charming residence well under way on Belvidere avenue, corner of LaGrande avenue. The architect was William H. Clum, the mason Jacob Gulick and the carpenter S. P. Hoffman.

A smaller house of tasteful design is being erected on Belvidere avenue, near LaGrande avenue by David Arthur, Jr. A. F. Seicht is the architect, Cormick Caufield the mason and Arthur Brothers the carpenters.

C. VanHerwerden has a new house in course of erection at 1312 South avenue. It is of pretty design, the work of Fred L. Lancaster. William C. Smith is the mason and John Lloyd the carpenter.

A. Schlick is building two frame cottages at 720 West Third street. Lewis Nelson has the contract for building them. Mrs. Bridget Newman is the owner of a frame cottage being erected at 521 West Third street. Wm. Tallamy has the contract for the mason work and D. Murray for the carpenter work. Mrs. Alicia McIntyre owns another frame cottage in course of erection on the same street, near New street. Cormick Caufield has the mason work and C. L. Hedemark the carpenter work.

George W. Nostrand is putting an addition on his frame dwelling at 303 East Second street. Mitchell & Van-Horn are doing the mason work and H. E. Gayle the carpenter work.

Funeral of Miss King

The funeral services of the late Miss Catherine King, of the borough, were held Thursday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock from Warren chapel. The attendance of relatives and friends was large. The services were in charge of Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, and Rev. Dr. W. C. Nelson, of the borough, both spoke words of comfort and consolation.

During the services a beautiful vocal selection was given by a trio composed of the Misses Grace Johnson, Edith Vail and Josie Martin. The interment took place in the family plot in Hillside cemetery, and six nephews of the deceased served as bearers.

An Example for Plainfield.

The result of the fourth peremptory sale by the city of Bayonne of realty seized under the provisions of the Martin Tax act for taxes, assessments and water rents proved satisfactory to the city authorities. An aggregate of more than $30,000 will be realized when all the guaranteed payments are made. The property disposed of comprised more than four hundred and fifty parcels, chiefly of one lot each, and situated principally in the Third ward. The Fifth ward was the only subdivision of the city not interested.

An Approaching Marriage.

PLAINFIELD CLOSED UP SHOP FOR DEWEY.

Business Completely Suspended All Day Friday.

WITNESSED NAVAL PARADE.

HUNDREDS OF PLAINFIELDERS WENT TO NEW YORK.

Every Train That Left in the Morning Carried a Small Multitude of Local Patriots and Sightseers to the New York Harbor—Plainfielders Were at the Various Points of Vantage.

Even the Fourth of July or Christmas could not have been observed any more religiously as a holiday than was Dewey Day in Plainfield Friday. In accordance with the proclamations issued by Mayors Rockfellow and Smalley nearly every business house in the city and borough suspended operations all day, and many of the local factories closed down also.

National colors and flags were displayed liberally throughout the city, and gave a patriotic air in keeping with the significance of the day.

Of course, there was nothing going on in the city in connection with the welcoming home of the hero of Manila and his brave men, and therefore the mecca to which a vast majority of Plainfielders turned their steps was New York, where places of vantage overlooking the New York Harbor and the North river were pre-empted for the purpose of viewing the greatest naval pageant viewed in this country.

In fear that they might be put to some inconvenience in the immense crowds gathered in the metropolis, some Plainfielders went off on little private excursion parties, but they were not many. The greatest exodus of people was seen going in the direction of New York. Always a scene of hustle and bustle in the morning hours, the Park Avenue station of the Central Railroad seemed immeasurably so yesterday with the congestion of people at that place bound for New York. Extra cars were run on every train, but the big crowd filled filled them almost full by the time the trains pulled out of Plainfield. The Central, however, furnished splendid service and took care of its patrons in good shape.

A large number of Plainfielder had prepared days in advance for places to see the naval parade—either from advantageous spots along the piers, high buildings or on the multitude of river craft that were a part of the escort of the war vessels. Others went to the city intending to take their chances of seeing the parade from the best places they could find. The ferry boats were swarmed with this latter class, and as rule they made excellent places from which to view the fleet of vessels as they passed up in review along the river.

The great exodus of Plainfielders came home in a steady but modern flow all the afternoon, so that distributed through the numerous trains running out of Jersey City during the late afternoon and early evening hours there was but little inconvenience for them so far as the transit between New York and Plainfield was concerned.

Repairing East Second Street.

NATURE'S COSMETIC.

LIST OF VEGETABLE PRODUCTS GOOD FOR THE COMPLEXION.

In the Earth's Laboratory Can Be Found a Wide Variety of Materials for Beautifying Femininity—Some Queer Dentifrices and Lotions.

Almonds are very soothing to the skin, and many foreign women use crushed almonds instead of soap for their faces and hands to keep them fair, soft and white. Oil of almonds, also, may be rubbed into the skin at night, and is better than cold cream, especially if really pure oil of almonds, and not a mere imitation. As for the so-called almond soap, it is very rare that the almond has any part in it. It somewhat resembles almond in its odor, but this odor comes from some role, which is taken from tar oil and other substances not injurious to the skin, but not so beneficial as real almond powder, a "nut quantity" of which forms a paste in the water, and is a splendid beautifier.

Basil, though not a cosmetic plant, is a skin beautifier, because it purifies the air wherever it grows, and pure air is a skin beautifier. In India this plant is sacred to Krishna, and is named after the nymph beloved by Krishna. It was he, in fact, who changed her into the plant. It is also sacred to Vishnu, and necklets and rosaries are made of its stalks and roots. No Hindoo house is without it; it absorbs the carbonic acid of the air, and gives forth its disinfecting, vivifying oxygen.

Benzoin is a genuine cosmetic of nature. It is the gum of the benzoin tree. The best benzoin comes from Siam. It is the frank-incense of the Jews and the incense of Roman Catholics. Hindus, Buddhists, Mahommedans, etc. The Chinese fumigate their houses with it, owing to its grateful perfume, vanilla pomade and pastilles are made with it. As a cosmetic it has no superior. A few drops added to water makes what is called "virginal milk," which, used as a lotion, keeps the skin wondrously soft and white, owing to its astringent qualities. Cedar wood in powder or as a tincture is excellent for the teeth, and imparts an agreeable perfume to the breath.

Citron is another substance that can be used with advantage to the face and hands during the season. No toilet table, indeed, ought to be without it, and if the fingers and nails are well rubbed in a quarter of citron every time the hands are washed they will never require the manicure's aid. During the day, indeed, it is better to rub the hands with citron than to use water.

Cucumber is another of nature's own cosmetics. Never throw away cucumber peelings. Boil them and use the water for the toilet. Here also a slice of cucumber may be used instead of soap, with advantage to the skin. Still water is as good as rose water for the complexion, and for some skins perhaps better; it makes the skin paler.

Still another of nature's cosmetics is the elderflower, famous for its cooling qualities. It makes an exquisite wash for the face and an excellent oil for the hair.

Lavender is not precisely a cosmetic, yet a few drops in the toilet water are very refreshing. The hygienic virtues of lavender are well known.

All spices are air purifiers and air coolers. It is a fact that very few epidemics visit places filled with perfumes of spices—cloves, mace, cinnamon, etc. A room perfumed with spices and eucalyptus remains cool on the hottest summer day, and defies disease results from impure air.

There is no better antiseptic in nature than musk—real musk, of course. The Chinese use it also to dye their hair and eyebrows.

Good Idea For a Pantry.

A good idea, this, taught in the waitress class at the Pratt Institute: A convenient bag for the butler's pantry, to hold the soiled table linen, may be made of linen, denim, or any serviceable, washable material. It is made of two straight pieces of material cut in the shape of a large bag sewed together at the sides. The opening runs about half way down the middle of one piece. The top has two rows of stitching, leaving a little ruffled head. Between the stitching is run a curtain stick, with a ring or two in either end, which fastens the bag to the door or the wall. A deep pocket is stitched across the entire width of the front side of the bag where the opening is, and is divided in the center. The large bag holds the tablecloth, while the smaller ones are for the napkins and embroidered pieces which are to receive special attention in the wash.

Scientific Cooking.

"People have an idea," said the expert cook, "that when we speak of scientific cookery we are talking of something very difficult, but it is only the application of the simplest principles. Scientific cookery can only be obtained by careful experiment, careful observation, and careful record. When we cook as we would make chemical experiments we shall have perfect cooking—we shall be sure the first loaf of bread will always be good. There is as much training of the mind from the practice of exact cookery as from the study of mathematics."

FIFTY-SEVEN YEARS AT THE THROTTLE.

One of the Oldest Employes of the Pennsylvania Road.

SOON BE 75 YEARS OLD.

HE WILL CELEBRATE HIS BIRTHDAY NEXT MONDAY.

For Over Half a Century Has Been Running the Same Train—William Gordon, Sr., of East Millstone, is the Man With This Remarkable Record—Comes Under Benefit of Pension System.

Wm. Gordon, Sr., of East Millstone, the oldest railroad engineer in the United States in active service, will celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of his birthday next Monday. Mr. Gordon is hale and hearty and does not reveal his age. He is employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and will be the first of the engineers to come under the recently adopted pension system, which goes into effect January 1st next.

Mr. Gordon does not fully realize how it will feel not to run his engine, for the train that he is running today between Jersey City and East Millstone he has run for fifty-seven years. Fortunately the accidents to his credit are so small and trivial that they can scarcely be called accidents. Despite his advanced years and the constant use of his eyes he never uses eyeglasses when at work and only occasionally to read by when he is off duty.

Mr. Gordon had the honor of being one of the chosen few to run the old John Bull engine, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was anxious that he should run her to the World's Fair. He refused this honor, as the trip was a long one and his age argued against it. There is scarcely a railroad engineer in the east of any prominence who does not know Mr. Gordon or has not heard of him.

He lives a life of quietude at East Millstone, and follows every day the even tenor of his way. He is wedded to his trade and will no doubt feel the loss of occupation that he has followed for so many years. He is highly esteemed by the company for which he works and is considered as one of the best and most careful men in its employ. No doubt he will be generously treated by his employers under the new pension system.

Mr. Gordon is a grandfather of Mrs. Walter C. Dobbins, of this city.

LIFE FULL OF BUSINESS.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF THE LATE CHARLES W. SCHIPPER.

Had Resided in Plainfield for Twenty Years—Once Engaged in Banking Business, but of Late Was Importer.

Charles W. Schipper, of West Seventh street, who died last Thursday afternoon at 12:30 o'clock at Dr. Helmuth's private hospital, 465 Lexington avenue, New York, was one of Plainfield's best known and highly respected citizens, having resided here about twenty years. He was born in Oldenburg, Germany, sixty two years ago, and came to this country about thirty years ago. During the Civil War he was engaged in the banking business. Afterward he became a member of the firm of Smith & Schipper, 91-93 Wall street, New York, probably the largest exporters and importers of sugar in this country. The firm was one of the most widely known in the trade.

Previous to the time that Mr. Schipper and his sister, Miss Emilie Schipper, sailed for Germany last summer, he underwent an operation for appendicitis, and he felt that a trip abroad would restore him to health and strength. He visited Carlsbad and drank freely of the water at that place, which is so beneficial. This did not have the desired effect and no signs of improvement could be noticed. Later cancer of the stomach developed and this is what caused Mr. Schipper's death.

Mr. Schipper and his sister arrived in New York last Wednesday afternoon on the steamship Lahn. Last Sunday Mr. Schipper lapsed into unconsciousness from which he never recovered. As soon as the steamer arrived in port Mr. Schipper, who was to all appearances dead, was removed in an ambulance to Dr. Helmuth's private hospital, and his physician, Dr. Endicott, was summoned to attend him. As soon as an examination was made it was decided that he could not live.

The remains were brought to this city Thursday afternoon accompanied by Gustave Schipper, a brother, and the funeral services were held Sunday afternoon from the house on West Seventh street, at 3 o'clock. Interment was in Hillside Cemetery.

Mr. Schipper is survived by a brother, Gustave, and a sister, Miss Emilie Schipper.

Henry B. Drake, of Duer street, has returned after spending a few days in Philadelphia.

THE WHIST TABLE.

Common Sense Theory and Rules of the Use of the Discard.

There seems to be some fatality in whist which makes it impossible for two persons to agree upon any particular scheme of arbitrary conventions, especially in the discards, without coming to grief. How often we see two players coming together in a compass game for the first time and agreeing to play some pet scheme which one or the other fancies, and how gaily and lustily the deals in that particular game seem set up to beat that very system. If they agree to discard in a certain way, along comes a hand with which the system drops about five tricks. As a master player says, all such schemes are either a waste of ingenuity or an insult to the intelligence of the partner. There never can be an absolute rule for anything in whist, because each hand presents its own difficulties which may be solved by the common-sense player in his own way.

About the only general rule for the common-sense discard is to throw away the suit which you don't want your partner to lead. That does not mean that you are not willing for the adversaries to lead it up to or through you; on the contrary, such a thing may be worth to your taste. A player should be free at all times to discard according to the best interests of his own hand agreeably to his judgment of the situation and without fear that his partner will be tempted to do something foolish just because a certain suit or a particular card has been discarded.

If you see that you will probably have two discards and you want to show your strong suit to your partner, you can usually do so by discarding both the others. The style of discarding frequently follows a speculative lead of short trumps when your partner is found able to continue them. If one suit has already been shown, especially by the adversaries, one discard will best suit. If your best suit is known, a discard may be useful in showing discard of your own suit, especially if established, it should be a positive indication that you have a re-entry in the suit you keep, and such a discard will usually show that the re-entry card is not an ace, or you would not be keeping a guard to it.

If your partner discards the same suit twice, it will usually be found that he does not care which of the others you lead to him and wants you to lead the best suit for himself. This should prompt you to lead the best card you have of such a suit, regardless of number, so that he may know on that first round to try his high cards are out against him. If your partner discards the adversaries' suits you may be pretty sure that he wishes you to play trumps. Do not disregard to him, as he is probably in the high grass with a surprise party for some one.

It is frequently good policy, however, not to discard the adversaries' suit, even at the risk of breaking up your hand, especially if such a discard will enable you to attack the remaining cards in their suit. They may be playing a very forward game in order to make a re-entry in it. When the time comes to get back to the suit, the player holding it may take some sort of finesse which will spoil the whole thing; one, just becoming and your partner, you having the small one, and you discard it, the player immediately sees that his suit is established because he can only lead one out against him with one lead. If you decline to discard this small card, letting go something valuable in another suit, he will naturally conclude, when you play the small one second hand, for instance, that you are keeping it as a guard to the suit and that he will finesse against you, letting your partner's second-best win a trick.

Saddle Horses.

The constant change in the style of saddle horses is well shown in observing the difference between prize winners this year and last. The first illustration shows the Missouri stallion Thornton Star, winner of the first prize at the St. Louis horse show in 1898, and the second is a cut of the Kentucky gelding Frenchman winner of the cup given by the National Saddle-Horse Breeders' Association for the champion saddler at Lexington in 1899.

Most horse breeders and equestrians would choose the former, but since improvement is the order of the day, probably the latter has good points not clearly shown in the cut.

LEHIGH ESTABLISHES CITY TICKET OFFICE.

Frank Rowley Will Be Placed In Charge Of It.

BUSSES TO MEET THE TRAIN.

AN AGGRESSIVE BID FOR PATRONAGE IN PLAINFIELD.

The Office Will be Located in Mr. Rowley's Drug Store, From Which Point the Busses Will Make Frequent Trips to South Plainfield — A Fare of Twenty-Five Cents is to be Charged on Busses.

Failing in a number of efforts to bring their railroad into Plainfield in the hopes of securing some of the patronage that is now held by the Central Railroad, the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company has at last decided to do the next best thing and open a ticket office in the city and run busses between this city and South Plainfield where people can secure the many advantages offered by this road.

The ticket office will be established in about ten days at Frank Rowley's drug store, West Front street, next to Music Hall, and Mr. Rowley will have charge of the sale of all tickets. He will also be able to furnish all necessary information to people who desire to know about the running of trains, price of tickets, etc., on the Lehigh road.

That the new system will be a success goes without saying, for there are a great many people who would like to use the Lehigh Valley trains if good accommodations were given between this city and South Plainfield, and no doubt there will be an increase in patronage.

Messrs. Lefeyck & Harris, of South Plainfield, have secured the contract to operate the busses, and they will be up-to date in every particular. These busses will make five trips every day. It will probably be arranged that passengers for Easton or points west will be carried free, while those for this side of that point will be charged 25 cents. The busses will be operated especially for the railroad company's interests, but still if people wish to pay the price they can ride between the two places without being passengers for the railroad.

GUESTS SAW DEWEY.

Plainfielders Entertained by Scott Foster Along the Line of the Dewey Parade.

Scott Foster, president of the People's Bank, of New York, who has spent a number of summers in Plainfield, returned with his family last week in time to extend the hospitalities of his handsome home on Seventy-second street to a large number of guests, whose pleasure it was to witness the celebration attending the welcome of Dewey to New York on Friday and Saturday.

Among these guests were included a number of Plainfield friends. The site of Mr. Foster's residence, commanding a fine outlook on the Hudson River and overlooking Riverside Drive, made the place an exceptional one for a view of both the marine and land parades. A platform built at the front of the house gave ample accommodations to the invited sightseers. In addition, many resorted to the roof of the house Friday, the day of the marine parade, as the housetop afforded a rare view of the river for a long stretch of distance, up and down.

A dainty and bountiful luncheon served both days completed the arrangements for the pleasure and comfort of Mr. Foster's guests, who counted themselves happy to be included in his list of friends.

Happy Surprises.

There were two happy surprises Sunday at Trinity Reformed church. The first one was at the morning service, when the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, took a seat in the pulpit and assisted in the devotional exercises preceding the sermon by Rev. A. E. Main, after an absence of three months, and the other surprise was at the session of the Sunday-school in the afternoon, when H. J. Martin paid a visit to the school and his class, after an absence by illness of over two months. A warm welcome was accorded both.

Printers' Products.

The printers on the Printers' Farm at Bound Brook have been fairly successful this season, considering everything; they have raised over 5,000 bushels of potatoes, besides many thousand ears of corn and other garden truck. The printers are selling much of their produce to the people of the borough.

Work on the Bridge.

Work is progressing favorably on the new bridge being erected by the Somerset County Board of Freeholders at the foot of Grove street on Greenbrook road.

A New Stone Culvert.

A stone culvert is being located at the corner of Duer street and Lincoln place by the borough officials, and when completed will be greatly appreciated by all.

WILL ENTERTAIN THEIR NEIGHBORS.

Hillside Club Planning for an Elaborate Event.

HONOR OF PARK GOLF CLUB.

ALL DAY PROGRAMME ARRANGED FOR SATURDAY, OCT. 14TH.

Ladies' Handicap Competition for Silver Cup in the Morning — Handicap for Men in the Afternoon — Also Approach and Putting Contest—Concert and Tea Will be Held at Clubhouse.

The Hillside Tennis and Golf Club is making elaborate arrangements to entertain the members of the Park Golf Club for an afternoon, and is planning various delightful things with which to entertain the fellow golfers from over the brook. The day set for the extending of the club's courtesies is Saturday, October 14th. The invitations for the affair have just been sent out.

An all-day programme has been arranged by the golf committee of the Hillside Club, which has the matter in charge. First there will be a ladies' handicap tournament for the lady members of both clubs in the morning. A handsome silver cup will be awarded to the winner. The handicaps of the two clubs will be so combined as to make the contest a fair one.

In the afternoon, beginning at 2:30 o'clock, a men's handicap competition, eighteen holes, medal play, will take place. It will be open to active and associate members of both clubs, and another combination of the handicaps of the two clubs will be arranged. Another silver cup goes to the winner.

At 4 o'clock an approach and putting contest for mixed couples from the two clubs will be held on the fourth hole which ends directly at the clubhouse. There is a low bunker just before reaching the green that necessitates a little loft to the approach. The ladies will approach and the gentlemen putt out. Prizes will be awarded in this contest as well.

The clubhouse will be opened to the guests and an orchestra will give a concert during the afternoon. Tea will be served by the ladies of the entertaining club. The day's affair will be made to make the event the most successful affair ever held in local golfing circles.

CONDUCTOR'S FORTUNE.

CHARLES DODWELL WILL COME INTO A WINDFALL.

An Uncle Dies in England and Leaves, it is Said, a Good Sized Lump of Money for the Genial Railroad Man.

The many friends of Conductor Charles Dodwell, of Dunellen, will be pleased to learn that he is soon to come into possession of a considerable sum of money by the death of a relative in England. The estate is being settled, and it is anticipated that before many months Conductor Dodwell will be placed in possession of this windfall. The amount of this fortune is variously estimated at from $15,000 to $25,000.

The relative in question is an uncle of Mr. Dodwell, who has but one relative besides himself. When asked about the report Conductor Dodwell admitted that there was some truth in the story, but said that he had not yet received the money. It is possible that when the good fortune arrives Mr. Dodwell will resign his position as a conductor.

While his genial face will be missed by the many commuters who have so long rode with him to and from New York, nevertheless all will be pleased to congratulate him on his good fortune.

In Dr. Schenck's Place.

Sunday morning Rev. Dr. Main, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, preached for Pastor Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church. His sermon was greatly enjoyed by a large congregation. In the evening Rev. E. O. Moffatt, pastor of the Reformed church at Pine Bush, N. Y., occupied the pulpit and delivered an excellent sermon on "Soul Saving."

For Violent Patients.

Dr. J. H. Cooley, of the borough, has had a set of plans drawn for a building to be added to "Boookside Retreat," which will be used solely for the more violent patients. The new addition will be provided with all the up-to-date conveniences and will be modern in every respect.

H. M. Clark, of Grandview avenue, has secured a lucrative position at New Orange with Mr. Arthur, the builder.

Arthur Serrell, of Washington Park, who has been ill with typhoid fever, has about recovered and is able to go out a little.

Mrs. M. J. Brandegee has returned from Point Pleasant, on the coast, where she spent the summer, and taken up her residence at No. 515 Park avenue.

A JUNCTION OF TWO BIG TROLLEY LINES

Plans of Riker-Hine Electric Railway Syndicate.

TAP NORTH JERSEY LINES.

CONNECTING LINE BETWEEN MILLBURN AND ELIZABETH.

Franchise From Springfield to Millburn Line Already Secured and Efforts Being Made to Get to Lackawanna Station in Millburn—To Boom a Piece of Land Near Scotch Plains.

Now that an agreement has been entered into by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company by which the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company, which is controlled by the Hine-Riker syndicate, may cross the tracks of the railroad at Aldene, the trolley company will increase the force of workmen now constructing the line. The trolley company has already secured a franchise to run its line through Springfield to the Millburn line, and is now securing the consents of property owners preparatory to making application to run the line to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad station in Millburn. The distance to the station from where the present franchises extend to is but about one-half of a mile.

It was stated by an official of the railway company today that, once its line is established in Millburn, it is hoped that a junction with the lines of the North Jersey Street Railway Company may be effected there. If this is accomplished, the Westfield and Elizabeth road will form a connecting line between the North Jersey's lines from Millburn to Elizabeth, where it will join the line on West Jersey street.

It is likely that, in connection with the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railway Company, a land company will be formed to build up the country through which the road runs. With this idea in view, Chandler W. Riker has already purchased a tract of about 100 acres lying between Westfield and Scotch Plains. This tract, it is said, is to be taken over and developed by the land company that is to be ormed.

VOORHEES MET DEWEY.

UNEXPECTED GREETING BETWEEN GOVERNOR AND ADMIRAL.

The Governor and a Party of Elizabethans Were in a Tug Cruising Around When They Were Invited on the Olympia.

Governor Voorhees and a company of well-known Elizabethans had an unexpected reception aboard the Olympia Thursday evening. They started out on the steam tug Erie, for a cruise in the harbor to see the illuminations.

While the Erie was cruising about the fleet off Tompkinsville, it was hailed by an officer on a launch from the Olympia, with the a salutation: "This is the Olympia's launch, who are you?"

"This is the Erie, and we have New Jersey's governor abroad!" was the reply.

The officer on the launch told the Erie to hold by a few moments and its passengers would be taken aboard the Olympia.

The Olympia's launch ran up along side of the Erie, and all were taken aboard the Olympia, where they were kindly received by Admiral Dewey. There was greetings exchanged between Governor Voorhees and the admiral. The members of the party were each introduced to the admiral, his son, Captain Lamberton and Lieutenant Brumby.

When they left the Olympia her guns gave to Governor Voorhees a parting salute of 17 guns.

A MINISTER'S EULOGY.

Rev. W. C. Snodgrass Spoke Highly of the Departed at Late M. D. Brown's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Moses D. Brown was held Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the house on Washington avenue and was largely attended by relatives and friends. Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, conducted the services and spoke beautifully concerning the departed.

Miss Emma Raybert, a near friend of the family, sang two beautiful solos, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" and "God Be With You Until We Meet Again."

The floral display was profuse and handsome, and surrounding the casket there was one large bank of the choicest flowers. There was a large pillow from the children and grandchildren bearing the inscription "At Rest." The Epworth League of the M. E. church sent a large bunch of white roses. Other floral gifts were received from relatives and friends.

The interment took place in the North Plainfield cemetery and those who acted as bearers were Charles Graves and Dr. Poock, of this city, and Firman Gise and George Giles, of Dunellen.

FINGERHUTHS TO BE TRIED IN OCTOBER.

Pleaded Not Guilty to Indictments of Grand Jury.

DEFENCE WILL BE READY.

THE WOMAN ACCUSED OF MURDER BY THE INQUEST.

Father and Son Involved in the Commission of the Crime as Accessories—Order Made Granting Defendants' Counsel Expenses Needed in the Case—Confinement Tells on Mrs. Fingerhuth.

Somerville, Sept. 29—Mrs. Henrietta Fingerhuth was indicted by the Grand Jury of Somerset county for the murder of Paul Roebrient, proprietor of Somerset Park, and her husband, Theodore Fingerhuth, and her son, Oscar Fingerhuth, were held as accessories to the crime. The Grand Jury announced the indictment yesterday afternoon and the prisoners were immediately arraigned and entered a plea of not guilty to the charges through their counsel. The trial was set down for October 23.

As was told in The Daily Press yesterday, the elder Fingerhuth was arrested Tuesday evening and brought to the county jail here and locked up. The Grand Jury, although there was a big batch of cases to be considered, brought in the indictment in the Roebricht murder case as soon as the testimony was heard.

The Grand Jury came into court in the afternoon and presented its decision. Mrs. Fingerhuth was indicted for murder and her husband and son named as accessories. The prisoners were arraigned at once before Justice Magie. They were nervous, but took the announcement without any manifestation of grief. Councilman Walter L. Redfield and Lawyer Wm. G. De-Meza, both of Plainfield, appeared as counsel for the accused.

The lawyers immediately entered a plea of not guilty in behalf of the three prisoners. They then made application to the court for a order to subpoena witnesses and for the expenses of the defense, stating that their clients were with out means to do so. The order was granted.

Justice Magie asked Lawyers Redfield and DeMeza if they would be ready to try the case at the next term of court. They declared that they would be. So the Judge set the trial down to begin October 23d.

The Fingerhuths were then taken back to their cells in the jail where they will remain until the time for the trial. The confinement has told slightly on the wife and son who do not look as healthy as when they were first locked up.

None of the Fingerhuths are able to speak English with any fluency. Mrs. Fingerhuth can carry on a simple conversation but her husband can understand but a few words in English. So Frank Linke, of Plainfield, was sworn as an interpeter in the case.

IN A BIG STORM.

Mrs. Arthur Lee on a Ship That Buffeted the Terrible Sea.

Mrs. Arthur Lee, daughter of Mrs. C. W. Runyon, of this city, who was a passenger on the steamer Caracas, of the Red "D" Line, recently when that ship encountered a terrible hurricane, writes to her friends in this city of her awful experiences when off the Florida coast. For thirty six hours the good ship was buffeted by the waves. During the storm the passengers, although battened down for these long thirty-six hours, preserved the best of order and aided the brave seamen in the efforts they made to save the ship. To show their appreciation of Captain Woodrick's efforts to save their lives, the passengers passed a set of resolutions and also subscribed to a purse of $271.50, which was presented to the crew of the good ship. Among the list of contributors is noticed the name of Mrs. Arthur Lee.

A TROPICAL CUBAN CAVE

A Queer Underground Cavity Which Is Warmer Than the Outside Temperature.

ONLY HALF A MILE LONG.

Formations of Stalactite and Stalagmite Very the Same as In Other Caves—Captain Killed.

The Cave Was Discovered By a Chinese In Searching For Some Stone For His House—It Is Now Owned By Some Enterprising American and Has Its Full Share of Visitors.

A correspondent writing from Havana says: "We who are here in Cuba for a short time feel that we will be well repaid if we go before returning to the States, and this all would scarcely be complete without including Montserrat and the cave at Bellamar, at Matanzas, a natural formation, which the Cubans consider one of the wonders of the island. To spend only one day there involves the loss of considerable sleep, for the ferry connecting with the train leaves Havana at 6 o'clock in the morning, and the train with which it connects leaves Regia at 6:20. It means pretty early rising if one lives in Havana, but when one lives in the suburbs, as most of us army people do, it means rising at 2 or half past.

On board we found a number of American officers on their way to Matanzas. Indeed, one might have almost thought one's self in the States, there were so many Americans on the train. As we neared Matanzas the country became much higher, and we had a near view of the mountains—the first land one sees on approaching Havana from the United States. They are very high and stand out in bold relief from the surrounding country. We passed a number of cemeteries, in each of which was a little chapel, and a corner of each cemetery was a bonepit, or, as the Cubans call it, an ossario. The village of considerable size was composed entirely of shacks of one story each, and of probably not more than seven rooms each. This village presented a very odd appearance.

In Havana one can usually find a cab without any trouble, and we expected that it would be the same in Matanzas, but it was not, and we had to walk several blocks before finding one. The driver agreed to take us to the cave and back for the sum of $3 American money. For the first part of the distance the road was excellent leading along by a broad drive, not unlike the famous Ocean Drive at Newport. Then it turns and goes up a hill, rather gradual in slope at first but becoming steeper and rougher and very rocky. When the summit was reached a beautiful view greeted us—across the harbor and out to the open sea beyond two points of land, which seem to almost form a gate.

The entrance to the cave is reached through a little house of one room perched on the summit of a hill. On the door of the house is a placard telling the rates of admission—for soldiers, 25 cents; for officers and all other persons, $1, all of which is in American money. This placard is printed in both Spanish and English. In the register we found the names of many Americans from all sections of the States. A small boy of eleven was detailed to act as guide for us and several others who were waiting. We came to the conclusion that if this child could pilot us the cave could not be as extensive as had been said, and so we found it; instead of being several miles in length it was not more than half a one.

We descended by stone from the office by means of several flights of wooden steps, guided by the boy, who carried two long candles of wax, which, he told us, had come from a distant plantation of finding cold air, as one does in Mammoth Cave, we found the temperature of the cave to be the same without. The formations are very much the same as in other caves. Names which imaginative minds have suggested, owing to various points, are the "Robe of Columbus," the "Twelve Apostles," the "Ballroom," the "Organ," and half a dozen other names equally as appropriate or otherwise. Our guide showed us the place where a Spanish Captain had met his death a few years ago by accident or otherwise we could not make out; at all events, he had gone over the cliff and his body had never been recovered.

We were allowed to carry away any specimen from the cave, and for that very reason all of us were anxious to do so; the little boy had no objections; indeed, helped us by showing us where we could find the prettiest ones.

The cave was discovered by a Chinese in searching for some stone for his house. Whether he owned the land or not I do not know, but for a long time he acted as guide. Later it was bought by an enterprising American, by whom it is still owned, if I mistake not. It takes only a short time to walk through it—half an hour being ample unless one wishes to linger along the way to study the formations. All of the rocks are not of pure white; in some places they are shell pink, in others a delicate shade of green. There are two springs, but the water from both are so warm that there is no pleasure in drinking it.

The height inside of the cave is so warm that when one gets back above ground once more it seems very much as though it were a change to a colder clime.

Several people were waiting in the office, and as we went down the hill we met others coming up, and there is little doubt that the cave has its full share of visitors. The trip to and from town, including the time spent in the cave, only took about two hours, leaving ample time to drive to Montserrat and yet catch the train back to Havana at 3:50.

VICIOUS COW GORED WOMAN FRIGHTFULLY.

Mrs. Welch's Terrible Experience Last Week.

SENT TO THE HOSPITAL.

HORN OF THE COW PIERCED THE WOMAN'S ABDOMEN.

With A Badly Lacerated Wound She Fell by the Wayside and Was Taken to the Muhlenburg Hospital—Attacking Animal Had Probably Been Teased by Boys—Happened on Plainfield Avenue.

A vicious cow attacked and frightfully gored Mrs. Michael Welch, of 622 West Third street, Wednesday a.m. on a pasture near Plainfield and Sherman avenues. She now lies in Muhlenburg Hospital in a precarious condition. Michael Welch is employed as a driver in the street department of the city. The Welchs keep a cow which Mrs. Welch has been accustomed to lead to pasture every morning. The cow is kept on a pasture near the old golf links on Plainfield avenue. She reached the field in safety yesterday morning and was tethering her charge when another cow pastured in the field started for her.

The cow was owned by Cormick Caufield, of West Third street, a neighbor of the Welchs. The cow had evidently been teased by some passing boy. The animal dashed at Mrs. Welch with head lowered and drove a horn through her clothing and into her abdomen. She tried to drive the animal back but it tossed its head, badly lacerating the wound. The cow kept rushing at her but she finally managed to escape into the road.

With the blood spurting from the terrible gash, she made her way in the direction of her home. She passed a man and asked him what to do. He told her to hurry to a doctor. At West Seventh street and Irving place she was overcome by weakness and fell to the sidewalk. One of Frank Linke's delivery wagons passed by and the driver knew her. He assisted her into the wagon and she was driven home.

As soon as the serious nature of her injuries was realized, the ambulance was summoned and she was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital early in the afternoon.

AN AUTUMNAL WEDDING.

POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE TAKE THEIR NUPTIAL VOWS.

Miss Katherine Marsh Ackerman and Walter Franklin Manning the Contracting Parties—Ceremony in Bride's Home.

The home of Cornelius J. Ackerman, of Clinton avenue, was the scene Sept. 27th of one of the pretiest weddings of the autumn season, when his daughter, Miss Katherine Marsh Ackerman, was united in marriage to Walter Franklin Manning of West Seventh street.

The ceremony took place at 7:30 o'clock in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends of the contracting parties. Rev. William C. O'Donnell, pastor of the Monroe Avenue church, performed the ceremony.

The marriage vows were taken in the parlor, which was beautifully decorated with the season's flowers.

The bride was gowned in white satin and wore a tulle veil and carried white roses. A beautiful sunburst of diamonds, a gift from the groom, was worn.

Miss Rosa Adams, of Pearl River, N. Y., was the maid of honor. She was gowned in white organdie over blue silk and carried pink roses. Miss Tiny Smith, of North Plainfield, presided at the piano and rendered perfectly the customary wedding march.

The groom was attended by Charles Randolph, of West Front street, as best man. After the ceremony the happy couple received the heart congratulations of all. Following congratulations a wedding supper was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Manning left their relatives and friends for a trip through the South. They will be absent two or three weeks, and upon their return will take up their residence in this city.

The couple are popular and both prominently identified with the Monroe Avenue church. They were handsomely remembered by receiving a very large collection of presents.

There were a great many guests present from out of town, also a large number of Plainfielders, most of whom are relatives of the bride and groom.

PORTO RICAN RESOURCES.

Frederick A. Ober, a Well-Known Author, Writes on This Subject.

WILL SUPPLY OUR WANTS

We Spend Annually $250,000,000 for Tropical Supplies Which Porto Rica and Cuba Can Furnish.

The Inhabitants Do Very Little Manufacturing Consequently Will Look to the United States Principally For Machinery, Flour and Cotton and Woolen Goods.

There have been several books recently published treating of the Island of Puerto Rico, telling about its people or describing its resources, either from the casual observer in the invading army of the United States or from the libraries and the archives of statistics. Both these sources are valuable when properly handled, and when their results are properly presented separately or in combination. Frederick A. Ober already known as an author of some good books on travel and adventure, and also as being something of a naturalist, visited Puerto Rico for the first time nearly twenty years ago, and later on as Watson B. Dickerman's commissioner for the Columbian Exposition. He has just written a book called "Puerto Rico and Its Resources," which seems to be the result of this visit, and is a very systematic study but of keen observation of the subject as well, a subject that when it appears in the book has been made very attractive. The scientist may have found in it at the beginning. Mr. Ober's book is published by D. Appleton & Co.

The author arouses interest in his reader's mind at once by his initial chapter, in which he tells of the commercial and strategic value that we will be to the United States. Take, for example, tropical products: Mr. Ober writes: "Although we have a restricted area capable of producing sugar cane, yet we expend abroad for sugar about $100,000,000 annually; we have no soil and climate favorable for coffee within the confines of the United States, yet we send to foreign parts another hundred million, and, whether it be right or wrong, the fact remains that we expend abroad annually at least $250,000,000 for purely tropical products which we cannot raise ourselves. Though we could 'at a pinch' find substitutes for coffee and spices in home products and obtain a limited amount of sugar from beets and sorghum, yet the annual outlay of $250,000,000 for these luxuries has gone on just the same."

Here, then, in this respect, is the value that Mr. Ober places on Puerto Rico: "In a word, the acquisition of these islands, it is believed, will enable us eventually to supply all our wants as to tropical products which we have hitherto lacked, and, what is more, while they produce the things we lack and need, the people of those islands are ready to exchange in return, and will look to us for all their machinery, their cotton, and woolen goods—in fact, for everything necessary to civilized communities. While England is talking about an 'open door' in the Orient for her commerce and the expansion of trade, we have, though almost fortuitously, opened a door (through the valor of our soldiers and seamen) which will ultimately lead to the commercial conquest of the entire people south of us, in the West Indies and South America, and the consequent enrichment of millions of our own."

In reverting to the features which make the island valuable in the author's eyes as a naval station, he writes: "Although most of the streams descending from the mountains go northwardly, yet a very few have open or navigable harbors at their mouths, and two of the best exports are on the southern shore. The latter, which boasts one important harbor, however, to which events of the war have called attention, is the famous Port of San Juan, the capital and only fortified city on the island. It is an inlet of the northern coast, about one-third the distance to the eastward from Cape San Juan, to the east, to Cape Ponta Aguda, in the extreme west. The width of the navigable channel, at its mouth is about 1,000 yards, and here the water is smooth vessels carrying five fathoms can cross the bar in safety, and as far as the city, where near the arsenal, but vessels with the average draught of battleships, or, say twenty-four feet, have to exercise great caution in entering, and at all times have to pass within biscuit throw of the powerful batteries and fortifications on the eastern side. When a storm is raging in a northerly quarter only navigate at the extreme risk of losing his vessel. Inside, though exposed to the northern, is a deep and beautiful harbor, which can doubtless be improved by dredging and the building of breakwaters, so as to be safe even in the hurricane season."

PROBABLE SLATE FOR COUNTY G. O. P.

Outlined by One Who Claims to Know About It.

PLAINFIELDERS NOT IN IT.

BOB HOUSTON SLATED FOR PLACE AS SHERIFF.

Howard Named for the County Clerkship, and, of Course, Cross Will Run for Senator—Assemblymen Will Come From Elizabeth, Summit and Cranford—Some Other Gossip on the Situation.

"Don't think," remarked a well-known supporter of the G. O. P. in Plainfield recently, "that because you haven't heard much about Plainfield is going to get out of the coming county convention that this city is not going to be represented on the county Republican ticket this fall. The leaders are saying nothing now for they don't believe that the time has come. Just wait."

It is a fact that none of the booms for the various Plainfielders that have been sprung this early in the campaign have borne the stamp of approval of the party leaders in the city. Not that the leaders have opposed them but there has been a general silence on the part of the machine. Some have said that this silence indicated that Plainfield would not make any strong fight for a place on the county ticket. But it doesn't sound like a Plainfield delegation attending a county convention without a single candidate of its own and the knowing ones say that this year will be no exception to the rule. If there is a "dark horse" hidden away in the ranks, many are wondering who it can be.

A strong canvass is being made for George Ball for one of the Assembly nominations. The friends of that young lawyer are doing their best to win him the place. It is extremely doubtful, however, that he will ever receive the nomination. While he has been a good Republican in his former home in Fanwood and here, he has done nothing particular to entitle him to the honor that many far more active party men covet. Consequently, he is not likely to have the united support of the Plainfield delegation and, without that, he can hardly hope to win.

From an Elizabeth source, supposed to be inspired by the leaders in the county seat, comes the following slate as the probable choice of the county convention.

For Senator—Joseph Cross, of Elizabeth.

For County Clerk—William Howard, of Rahway.

For Sheriff—Robert Houston, of Elizabethport.

For Assemblymen—Addison Swift of Elizabeth; Corra Williams, of Summit; F. E. Furgeson, of Cranford.

Plainfield has evidently been counted out but it remains to be seen just how far this forecast is going to be carried out.

"The Curse of New Jersey."

Tuesday, before Bailies Lawson and Barrie, Hugh Henderson, a laborer on tramp, was charged with being drunk and kicking the door of a police cell and wilfully and maliciously destroying a drinking tin. Accused—I wish to throw myself on the mercy of the Court. Constable Scott stated that after the accused was brought into the office he commenced to be very outrageous, his boots having to be taken off after he was put into the cell. Accused said that in the swamps of New Jersey he had acquired what was known as the curse of New Jersey—a chill and fever. His was the first case known in the United States. Sentence, 12s. 6d. or seven days.—Hawick Express, Scotland.

Almost Fell in the Water.

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, of Elmwood place, went to New York Friday to witness the naval parade, and while Mrs. Dobbins was getting on a boat from which she expected to view the festivities, she tripped on a large rope on the boat and very narrowly escaped falling into the water. Mr. Carr, of this city, a member of the party, was standing close by and caught Mrs. Dobbins just in time to save her from what might have been a serious accident.

COPPER MINES MAY BE WORKED AGAIN.

Rise In Price Of Copper Makes It Possible.

MINES OVER A CENTURY OLD

MINING GRANT INCLUDED FIRST RANGE OF WATCHUNG AVENUE.

Was Given By English Crown to Capitalists Before Revolutionary War—Crude Methods Made Mines Unprofitable—Gallows Extend Into Mountain for Hundreds of Feet — Capitalist's Consider-

The wave of prosperity that is now sweeping over the country has promise in it of renewing activity in a nearby industry that has been abandoned for over a century. Already work has been resumed at the old Schuyler copper mines near North Arlington. And the advisability of reopening the copper mines in the first ridge of the Watchung Mountains is now being considered. The seams between the layers of trap rock that form this range of mountains are known to be rich in copper ore. Back before the Revolutionary War the mines were started, but the crude methods of extracting the metal from the hard rock made them unprofitable. Now the advance in the price of copper, due to the formation of the Copper Trust and the increase in the price of iron and steel, together with the modern methods of ore refining, have caused certain capitalists to believe that the Watchung range offers a good field for a profitable investment.

Long before there was anything but a few scattered houses in this part of Jersey a large grant was made by the English Crown to certain English capitalists to work the copper mines in this vicinity. Adventurous settlers had found traces of rich copper ore along the first ridge of the Watchung Mountains. The grant entitled the holders to all the mining privileges in this section and the right to use as much of the timber as was necessary to get their ore out of the ground and to a point of shipment.

Work was started at what is now known as Chimney Rock Notch, the Somerset Street Gap and the Boonton Plains Notch. Tunnels were run into the mountains for several hundred feet. The work was continued at intervals through the colonial period, but the crude methods of those days made the refining of the ore too expensive to make the mines of any value.

Since then these mines have been abandoned. At intervals people have examined them with a view of making another attempt to market the copper, but nothing ever came of it. The tunnels in the mountains at the various places are still in existance, although many of them have been covered up and filled in. Within only a few years a Plainfielder picked up a specimen of malachite in one of the excavations. A chemist said, after analyzing it, that it was forty per cent. copper.

The chief difficulty has been that it has been too expensive work to separate the copper from the ore by hand trap rock. If some of the modern methods can accomplish this and still keep the copper with the commercial prices, then Plainfield is likely to see active copper mines in this part of Jersey once more.

FINE GOLF PLAYING BY SENATOR REED

Made Low Score Saturday at Park Club Links.

MANY WERE OUT SATURDAY.

EIGHT SCORES FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP TURNED IN.

Anderson Tied for Third Place With George C. Worth—W. R. Faber Was Second—Fred P. Taylor Was Present But Did Not Hand in Score—No Contestants Out for the Butfield Cup—The Scores.

Even with Admiral Dewey twenty-four miles away and the greatest of all military pageants in progress, the McCutchen Cup managed to bring out a good field of competitors on the links of the Park Golf Club Saturday afternoon. A dozen competed for the trophy and eight score cards were handed in. Senator Charles A. Reed stayed at home to devote the day to golf and carried off first honors easily. W. de la R. Anderson, the club champion, was on hand and managed to score for the first time for several weeks even if it was only half a point, trying for third place with George C. Worth.

There was a goo l attendance on the course during the morning but a better one in the afternoon. Green Keeper Barde is completed the cutting of the fair greens over the entire course. As the grass will grow very little more, another cutting is not likely to be necessary. Then the new putting green for the first hole, which is a great improvement over the old, was used for the first time. The sod has hardly had a chance to settle yet but it was smoother than the old one.

Gifford W. Cooley, who stands third for the cup, made the rounds during the morning with J. P. Murray. It was the first time for a month that Cooley has handed in his score. He has been out occasionally but has taken little part in the contest. He believes that he has gotten away from his hoodoo at last and will soon be able to play his old game once more. His gross score was 115, where he used to make close to the even 100.

Of late, Anderson has been off his usual form. He also made the rounds for the trophy during the morning in company with W. J. R. Thiers. His score was 99. Thiers did not turn in his score.

In the afternoon, the low score for the day was made by Senator Reed. He completed the eighteen holes in 120, which with a handicap of 30, gave him a net score of 90. That will undoubtedly end the Senator, for the greens committee will be after his handicap and cut a generous slice off it as is their custom when any of the limit men begin to make definite improvement. The Senator played in company with Samuel Townsend.

Anderson went around in the afternoon with W. R. Faber and the latter succeeded in doing just one better than Anderson's net score, which gave Faber second. George C. Worth came in for half a point by tieing Anderson for third with 99 net.

Fred P. Taylor was on hand again and the comparison between Taylor and Anderson was watched with interest. He played with Wm. M. McCutchen. Taylor was not at his best and neither made any record of the scores.

The play of Saturday resulted in something of a shakeup among the bunch who are close behind the first three. Anderson was the only one of the leading three to score and he simply added half a point. Senator Reed took a big jump from ninth to fourth, where he is now tied with Charles E. Faber with seven points. Worth left George T Rogers and G W Faber behind and remains fifth, while the others have been forced back to sixth by the advancement of Senator Reed. W. R Fauer came up from the end of the column to fourteenth place.

The scores handed in during the day were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Charles A. Reed	120	30	90
W. R. Faber	124	25	99
W. de la R. Anderson	99	0	99
George C. Worth	119	20	99
Charl s E. Faber	129	24	105
G. F. Cooley	115	9	106
George T. Rogers	127	21	106
Samuel Town send	136	24	112
J. P. Murray	140	24	116

There is still a month left in which the McCutchen Cup will be played for every Saturday and yet no one has a sufficient lead to be anything like sure of winning. Senator Reed Councilman Rogers and George C. Worth are all possibilities and have been scoring frequently of late. If, however, Anderson gets back in his old form which keeps his score below 95, his chances for the cup are by far the best. At present, he leads by two and a half points. Meredith Dryden, second in line, is to be married this week and the wedding tour will keep him away from the links for a time.

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

W. de la R. Anderson	32
Meredith Dryden	30½
Gifford W. Cooley	30
Charles E. Faber	28
Charles A. Reed	27
George C. Worth	26½
W. R. Faber	26

AN IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL

OBSEQUIES HELD OVER REMAINS OF LATE CHARLES SCHIPPER.

A Wealth of Beautiful Floral Tributes—Many Business Associates of the Dead Man Attended the Services.

The funeral services of the late Charles W. Schipper were held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the house, 701 West Seventh street, where a very large number of people assembled to pay their last respects to one whom they had known to admire and love for his many excellent qualities.

The remains rested on a handsome bier which was completely covered and surrounded with beautiful flowers, consisting of large wreaths and bunches of the choicest roses. They were tributes from friends, neighbors and business associates and represented the highest esteem of the givers for the departed.

Rev. Jacob Loch, pastor of the Lutheran church, Brooklyn, had charge of the services. He delivered an eloquent and deeply impressive eulogy over the departed. He first spoke in German, and then made a few remarks in English. He dwelt upon the fact that though the nineteenth century was one of enlightenment everyone is as much mystified concerning death as the people of one hundred years ago. He pointed all to Christ who is able to take away the fear of death. He believed that the departed held in his hand the palm of victory and had won a victory of peace. He referred tenderly to the bereaved ones and invoked the divine blessing on them. In concluding his remarks he offered an impressive prayer.

Following the above speaker, Rev. Dr. Bodman, pastor of Grace P. E. church, offered prayer and pronounced the benediction. During the services a male quartette from the Liederkranz Society, of New York, of which Mr. Schipper was one of the founders, sang two beautiful selections in the German. This part was one of the most impressive of all.

An opportunity was given those present to view the remains, after which they were interred in Hillside Cemetery. The pallbearers, old friends, schoolmates and business associates of the departed, included Messrs. Rasmus, Gudewill and Lee, of New York; Col. Mason W. Tyler, Ernest R. Ackerman, W. I. Rushmore and Emil Woltman, of this city; Mr. Grass, of Brooklyn; P. Smith, Mr. Schipper's partner, of New York, and Capt. Pohle, of the Steamship Lahn, upon which Mr. Schipper returned to this country last week.

Included among the mourners were a large number of New York business men who had known Mr. Schipper for many years.

Mr. Schipper, who was a member of the board of governors of Muniecberg Hospital, gave very largely of his means to that institution, and his fellow members of the board attended the funeral in a body, occupying the front parlor.

BROKE HIS LEG.

George Serrell, of This City, Badly Hurt on a Transport at Havana.

George Serrell, of this city, an officer on the Transport Burnside, now lies in Hospital No. 1, at Havana, suffering with two fractures of the leg, one at the knee and the other at the ankle. The accident happened some time ago, but definite information concerning the accident has been hard to secure.

It seems that Mr. Serrell was assisting in the unloading of some cargo at Havana, when a boon that became loose, swung around and struck him from the rear. He was thrown from the transport to another boat and in falling his leg was broken in two places.

A few days ago a letter was received from the surgeon in charge, and he said that Mr. Serrell is doing fairly well, but recovery will be slow.

RALLY DAY FOR METHODISTS

Special Services for Sunday-School in Vincent Chapel Sunday Afternoon.

The Sunday-school of the First M. E. church held a Rally Day service in Vincent chapel yesterday afternoon. The chapel was prettily decorated with golden rod and other autumn flowers and leaves. There was a large attendance. Superintendent J. W. Jackson presided. There was special singing by the school and a cornet solo by Robert W. Davis. The feature of the service was a roll call of classes, each class responding with a scriptural quotation.

The committee in charge consisted of Harry Gee, chairman, G. M. Rittenhouse, O. E. Blanding, R. W. Davis, Mrs. J. Hervey Doane, Miss Eva Jenkins, Miss Margaret Cory, Miss Elsie Hornem, Miss Persis Snodgrass and N. A. Miller, musical director. Mrs. J. Hervey Doane was chairman of the sub-committee on decorations.

THE HOBO ON THE PILOT

Things Came His Way and He Took Advantage of Them.

"It was way back in the seventies," said an old engineer. "I was pulling the limited east from Council Bluffs to Chicago over the Rock Island. The night was bitterly cold. We had gone about twenty miles out and had stopped at a night office for orders and had started up again, when the fireman reached over and said: 'There is a hobo on the pilot; you think you can get on at the depot.' 'Sure?' I said. 'Go out on the running board and see if he's there yet.' The fireman did as he was ordered to do and returned with the information that the hobo was still there.

"'Well,' said I, 'it's a bitter cold night, and if he can stand it out there I'm willing he should ride with me.' And on we went toward Chicago, with old '211' barking like sixty at the low grade ahead and forgetful of our 'head-end' passenger on the pilot.

"By and by, by the faint glimmering of the headlight, I thought I saw ahead what looked to be a bunch of cattle on the track. As we approached it the bunch seemed to grow larger, it was now too late to do anything, so I just pulled the whistle open and old 211 hit that bunch of cattle 'ka-bif.' To paraphrase the language of Tennyson, who glides into raptures of admiration over the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, there was just simply cattle to the right of us cattle to the left of us, cattle to the rear of us, but I just plowed the wide

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXXII. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1899. NO. 4

"Support the Constitution, Which is the Cement of the Union, as Well in Its Limitations as in Its Authorities."—Madison.

PROBABLE CHOICE OF G. O. P. CONVENTION

The Present Situation in Union County Summed Up.

POLITICAL AIR IS CLEARING.

PLAINFIELD WILL PROBABLY GET ONE ASSEMBLYMAN.

It Will Be Cross for Senator, Howard for Clerk and Houston for Sheriff—Wm. Newcorn Prominently Mentioned for Assembly—A Rumor of Another Chance on the Ticket for Plainfield.

The atmosphere in the G. O. P. camp of Union county is growing clearer and it is possible to see with a fair amount of certainty what the rival booms are doing. The past week has done much to clear up the doubtful questions regarding the probable nominees at the coming county convention. The "dark horse" is always a possibility to upset well-laid plans, but if there is any in this race he has not given any indication of his appearance as yet.

While the chances of some of the would-be candidates have greatly diminished, they are still out for the nomination. Elizabeth is the seat of war at present. There are too many candidates from the county seat to ensure unity there. It is predicted by some that the Elizabeth delegation will be divided against itself at the county convention. Such a thing is possible, but the Union county Republicans have a habit of settling the controversy before the convention is called to order.

A forecast of the probable ticket, as suggested by one "on the inside" was published in The Press over a week ago. It was Cross for Senator, Houston for Sheriff and Howard for Clerk. Today that combination is stronger than ever, and has every indication of being the winning one at the county convention. Those who were at the meeting of the county committee last week found that Elizabeth considered these the probable nominees.

George Squier is not going to be County Clerk this fall. He will not get the nomination of the Republican party. So say those who have watched the situation carefully. The fact is that Squier will be lucky if he gets nominated to the Assembly. Not that there is any great likelihood of his losing the Assembly nomination, but then George Squier is not as popular in the party as he was once. Although Squier is still after the county clerkship, there is no doubt but that he realizes now that it is not for him. Elizabethans say that if he would be lucky if he carried his own ward.

Halsey has more strength in Elizabeth than Squier at the present day, and may make a good fight against Howard if he isn't squelched in the meantime. Howard, however, will get support from outside the county seat that will undoubtedly nominate him.

The principal objection to Howard is that he has held the office for two terms of five years each already, and many believe that there are other men in the party who should have some share of this very good thing that Howard wants for five years more.

At one time it looked as if "Bob" Houston's chances for the Shrievalty were very slim indeed, but his boom has since expanded until there is very little doubt, but that he will get the nomination. Houston has had the support of his friends of the "Port" through the six years that he has wanted the office of Sheriff. Early in the fall Former Mayor Rankin, of Elizabeth, had practically come out against him. John E. Barr, one of Rankin's ablest lieutenants and leader of the "Port" delegation, would not follow Rankin's lead and stuck by his old friend. Rankin has since seen the wisdom of Barr's actions and has now come out openly for Houston.

Houston will receive Plainfield's support for the nomination despite the fact that an attempt was made to boom Frank Coriell, of this city, for the place. Coriell's boom will cut no figure in the convention. Mr. Coriell has made no effort to further it and will not.

Plainfield is going to have something on the county ticket if it is only an Assemblyman. There is a rumor, which has not yet been affirmed or denied, that Senator Cross is not anxious after all to be renominated to the Upper House and that great pressure will be brought to bear on Ernest R. Ackerman at the last to take the nomination. In that case, it is doubtful whether Plainfield would get an Assemblyman.

JAM OF BARGAIN SEEKING WOMEN.

Over a Thousand Go To Newark On Free Excursion.

EXCITING SCENE AT DEPOT.

TICKET AGENT NELSON COMPLETELY SWAMPED WITH PATRONS.

Hundreds Unable to Buy The Excursion Tickets at the Depot, and Many Returned Disgusted—Three Sections of the Train Run—Ninety-five Per Cent of the Passengers Were Women.

The second free excursion, run yesterday under the auspices of the merchants of Newark, was a success, receded from a numerical standpoint.

From a few moments after 8 o'clock Ticket Agent Nelson at the North avenue station, confronted an excited, struggling mass of humanity, 95 per cent of whom were women, who pushed, crowed and jostled each other in a frantic efforts to buy tickets. The women's waiting room was jammed full and overflowed into the men's department.

The crush about the ticket windows was something appalling. None but a woman, eager for bargains, would have had the courage to get into that jam. Ticket Agent Nelson was not given any assistance and he was unable to sell tickets fast enough to supply the demands made upon him.

Women with money between their fingers pushed their way towards the ticket windows only to be shoved back by those in front. The scramble reminded the writer not a little of scenes to be witnessed in a betting ring at a race track when the "talent" is trying to get on to a good thing.

Figuratively speaking, the struggle was a howling bedlam. The babble of voices and exciting shrill calls of the woman, who would occasionally become separated from their friends, was as exciting as it was amusing to the onlookers.

To add to the confusion the committee in charge of the trains did not put in an appearance until nearly 9 o'clock, and those who had tickets were compelled to wait on the station platform, not being allowed to enter the coaches in waiting for them at the west end of the depot.

It was not until the committee, consisting of Messrs. Lindeman, Rosenbaum, Voget and Corbett, put in an appearance and announced that tickets could be secured on the train from the committee, was the crush about the ticket windows relieved.

Then there was a break for the train in the struggle to secure seats. Many women suffered from having their skirts disarranged and their tempers badly ruffled. But with all the jam not an accident occurred and no one's clothing was seriously damaged.

When the train was being loaded a number of merchants stood about with drawn faces, at the thought that $1,500 at least was being taken out of the city.

In the first section of the excursion there were thirteen cars filled to their limit. Two other sections were also run, one coming from Somerville and another sent out from Dunellen.

It is estimated that 2,500 people were carried into Newark today at the expense of the merchants of that city.

Ticket Agent Nelson sold 850 tickets at this station; 500 were sold at Somerville; about 200 at Bound Brook; 125 at Dunellen; 150 at Cranford and and 75 or 80 at Westfield.

Owing to the crush about the ticket office at the North Avenue station many women, afraid to stay in the crowd, gave up the trip to Newark and returned to their homes.

Taken altogether the excursion was a splendid success, and will no doubt prove a good advertisement for the Newark merchants if not a direct financial gain.

NO CADET COMPANY IN HIGH SCHOOL.

Board Decided To Change The Old Methods.

BOYS WERE NOT SATISFIED.

ONLY A FOURTH OF THEM WERE WILLING TO TRY THEM.

So The Board Has Given Up All Idea Of Having A Cadet Corps In The High School — Old Members Will Organize An Independent Organization Soon To Join Militia As Cadet Corps.

The Plainfield High School cadets will not reorganize this fall. It was the plan of the Board of Education to make a radical change in the corps this year but the change did not seem to find general favor with the boys of the High School and now the lack of a proper place in which to drill has practically killed the project.

Ever since the cadet corps was organized in 1894, it has been drilled by Captain George F. Edwards. In 1896, the cadets were uniformed and guns were obtained from the state. While the company was in a measure connected with the school, drill was held outside of school hours and there was really no relation between corps and school except that its membership was limited to pupils in the school.

This year it was decided by the Board of Education that the company should be more closely united to the school and that drill should be held during school hours. It was also thought best that A. B. Meredith, science instructor, should act as drill master. Mr. Meredith had considerable experience in that line while in Massachusetts.

The boys of the High School were asked their opinion on the move and only a quarter of the number agreed to join the new company. The number was too small for effective work and the idea was abandoned. Then the Board could not secure the Crescent Rink at terms that the Board believed satisfactory so there was no place to drill in winter.

A meeting of a number of the old member of the old members of the High School cadets will be held some evening this week when a movement will be started looking toward the organization of a new cadet company entirely independent of the High School. It will be commanded by Captain Edwards and will probably be attached to the some regiment of the New Jersey National Guard as its cadet corps. Already some thirty boys have expressed their desire to join such an organization and the number will undoubtedly be increased. Many of the would-be members are High School boys. It is intended to take in members from Westfield Scotch Plains and Dunellen.

RESIGNED TO GAIN A VOTE.

Charles B. Stephens Becomes Post Commander to Give Winfield Scott Post More Influence.

At the meeting of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., last Tuesday Commander Charles B. Stephens resigned his office. The vacancy will be filled at the next regular meeting of the post when nomination and election will take place. The reason why Mr. Stephens resigned is that by so doing the post will secure an additional vote in the department encampment owning to the fact that he is a past post commander, and the post do not feel like losing his vote which will be needed. At the election to be held a member who is not a past officer will be selected and thus all the necessary votes will be available.

ECHOES OF CONVENTION.

INTERESTING AND PROFITABLE RALLY FOR ENDE-VORERS.

Delegates Reflect the Proceedings of the Convention in Reports Describing the Work of the Young Christians.

There was a good attendance at the Congregational church last Tuesday on the occasion of the rally of the various societies of the local union of the Young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor. The exercises were unusually interesting. All the front of the church were draped festoons of yellow and black, representing the colors of the State organization, and festoons of green and white, denoting the colors of the local union, while flowers and potted plants lent an inviting appearance to the sacred edifice.

Miss Florence G. Hawkins, president of the local union, presided. Seated upon the platform with her were Miss M. Morse, who was a delegate to the recent State convention held at Camden, and Rev. W. S. Lumbar, of Moorestown, N. J., vice-president of the State union.

Miss Morse followed gave a carefully prepared skeleton report called "Echoes from the Convention." It was replete with interesting remiaiscences and highly entertaining. "Quiet Hours" was the subject of Miss Elizabeth Van Winkle, who was a delegate to the convention from the Park Avenue Baptist church. Miss Bessie Fitz Randolph, a delegate to the convention from the Seventh day Baptist church, then entertained the Endeavorers with a brief account of the "Closing Session" in which she related many interesting events not previously known.

Miss Hawkins followed with a lengthy recapitulation called "convention suggests" which contained several suggestions with regard to the Christian Endeavor work. Miss Hawkins' paper proved to be very interesting and contained much food for reflection.

Miss Hawkins then introduced Rev. Mr. Lumbar, who delivered an eloquent and scholarly address, filled with earnest words and happy suggestions on the important work that is necessary to be accomplished to further the welfare of the Christian Endeavor Societies throughout the land.

Before the audience dispursed for their homes, an informal social reception was held.

Sunday-school Workers to Meet.

Next week Tuesday the East New Jersey Baptist Sunday-school convention will be held in the Park Avenue Baptist church with sessions morning, afternoon and evening. Some of the best workers in the denomination will be present and take part.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement is announced of Miss Katherine Shafer, of Brooklyn, to Lambert H. Fish, of Grant avenue. Miss Shafer is well known in Plainfield where she has often visited.

Called as a Witness.

Constable William N. Pangborn, of the borough, was called to Elizabeth yesterday as a witness in the ejectment suit of Victor D. Schomp against John Maire.

ENCOUNTER A WHEEL WITH HIGHWAYMAN.

Horace Hand Fired Two Shots From Revolver at Them.

COMING FROM THE 'PLAINS.

DESPERADOES' FACES CONCEALED BY WEARING MASKS.

Hand Knocked From His Wheel, but Had Anticipated Trouble and Had His Revolver Ready for Use—Held Assailants at Bay and Beat a Hasty Retreat Towards His Home in This City.

Horace G. Hand, of 711 East Sixth street, had an encounter with two highwaymen while riding his bicycle from Scotch Plains to this city at 11 Tuesday p. m. that was decidedly thrilling. As Hand approached the slight incline in the road a short distance east of Raymond avenue, at the outskirts of the city, he noticed two men standing in the middle of the road. He immediately scented trouble and drew a 32 calibre revolver from his hip pocket, which he always carries when on a lonely ride like that from Scotch Plains to Plainfield.

He carried the revolver in one of his hands as he guided the wheel with the other, but when he drew nearer to the men he noticed two bicycles lying at the side of the road. This eased his mind as he thought that the strangers were bicyclists who had met and stopped for a short talk. He was but a few feet away when the men separated, each stepping to the side as if to allow him to pass. Just then one of them exclaimed:

"Hey there, young fellow, hold up."

Hand became thoroughly frightened at this salutation and started a faster, and as he reached the spot where the men stood he saw that their faces were concealed with masks and that one of them carried a club. The one without the club jumped forward and dealt him a blow on the side of the body, making him lose his balance and fall into the roadway with severe force. In the tumble Hand clung to his revolver and as he rolled over he saw the man with the club coming towards him. Quickly pointing his revolver at the highwayman Hand fired twice. The stranger emitted a cry of pain and staggered back. The other desperado jumped forward to prevent his pal from falling, and by this time Hand regained his feet. He walked backwards for a few feet still pointing his revolver at the men, and then turned suddenly and ran towards the centre of the city at fast as he could.

When he reached home he told his father, Hezekiah Hand, and the two hurried back to the scene of the encounter. There they found Hand's bicycle lying at the side of the road where it had fallen, but no trace of the highwaymen or the wheels that the former had seen just before the assault. They waited around for a few minutes but got no trace of the assailants. The roadway showed where young Hand had fallen, but in the darkness it was impossible to tell whether or not the man who was shot lost any blood. Young Hand is positive, however, that the bullets from his revolver took effect.

As a result of his fall, Hand's left arm was badly sprained and bruised.

TEACHERS TO BE TAUGHT.

Annual Institute to be Held in the Seventh-Day Baptist Church.

The annual institute of the Primary Sunday-school Teachers' Union will be held in the Sabbath-school room of the Seventh-Day Baptist church Monday. Miss Annie T. Harlow, of the John Wanamaker Sunday-school, Philadelphia, will speak at both afternoon and evening sessions.

At the annual business meeting of the union the same officers were re-elected and are as follows:

President, Miss Nettie J. Beeching; first vice-president, Mrs. John A. Dye; second vice-president, Mrs. Frank D. Baker; third vice-president, Mrs. John P. Mosher; secretary and treasurer, Miss Ida L. Spicer; librarian, Miss Lizzie Bowley.

Wholesome Fun

In speaking of Royal S. Goldsbury, the impersonator, the Pittsburg Post says: "His fun was of the sort calculated to make an audience leave pleased with themselves and the world in general." Mr. Goldsbury will appear at the Y. M. C. A. Hall this evening for the benefit of the Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church. There will also be an exhibition of the "Angelus," the piano player. Admission tickets cost 25 cents and the entertainment is well worth the price.

WILLIAM T. FRENCH SHOT BY ROBBERS

Highwaymen Realized That They Were Being Worsted.

BULLET FOUND BY X-RAY.

HOLD-UP OCCURRED IN WESTERN END OF CITY.

Their Conduct Resembled That of the Men Who Attacked Houses Hand on East Front Street an Hour Before—Made Good Their Escape—French Now in the Muhlenburg Hospital.

William T. French, Jr., age 20 years, a machinist, residing at 408 West Third street, had a lively experience at 12 p. m. Tuesday, while walking along West Front street, on his way home from Dunellen. He was in company with William Tabb, of Dunellen.

Suddenly two men jumped out from behind some bushes and held the men up. A fierce struggle followed. The highwaymen seeing that they were getting the worst of the fight tried to get away. Before they disappeared one of them pulled a revolver and shot French in the arm above the wrist.

The strangers then jumped on their wheels, which were close by, and rode off. Neither one could be identified on account of the thick fog.

French and Tabb went to Dunellen and took Dr. Whitford, who made the injured man as comfortable as possible. This morning French went to the hospital for treatment. Those in charge were unable to locate the bullet until the X-ray machine was used. It was then discovered that the ball had entered the arm above the wrist and had taken a course toward the hand, where it was found imbedded in the upper part near the thumb.

The bullet was removed, and French is doing as well as can be expected. He will be detained at the hospital for sometime.

The warrants were issued by Justice Moffett, before whom Vail was arraigned late in the afternoon. He gave bail in the sum of $200 for his appearance before the justice Thursday afnoon at 4 o'clock.

Abram Vail, the accused's father, went on his bond. The warrant for Vail was issued several days ago, but the authorities were unable to find him. THE PARADE WILL MARCH OVER 51-4 MILES OF STREETS.

Official Dignitaries Will Head the Line—Many Visiting Volunteer Companies Will Be Present, as Well as the Apparatus That They Own—Slight Change is Made in Line of March.

Every detail is now practically arranged for the firemen's parade that will be held in the borough today if the weather is at all favorable. The committee, consisting of Lambert B. Bodine, chairman; J. D. Anderson, secretary; F. A. Long, treasurer; James Daly and George Schlereth, has worked hard for the success of the affair and have done well. They have provided a line of march 5¼ miles in length and covering all the principal points. The line published in this paper a few days ago is correct with one exception, and that is the parade will not pass the cemetery on Chatham street, but will take in Fairview avenue.

The parade will form at 2 o'clock and when the borough fire alarm bell strikes four, which will be at 2:30 o'clock, the parade will start. It is fully expected that there will be one thousand men in line, including six bands and three drum corps. The parade will be as follows, as near as it is possible to determine:

First there will be a line of borough police, and then will follow the prominent invited guests which will include Senator Chas. A. Reed, all of the prominent officials of Somerset county, the Mayors of the borough and city, together with officials from this city, the Mayors of Bayonne, Princeton, New Brunswick, and possibly some other nearby cities. The chief and his legislaries will come the Exempt Firemen Association, of this city, one hundred strong, with their silver hose carriage and Barton's band of twenty pieces. Then will come Mercer Engine Company, No. 3, of Princeton, sixty strong, with apparatus, and Liberty Band, of that place. The next in line will be Lincoln Hose Company, of Perth Amboy, with one hundred men, hose wagon and a fife and drum corps. Following will be Phoenix Engine Company, No. 3, of New Brunswick, with ninety-five men, and Goodwill band. This company will give exhibition drills along the line of march, and afterward they will drill on Watchung avenue, open competition. Empire Chemical Engine Company, No. 2, of Westfield, with thirty men will come next in line. That comprises the first division.

The second division will be led by Relief Hose Company, No. 2, of Raritan, sixty men and Crescent Band. They will have their elegant parade hose carriage. The next in line will be Hope Hose Company, of Bayonne, sixty men, with hose wagon and a band. They will be followed by Bound Brook Hose Company with sixty men and a drum corps. The last of the visiting companies will be Franklin Hose Company, of Rahway, with new hose wagon and team. Then will follow West End Hose Company, with the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, and Warren Engine Company, with all apparatus, and Queen City Band, of this city, forty-two men in all.

The chiefs of all the departments represented will be present, also the chief of the Boonton Fire Department. Headquarters will be established at Spencer's Hall on Somerset street. Arrangements have been make to take care of all the apparatus and horses. The apparatus of the Princeton department will arrive today and be stalled at Crescent Hotel. Bayonne's will arrive tomorrow morning, and the others will come between that time and 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, and all the apparatus will be taken care of on Somerset street, between Dreyer's Hotel and Manhattan Hotel. The Dunellen and Scotch Plains fire department will also be represented. A committee for receiving the guests will be on hand and see that everyone is provided for.

Warren Engine Company will provide for five hundred guests at Saengerbund Hall, and William Stephenson will serve the dinner. The West End Hose Company will take care of the rest at the Arlington Hotel.

Below is the line of march which is correct with the exceptiontion mentioned and that is that Fairview avenue will be included, and that part of Cleatham street in front of the cemetery left out. In doing this a turn

NOTABLE AUTUMNAL CHURCH WEDDING.

Dryden-Green Nuptials Celebrated Oct. 4th.

FINE CHURCH DECORATIONS

CEREMONY PERFORMED IN GRACE P. E. CHURCH

Rev. E. M. Rodman Tied the Nuptial Knot—Wedding Party Presented a Brilliant Scene—Full Choral Service at the Church—Reception Followed Ceremony at Home of Bride's Parents.

One of the notable weddings of the autumnal season was that of October 4th, when Miss Ethel Carey Green, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick B. Green, of 78 Mercer avenue, became the wife of Meredith Dryden, of Watchung avenue. The wedding took place at Grace P. E. church. It was a full choral service, the choir of the church taking part under the direction of Mrs. William A. Freeman, the organist.

The handsome edifice was resplendent in all its beauty, while the presence of such a large assemblage of Plainfield's society, as well as many persons of note from points distant, combined to make the scene a notable one. It was a pink and white wedding, the feature of the decorations being the use of water myrtle, prevalent in Maryland, which was secured for the occasion. It has the appearance of clematis, but is more beautiful. The prevailing colors were produced through the use of the water myrtle, palms and choice flowers, arranged about the chancel.

Previous to the ceremony and while the guests were being seated by the ushers, Mrs. Freeman rendered a selection of classical music on the organ. At the hour set for the ceremony the vested choir appeared and walked to the front of the church singing a familiar processional hymn. Then the bridal party was met, and proceeded up the aisle through the main aisle the choir sang the Lohengrin wedding march.

Following the choir were the ushers, Volney F. Green, brother of the bride; Albert O. Woltman, Edgar I. Serrell, of this city, and Percival A. McGuire, of New York. Then followed the flower girls, Marion Smith and Isabel Taylor, of this city, who were gowned in pink brussels net over pink taffeta. They wore pink taffeta hats and carried baskets of flowers.

After the flower girls was the maid of honor, Miss Mary Fritts, of this city, who wore a gown of pink brussels net over pink taffeta. She carried pink roses. Then came the bride, upon whom all eyes were turned She was leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away in marriage. Richly gowned in white satin, trimmed with old point lace, and wearing a veil, she was the admiration of all.

At the chancel, where the party met the groom and his best man, Fred H. Freeman, of this city, they separated and formed a semi-circle, with the bride and groom standing in the centre of the group. The ceremony was then performed by Rev. E. M. Rodman, pastor of the church, and was made very impressive. The service was performed with a ring. As the bride and groom proceeded to the altar the choir rendered a beautiful anthem.

Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party reversed and left the church while the Mendelssohn wedding march was being played. As the bride and groom proceeded down the centre aisle they graciously acknowledged the many admiring glances of relatives and friends.

A reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents, 78 Mercer avenue, where a large assemblage of guests gathered to do honor to the popular young couple. The home was prettily decorated for the occasion, the prevailing colors being the same as those at the church, except in the back parlor, where a pleasing diversion was secured though the use of autumnal flowers. The parlor was decorated with the water myrtle, palms and flowers.

During the hours of the reception and while the bride and groom were receiving the congratulations of the guests, sweet music was discoursed by an orchestra A sumptuous wedding supper was served during the evening.

A favored place sought by the guests was the room where the bridal gifts were displayed. There was a handsome selection comprising silverware, goldware, glassware, china, and many articles of both use and beauty, all of which gave unmistakable evidence of the high esteem in which the happy couple are held by their friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a costly solid silver tea service.

During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Dryden left Plainfield for the south, where they will remain for some time enjoying their honeymoon. Upon their return they will reside in Plainfield.

Guests were present at the wedding and reception from New York, Brooklyn, Baltimore, Tuxedo Park, N. Y., Philadelphia and Hutchison, Kan., in addition to a large number from both this city and the borough.

The groom is the assistant treasurer of the Municipal Debenture Company, of 71 Broadway, New York. He is also a prominent member of the Park Club and the Park Golf Club. The bride is one of Plainfield's leading society women, and the many friends of both bride and groom wish them success and happiness through life.

MONEY IN SELLING WOOD

PROFITABLE ENTERPRISE OF THE RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

$218 Made for the Association by Giving Applicants for Aid Work at Cutting the Fuel—Meeting Held Friday Morning.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield Relief Association was held Friday morning at 10 o'clock in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church. Owing to the weather the attendance was not large. Mrs. J. K. Myers, president, presided over the session.

The treasurer's report showed the receipts for the past year to be $2,014.43 and the disbursements $1,985.30, leaving a balance of about $32. Last year the receipts were $2,298.46, and the report shows a slight falling off in contributions. There have been helped during the year 106 families, and of that number 85 have done work in return for assistance. The woodyard has especially been a success. The receipts from this department were $278, which is considerable when it is known that six barrels of wood are sold for $1, the same as the local dealers sell it for.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year: President, Mrs. J. K. Myers; vice-president, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph; treasurer, Mrs. Howard Lapsley; secretaries, Mrs. C. E. Brooke and Miss Marion Dumont; board of managers, Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. J. E. Tracy, Mrs. H. P. Reynolds, Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Mrs. Alex Gilbert, Mrs. S. S. Guion, Mrs. E. R. Ackerman, Mrs. H. P. Talmadge, Mrs. George P. Mellick, Mrs. A. C. Nickerson, Mrs. M. E. Dwight, Mrs. E. H. Rowland and Mrs. J. E. Slevin.

CHRISTIAN WOMAN DEAD

Mrs. T. B. Crosley Passed Into the Sleep Friday Morning Which Knows no Awakening.

In the death of Mrs. Crosley, wife of Justice Thomas B. Crosley, of Dover street, which occurred last Friday about 6 o'clock, the borough has lost a respected resident, and the First M. E church, of which she was a member, has lost an exemplary Christian woman. She was an earnest worker in all departments of church work. She had been ill about a year, and during the past summer her condition was very critical. Her trouble was stomach affection and during the past few weeks she suffered excruciating pain. This morning she passed into a sleep from which she did not awake.

She leaves a husband, Thomas B. Crosley, and daughter, Mrs. Scudder, wife of Rev. Charles E. Scudder, who has a charge at Newark.

WANTS MRS. EYLER REMOVED.

President Maddock's Opinion Regarding Charges Against Industrial Matron.

Dr. George O. Maddock, president of the Board of Managers of the State Industrial School for Girls at Trenton, stated at New Brunswick Thursday that Mrs. Eyler, matron of the institution, should be removed on the charges of cruelty against her.

There will be no inquest in the case of Sadie Wiseman, whose death at Paterson is alleged to have been due to the cruel treatment she received at the school. County Physician McBride decided that the girl died from natural causes.

The Social Problem.

Prof. Walter Wyckoff, of Princeton University, will deliver the next of the lectures to the Monday Afternoon Club in All Souls church, Monday afternoon, October 16th. His subject will be "The Social Problem." Prof. Wyckoff has made a special study of the social problem in the United States and spent several months working and living among the laboring class to be able to see the situation from their point of view.

HIDEOUS AND UNCANNY.

A Sample of Degeneracy Among the Morbid and Mercurial Parisians.

HELL'S TAVERN AS IT IS.

A Chance for the Sociologist to Study the Ghostly in Life in the Great French Capital.

Parisians May Like Such Forms of Amusement, but to American Travelers It is Disgusting — A Strange Whim of the Parisians. The House of Death.

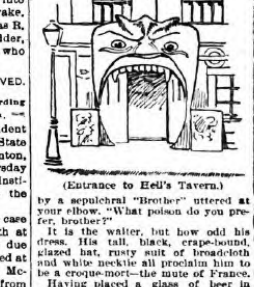
Paris has the strangest of whims and humors. Not the least striking of them is its affectations of morbidity within its taverns. Nothing is so dull and so stupid and so insipid as Montmartre, with its Maxim's taverns. There, in place of the merrymaking one would expect from the repute of the gay capital, one finds laughter banished and in comes trolled to sit with false students and false artists before a bock of bad beer while listening to strolling players with ragged clothes and more ragged voices singing over an improvised stage the songs that are in fashion. These at least are doleful, and when rendered by such voices are the most sorrowful and saddening.

There is no more striking tavern in Montmartre than the Cabaret l'Enfer, in the extreme boulevard near the Place Blanche, with its hideous mouth gaping wide and unfailingly, suggesting the propriety of its title—Hell's tavern. Painted to represent the infernal flames, with its doorway representing a fantastic devil's mouth, it is, indeed, striking. The teeth of the monster afford a steps up which to enter, while two glaring red lanterns represent its hideous eyes at night. A more horrid and uninviting picture can scarcely be imagined.

In true Parisian love of contrast, beside it on the boulevard is the Cabaret du Ciel. It is painted in a true celestial blue, on which white angels fly, playing harps that sound sweet music in the ears. But inviting as it is from the outside, suggestive of the heavenly place, as its name denotes, it is anything but interesting within, where the invariably morbidity reigns as usual.

Another tavern that is quite suggestive as to its name is the two mentioned is Le Neant, which is nearly opposite. It is seemingly a mere shop view from the front, painted and hung on the outer lantern. But enter it, and you are in the strangest of them all. You find coffins and ghostly figures everywhere. The tables are draped in a sepulchral white, and give an unearthly air to the place when one sits down beside a coffin to satisfy his thirst. How he can expect to derive good cheer from his entertainment is more than any foreigner can divine.

Melilot, which is the next one mentioned is Le Neant, which is nearly opposite. It is seemingly a mere shop view from the front, painted and hung on the outer lantern. But enter it, and you are in the strangest of them all. You find coffins and ghostly figures everywhere. The tables are draped in a sepulchral white, and give an unearthly air to the place when one sits down beside a coffin to satisfy his thirst. How he can expect to derive good cheer from his entertainment is more than any foreigner can divine.



(Entrance to Hell's Tavern.)

by a sepulchral "Brother" uttered at your elbow. "What poison do you prefer, brother?"

It is the waiter, but how odd his dress. His tall, black, crape-bound, glazed hat, rusty suit of broadcloth and white necktie all proclaim him to be a croque-mort—the mute of France.

Having placed a glass of beer in front of you and lighted a wax taper, which he fixes upright in a small hole arranged for the purpose in the lid of the coffin, he informs you how many sous beer and taper together cost, pockets the money and retires as gloomily as he approached, after first telling you that the deceased died of cholera.

The other tables are set at the coffins or so arranged up both sides of the room. On the black wall, by means of ornaments, hang skulls and crossbones, funereal tablets, speaking of death and decay, the figures in which change suddenly into death-heads and skeletons, depending from the ceiling is a chandelier composed of human bones, though the room is illuminated principally by the flickering lights of the wax tapers.

At length the visitors are invited to enter the vaults. At one end of the chamber the continuity of the walls is broken by a sloping opening leading to the vaults, which are lighted by a few tapers. At the farther end of this recess there stands on end an empty coffin, open.

One of the mourners accepts an invitation to enter it. The acolyte adjusts a white winding sheet so as to fit the size of the coffin, and from head to foot, the face alone being exposed to view.

On the face there is a sickly smile, as if the corpse were trying to protest that it found nothing unusual in its present position. Now the slow strain of a dead march, played on an organ, begins to pervade the chamber, and the fixed smile of the face in the coffin has a ghastly look of constraint as if the lips had lost the power of closing over the shining teeth. Is it fancy or is the color of the face really changing? A few more seconds and there can no longer be any doubt left. The putrefaction of the man in the coffin has become as ashen gray, the orbits of the eyes start into prominence, the contour of the nose disappears, the lips are fading away. On the forehead and cheeks hideous livid patches start into prominence. Now the place where eyes and nose were a few seconds ago have become black, gaping holes, little by little the winding sheet has been growing transparent and underneath at first the outlines then the details of the fleshless skeleton are seen. In the coffin there is now apparently all the remains of a human being before the last drama crumbling into dust, is effected.

There is a hush in the room. The strains of the organ are again audible, the skeleton is covered by a semi-transparent cloud, which gradually takes the opaqueness of the winding sheet you have seen before. The face, too, is undergoing a transformation, a semblance of the nose and eyes have taken the places of the dark, empty sockets. The horrible violet and green tints again make their appearance, slowly giving place to a cadaverous pallor. Then in turn change to the roseate hue of life and the inmate of the coffin steps out of it as he entered, once more a living, human being.

Though you may be perfectly aware it has been nothing but a trick very cleverly performed, it is impossible to prevent a sigh of relief as you see the man and the coffin safely out of sight, and when in filing out of the room you drop a coin into an iron alms box held by the monk at the door, you are still uncertain whether you are leaving a real mortuary vault or the back parlor of a Paris cafe.

To satisfy one's curiosity and love of novelty, once or twice one is well enough, but as a steady diet, deliver the average American from them. It is a strange whim, but Paris is welcome to its full enjoyment.

ALL HIS LUCK.

With the Figures 13 Came Everything Good and a Fortune.

Lieutenant Horatio I. Lawrence, a Colorado volunteer, is a fatalist and firmly believes that all of fortune's lavish gifts and everything good that befalls mankind is measured out in the future will occur in the form of the booboo figure 13.

Lieutenant Lawrence was born on the 13th of May, 1872. He graduated in the Class of '92 at Orchard's Lake, Mich., the preparatory school of West Point. He was 20 years old month.

He entered West Point on the 13th, and was in the Class of '96, but did not finish the course. He enlisted as a private in the Colorado Volunteers, Company E, on the 1st of May, 1898, and on the 13th of the same month he was made noncommissioned officer. The 13th day he engaged in was the battle of Manila, which occurred on August 13.

On the 13th of July he was informed that he was the heir to a large real estate valued at $4,000,000. On the 13th of the following month he was promoted a commissioned officer.

Lieutenant Lawrence comes from a military family—some of whom have written their names in our military history, dating from the fury of the Revolutionary War to the War of the Rebellion.

He is a lineal descendant of the famous "Don't Give Up the Ship" Lawrence, and from his mother's side of the house inherits the blood of Admiral Farragut and Robert E. Lee. Lieutenant Lawrence is the happiest officer in the Colorado camp, and without doubt, he is the most popular.

STRUCK DEAD.

A Cougar Instantly Kills a Little Girl.

One of the saddest deaths in recent years occurred about 3 miles east of Gregg, Idaho, the other day. Mrs. W. Peterson, wife of a husband had gone out on Camas Prairie a few days previous, was staying on their claim with the four small children. The mother and oldest girl left the younger children playing at the house while they went to the spring for water. Little Emma, 10 years old, was just outside the door playing with her brother Henry, a few years older, who was in the house. Mrs. Peterson had scarcely left the house when Henry saw a large animal spring upon his little sister and apparently strike her down with his great paw. The boy slammed the door and screamed, which must have frightened the animal away.

When he saw it disappear in the brush he ran at once to his mother. She could not find her little one bleeding and lifeless by the door. From the marks on the child the cougar must have struck her across the face with its paw, knocking her down, and then bit her through the head. Death was instantaneous.

No one saw the animal save the little boy, who is 6 or 7 years old. He says it was a large, black animal, with a long tail. Old hunters agree that it must have been a panther or a cougar. This is the season of the year that it is hardest for them to get food, hence they are more bold. The people of the neighborhood are up in arms with the small children are in great terror, and especially so since the efforts to hunt down the animal are so far unsuccessful.

Woman's Jaw Cemented.

An interesting and unusual operation was performed at the Memorial Hospital in New York recently. The wife of a prize fighter had a broken jaw, the result of an altercation with her husband, which had ended with his putting a few teeth down her throat. There was only one way to patch her up, the doctors said, and that was to cement her jaws together with plaster. The operation is similar to that which is like that performed by dentists when they are making new sets of teeth. An impression of the upper and lower sets of teeth was taken, and from these a rubber splint was made. This splint was put into the mouth and the jaws forced together upon it. It is said that in due time the bones will knit, and the woman will be as well equipped to carry on discussions with her husband as she was before. In the meantime she is to be fed through a tube inserted between her teeth. Doctors are much interested in the operation, and the woman feels herself to be a heroine in the cause of surgical science.

The Buddhists of Burma have subscribed and paid $50,000 for the materials and lodging of a golden casket, in which their most sacred relic, a tooth of Buddho, is to repose.

DAUGHTER MARRIED AT SILVER WEDDING.

Dual Celebration in Family of J. A. Blatz.

AN ELABORATE CEREMONY

MISS ETTA M. BLATZ WEDDED TO A. ARTHUR CANNON.

Big Reception at the „Revere House Followed—Was Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Marriage of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Blatz—Handsome Floral Decorations —Couple Will Reside in Plainfield.

The marriage of the daughter and the silver wedding anniversary of the parents marked Oct. 4th as an important day for the family of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Blatz, of 223 Somerset street. Their only daughter, Miss Etta Monica Blatz, was wedded to Augustus Arthur Cannon, of Craig place, at St. Joseph's church that evening at 6:30 o'clock. The ceremony was followed by a reception at the Revere House in honor of the newly wedded couple and the older couple who had just completed the twenty-five years of married life. It was one of the most elaborate weddings of the autumn season.

The church was thronged to the doors with the relatives and friends who had come to witness the tieing of the nuptial knot. The interior of the church was profusely decorated with flowers and plants, green and white forming the prevailing colors of decorations. Potted plants, intermingled with white roses, were banked about the railing and altar.

While waiting for the entrance of the bridal party, the organ played softly. When the doors were flung open and the ushers, heading the procession started down the central aisle, the Lohengrin wedding march was heard. It was sung by a quartette composed of Mrs. Francis Brown and Miss Betts, of New York, James E. Bailey and Frank LaPorte, of this city.

The ushers came first. They were Francis Joseph Blatz, of this city, a brother of the bride, John Edward Cannon, of New York, a brother of the groom, Matthew J. Addison, of Brooklyn, and John P. Powers, of Plainfield. They were followed by the four bridesmaids, Miss Etta Louise Neuman, of New York, Miss May E MacLaughlin, of Plainfield, Miss Lillian Grogan, of Westfield, and Miss Anna C. Vollin, of New York. The flower girls were gowned in white Brussels net over pink taffeta, and the others in white Brussels net over blue taffeta. Pink roses composed the bouquets carried by the Misses Neuman and MacLaughlin, and yellow roses the bouquets of the other two bridesmaids.

Walking along and preceding the bride was the maid-of-honor, Miss Mildred Ulrich, a cousin of the bride. Her gown was of mouseline de soie over white taffeta. Her bouquet was of white roses. Then came the bride, leaning on the arm of her father. She looked very beautiful in a gown of white crepe de noir over white satin with pearl and duchesse lace trimming. She wore a tuelle veil, caught up with orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of orchids, white roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

To the strains of the grand march the procession moved slowly up the aisle and inside the railing, the ushers and bridesmaids filing to each side. They were met by the groom and the best man, James Prescott Cannon, of Boston, a brother of the groom.

The tones of the organ were hushed and the impressive Roman Catholic marriage ceremony was conducted by Rev. W. H. Miller, rector of the church. He was assisted by Rev. Father Brennan, curate of the church, and Rev. Father Cary, of Carteret, N. J.

After the groom had placed the ring upon the finger of his wife and the service was completed, the triumpant strains of the Mendelssohn wedding march rang out and the bridal party headed by the newly wedded couple, moved down the aisle. The maid of honor and the best man followed with the bridesmaids and ushers behind them. Mr. and Mrs. Blatz followed. Mrs. Blatz had occupied a seat in the front of the church during the ceremony. She was gowned in grey satin brocade with pearl trimming.

The coaches received them all and soon carried the happy party to the Revere House where a reception was held. The spacious parlors and halls were handsomely decorated for the occasion with potted plants and cut flowers. Pink and white prevailed in the floral decorations.

After Mr. and Mrs. Cannon had received the congratulations of their many friends, a very elaborate dinner was served in the dining room, the tables being artistically decorated Covers were laid for a hundred and fifty. Then followed music and dancing until late at night, the entertainment of the bride and groom marking an exciting interruption.

The groom is a popular young man with a large circle of friends and holds a responsible position with the Swifts Beef Company. The couple left late last evening for the south where they travel visiting Old Point Comfort and other southern resorts. After a visit in Massachusetts to the groom's old home, they will return to Plainfield in about three weeks and take up their residence at the bride's home, 223 Somerset street.

It was expected that Rev John P. Morris, of Greendale, N. J., who had married the bride's father and mother twenty five years ago, would be present and assist at the ceremony Hewas detained at ho me by illness, however.

There was a host of gifts from the numerous friends of the couple. They were shown in a room at the bride's home which they more than filled. They included many of beauty and value. The groom's gift to the bride was a turquoise and diamond ring. The groom of twenty-five years ago gave his bride a sunburst of diamonds. The ushers received engraved silver match boxes from the groom, and the bridesmaids were given pearl and turquoise rings by the bride.

BLAZING OIL STOVE GUTTED DINING ROOM.

A Threatening Fire in The Home Of Dr. Buchanan.

STOVE WAS TOO FULL OF OIL.

PRESENCE OF MIND EXHIBITED BY MRS. BUCHANAN.

She Did Not Commit Any Rash Act in the Excitement, and Therefore Escaped Personal Injury—Nearly Everything in the Dining Room Destroyed by the Flames—Damage Will be About $200.

A threatening fire occured October 4th at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. Hervey Buchanan, 43 Duer street, which owing to the presence of mind of Mrs. Buchanan, who was entirely alone in the house, serious damage was prevented. The fire was the result of an oil stove. In the afternoon Mrs. Buchanan used the stove and it worked perfectly. About 5:30 o'clock she had occasion to use it again and in filling the tank with oil it is supposed that she put too much in, for the stove had been burning but a few minutes when it blazed up and became enveloped in flames.

Mrs. Buchanan did not lose her head and attempt to throw the stove out of doors, but hastened across the street to Gulick Brothers' grocery and secured assistance from the clerks. By the time they reached the house the dining room, where the fire occurred, was a mass of flames which were leaping madly from one end to the other, rapidly destroying everything therein. It was at once determined that the fire department was needed and word was sent to headquarterse. Several firemen responded with extinguishers and soon put the fire out.

In the meantime Mrs. Buchanan fortunately rescued her husband's ledger and the silver ware that was in the room above. Everything in the room was destroyed and it is said that the loss will reach $200.

The insurance will adequately cover the loss and George White, of the borough, who carries the policy on the contents, will settle the loss in a few days.

GROOM FROM BAY STATE.

MISS ETHEL HOLMES BRIDE FOR A PRETTY HOME WEDDING.

The Nuptial Knot Celebrated at the Home of Dr. Frank Clawson Thursday Night—To Live in Fitchburg, Mass.

The handsome residence of Dr. and Mrs. Frank T. Clawson, at 672 West Seventh street, was the scene of a pretty wedding ceremony Thursday at 7:30 o'clock, when Miss Ethel, daughter of Mrs. Augustus D. Holmes, of this city, and Frederick Carleton Nichols, of Fitchburg, Mass., were made husband and wife. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, in the presence of about 100 of the relatives and friends.

The happy couple stood before an improvised altar in the music room, which had been beautifully decorated with laurel and cut flowers.

The bride's gown was one of white liberty satin, trimmed with point lace. She wore the customary veil and carried bride roses.

Miss Helen A. Hasbrouck, of Brooklyn, was the bridesmaid. She was dressed in a costume of pink satin crepon.

The flower girl was Little Miss Elizabeth Paxon, of Fitchburg, Mass., a niece of the bride. She was dressed in white lace and carried a basket of flowers.

Albert G. Smith, of Dover, N. H., was best man. The ushers were Leonard Nichols, of Providence, R. I., a brother of the groom, and Alfred E. Holmes, of this city, a brother of the bride.

The bride was given in marriage by her grandfather, the Hon. E. Wood Perry, of New Orleans, La.

Music was supplied by an orchestra concealed behind palms in the hallway.

After the ceremony and congratulations a wedding supper was enjoyed. Then Mr. and Mrs. Nichols left on a short Southern tour and will be absent about two weeks. Upon their return they will reside at 46 Arlington street, Fitchburg, Mass. They will be "at home" at the above number after Nov. 15th.

Many beautiful and costly presents were received by the newly wedded couple as tokens of the esteem in which they are held.

Mr. Nichols is a valuable employe of the Fitchburg Savings bank and is a popular and well-known resident of that city.

The bride is one of Plainfield's accomplished young women and has hosts of friends who will extend their hearty congratulations.

MUNICIPAL BUSINESS OF THE LOCAL CANADA

Borough Council Disposes of Many Important Matters.

NEW ORDINANCES PASSED.

EXCELLENT REPORT PRESENTED FOR THE STREET COMMITTEE.

Borough Must Pay its Share of Assessment Against Presbyterian Cemetery, for It Owns a Lot There—Proposition to Spend $150 for an Expert Accountant Was Defeated.

Mayor Smalley and nearly all the members of the Borough Council were present at the regular October meeting last Friday the absent members being Messrs. Coddington and Swackhamer. Borough Counsel Reed was also present and assisted in several matters.

Collector George F. Brown's report was as follows: Taxes and interest, $559 20; special school, $134 32; Board of Health, $4.64; Watchung avenue assessment, $1,937.06; bills payable by note, $1,600; total receipts, $4,363.03; balance, September 1st, $3,288.32; disbursements, $5,047.52; cash on hand, October 1st, $2,603.83; Borough fund, $1,054.43; Watchung avenue fund, $1,549.40.

Clerk Rowley presented the following report of money received, the several amounts being included in the above report: Licenses, $12.50; fines, $47.50; stone and labor, $83 25; extra police service, $12; total, $155 25. Mr. Rowley also reported that he had examined the borough tax duplicates for 1897-8, and had found them correct.

William M. Stillman informed the Council that he had recently purchased part of a piece of property on Grove street and he asked them to apportion the taxes on the same. Rev. Father Miller, of St. Joseph's church, petitioned for an electric light on Watchung avenue, between Manning and Jackson avenues. W. H. Shotwell, trustee for the Presbyterian Cemetery Association, presented the Council with a bill for $5, the assessment levied on the borough for the lot owned by them in the cemetery. The Mayor said it was the first time he knew the borough owned a lot there, but he thought the borough might need it.

Communications were received from the officers of Warren Engine Company to the effect that W. VanWinkle has served seven years and is entitled to exemption, also that Charles Stahl and Albert V. DeCamp had been elected members of the company. Confirmation of the above action was adopted by the Council.

Raymond Schenck, janitor of Warren Engine Company, resigned. Mayor Smalley appointed George B. Stewart in his place.

Councilman Clark, chairman of the street committee, presented the following report: Cleaning streets, $56 35; stone, 23 tons, $19 75; services of Borough Engineer J. F. Hubbard, $31.75; culvert, Brook avenue, $97.87; receipts, macadamizing, scraping, etc., $170 44. Expended during the past six month: April, $601.58; May, $1,255.26; June, $95.64; July, 167 01; August, $408.15; September, $207 55, total, $2,825 19; appropriation for roads, $3,500; receipts, $170 44; expending during past six months, $2,825.19; balance, $844.25.

At this time three ordinances were introduced by Mr. Valiant, all of which were adopted on second reading. The first ordinance is similar to one now in force and provides for the morals, peace and good order of the borough. The ordinance differs from the old one in several particulars, and is drafted to conform to the present State laws. It will have the effect of doing away with jury trials in a number of cases, provides a fine of $20 or seven days in the county jail or borough lockup. The ordinance covers everything one can conceive under the heading. The second ordinance refers to riotous people, vagrancy, begging and prostitution, and provides a fine of $100 or 90 days in the county jail or borough lockup. The third ordinance provides for the repeal of the first ordinance introduced. All three ordinances go into effect December 1st next.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution providing for the drawing of $2,000 to pay Watchung avenue certificates with interest. Another resolution by the same member provided for the borrowing of $500 for four months, and still a third resolution by Mr. Valiant remitted the interest on the assessment levied against the Presbyterian Cemetery Association on account of the opening of Watchung avenue, for the reason that the assessment is paid. Regarding the latter resolution Mr. Valiant explained that the borough counsel gave as his opinion that the Council has the right to remit the interest.

Mr. Clark stated that a survey had been made of the property along Brook avenue from Franklin place past the property owned by J. B. Mills, and it had been found that there were encroachments on property owned by the borough.

Mr. Rogers offered a resolution that several firemen be relieved of the penalty for non-performance of fifty per cent. fire duty, which action the Council has a right to take.

Mr. Burtis stated that the weather was now becoming cool, and as the marshals are wearing summer uniforms he thought it time the Council provided something warmer for them. He offered a resolution that the sum of $150 be expended for new suits, hats and overcoats for the regular marshals.

Mayor Smalley brought up the question of the borough paying off the Watchung avenue indebtedness, as he understood that provisions for such action had to be taken this year. He was informed by Mr. Reed that the Council has two years yet to arrange that matter, and during that time the bonds will have to be paid or a law must be enacted by the Legislature giving an extension of time. It was decided to let the matter rest for a time.

Mr. Rogers offered a resolution accepting the invitation from Warren Engine Company to participate in the firemen's parade next week Thursday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and he hoped that all members of the Council would be present.

Mr. Valiant at this time offered a resolution that the sum of $150 be expended by the Mayor and Council to have the books of the clerk and collector examined by an expert. Mayor Smalley took exception to the resolution and thought that inasmuch as there is a limited amount of money on hand it would be unwise to make such an expenditure. He agreed with Mr. Valiant that it is a great deal to ask the auditing committee to spend so much time in examining the books, but thought that the Council should try and avoid such an expenditure at present.

Mr. Valiant dwelt upon the necessity of having such a person audit the books, but finally agreed to let the matter rest for the present. Mr. Rogers then moved that the resolution lie on the table until the next meeting. This concluded the business of the evening and the Council adjourned.

Other contests were by Messrs. Lloyd and Woodruff against Nischwitz and Leland. Won by the former team. Then Woodruff and Lloyd defeated Stryker and Kinney, while Nash and Dunham had no difficulty in beating Coddington and Leland.

EXCITING ROAD RACE CLOSED THE SEASON.

Embleton and Marsh Were Lapped at the Finish.

WESTFIELD MAN WINNER.

MARSH, OF THE 'PLAINS, GETS SECOND PLACE.

It Was the Last Race of the Season Under W. S. Emery's Direction—But Five Men Faced the Starter—No One Has Yet Won the Cup, Which Will be Offered Next Season—No Arrests Were Made.

The fourth and last one of the series of 16 mile road races, run under the direction of W. S. Emery, at Scotch Plains, was pulled off Saturday afternoon in the presence of several hundred men and scores of women.

There were but six men to face the starter when the race was called. No reason can be assigned for the absence of some of the local riders unless it was owing to the report that the riders were liable to arrest for violation of the borough ordinance against riding fast in the streets. However, the race was interesting and hotly contested, the honors being carried away by the Westfield man, who had a struggle to wrest the place from Marsh of Scotch Plains.

When time was called, the following men faced the starters:

Ernest Marsh, Scotch Plains.
Wm. Embleton, Westfield.
Jeppe Sorensen, Plainfield.
Arthur Chapin, Plainfield.
Chas. Embleton, Westfield.
John Townsend, Cranford.

The first two men were given a three minute start while the Plainfield men had but two minutes. Charles Embleton and Townsend were the scratch men.

Marsh and William Embleton got off well together, but the former at once forged ahead and held that position on the first half of the course, Embleton dropping out of the race before making the turn around the flag pole.

In making the second half of the course Sorenson, Chapin and Charles Embleton kept well together and when they entered the home stretch the struggle for first place was a magnificent one. Before crossing the tape Embleton, who was two lengths behind Marsh, made a desperate spirt and came in a winner by half a length, with Chapin close up and Townsend five lengths behind. Unfortunately for Sorenson from this city he sustained a fall and did not finish, though pressing the Westfield man closely. The finish between Charles Embleton and Marsh was very exciting. The time was 46:25. The gold medal was awarded to Charles Embleton, the silver medal to Ernest Marsh and the bronze medal to Arthur Chapin. Owing to the small number of entries there was no time prize offered at this race.

Harry Lister was starter and timer; Frank Schuck, Jr., clerk of the course, and Matt. Sweeney and William Nash scorers.

There was no attempt made by the authorities or any member of the Law and Order League to interfere with the race or the contestants, Rev. Mr. Shott was absent from the 'Plains.

Previous races have been won by LeMathey of Westfield, and Hummer and Sorenson of Plainfield. As the first prize has not been won by any of the above men three times the silver cup will not be awarded this season. Next season, however, the races will be continued and an opportunity given any of the winners of this season to add to their list of victories thereby making them eligible to compete for the cup.

Chamber Music Concert.

Those who attended the chamber music subscription concert given in the Casino last May, under the direction of Ward Stephens, will be delighted to learn that Mr. Stephens will offer to Plainfield music-lovers a second chamber music concert to be given early in November. Mr. Stephens will have the assistance of the Kaltenborn String Quartette, Miss Adele Rafter, soprano, and Bayer Hane, 'cellist; and the programme will be as interesting as the one rendered at the last concert.

Of Interest to Local Society.

A number of Plainfield people will be interested in the announcement of the marriage of Miss Madeline Vaughan Abbott, daughter of Rev. Edward Abbott, of Cambridge, Mass., to Charles Elmer Bushnell, of Philadelphia. The marriage took place Friday, October 6th, at the home of the bride's parents in Cambridge. Miss Abbott, a niece of Rev. Lyman Abbott, of Brooklyn, is a graduate of Bryn Maur College. Mr. Bushnell is a brother of John Bushnell, of Central avenue.

Cosgrove Still in the Hospital.

There are at present nineteen patients at Muhlenberg Hospital, and the only serious one is Wm. Cosgrove, of California, who has been there for several months with a broken back. His condition is practically the same, although at times it seems that he fails slightly.

TRIED TO CAPTURE COUNTY CONVENTION

Senator Reed Balked His Rival From Somerville.

MR. THOMPSON'S SCHEME.

HE WANTED TO CHANGE BASIS OF REPRESENTATION.

Attempted to Pass Measure Through County Committee—It Would Give Thompson a Majority in Convention—Senator Reed Objected—Committee Adjourned Before It Could be Passed.

First blood was drawn in the bitter contest for the Republican leadership of Somerset county when the county executive committee of the G. O. P. met at Somerville October the 4th. Chancery Clerk Lewis A. Thompson and his following from Bridgewater township made an attempt to capture the coming county convention by changing the basis of representation so as to give Bridgewater and the Thompson townships a majority of the delegates. They failed through the opposition of Senator Charles A. Reed and his friends.

The county committee was called to fix the date for the primaries and the county convention, and to issue the regular call. It was expected, however, that the Thompson and Reed factions would test their strength. It was the first opportunity to do so this season. Chancery Clerk Thompson and three other Bridgewater men were present. North Plainfield's representation consisted of Senator Reed, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., and Charles P. Sebring. There were also present three committeemen from Franklin township, one from Warren and one from Hillsboro.

The choice of the day for the primaries will be held the evening of Friday, October 13th. In the rest of the county they will be held the next Saturday, October 14th, at three o'clock p. m. The convention will be held at Somerville, Wednesday morning, October 18th, at 10 o'clock.

Then Mr. Thompson proposed that the county committee should change the basis of representation at the convention, and instead of having five delegates from each township, have two delegates from each polling district. Senator Reed immediately objected on the ground that the convention and not the county committee was the supreme governing body in Somerset, and should therefore have the say regarding any change in the method of representation. Mr. Thompson disagreed, and said that the county committee had the power and was the proper body to act. He was supported by the Bridgewater delegation.

Mr. Thompson's proposition, while it sounded simple enough, was intended so as to rearrange the distribution of delegates as to give the Thompson faction an easy majority in the convention. There are nine townships in Somerset county, and, according to the present method, each township is allowed five delegates in the convention. That makes a total of forty five delegates at the convention. Bridgewater, which is Thompson's stronghold, has now the same number of delegates as North Plainfield, where Reed is the strongest. Thompson's proposition was that each polling district should have two delegates at the convention. There are seven polling places in Bridgewater and only three in North Plainfield. In the entire county there are twenty-two. That would give Bridgewater fourteen out of forty-four delegates which, with the other townships where Thompson is strongest, would give him control of the convention.

On several previous occasions attempts have been made by the Thompson faction to secure adoption of that plan at the county conventions. The fact, however, that five out of nine townships would have the number of their delegates decreased while Bridgewater was the only one that would gain anything by the change, has always sufficed to defeat the measure when placed before the conventions.

This time the Thompsonites tried to get the measure through the county committee. The discussion of the subject was quite lively, both Senator Reed and Chancery Clerk Thompson taking part. The question was never put to vote, however. In the midst of the discussion, the committeeman from Warren jumped up and moved to adjourn. The motion was carried by a small majority and the basis of representation remained unchanged.

There have been all sorts of rumors afloat about the contest for the leadership of Somerset. It has been said that Senator Reed had received orders from Gov. Sewell to withdraw from the race for renomination and that he had done so. But the fact that the Reeds are on hand and met his opponents successfully does not point to the truthfulness of the rumor.

Then it has been said that the Thompson faction would make no attempt to prevent the renomination of Senator Reed but would try to "snow him under" at election. As the Thompsonites tried to get control of the convention, it does not look as if they were going to stand aside and allow Reed to have his own way.

MANY COMPETED FOR M'CUTCHEN CUP.

Anderson and Taylor Met and Played Even.

J. H. HOWELL WON FIRST.

G. W. COOLEY GETS INTO GOOD FORM ONCE MORE.

W. J. R. Thiers and Cooley Took Second and Third Honors—Question of Superiority Between Anderson and Taylor Still Unsettled—Both Scored 108 —Tied Another Round of Match Play.

The largest field of competitors of the season for the McCutchen Cup, marked the play at the Park Golf Club links Saturday afternoon. While no low scores were made, the scores were very evenly bunched. Then W. de la R. Anderson and Fred P. Taylor met and broke even on the eighteen holes, leaving the question of superiority as unsettled as ever. First honors went to a new candidate for points for the cup.

There were sixteen club members who entered for the trophy during the afternoon, besides many who took no part in the weekly competition. The most exciting match was between Taylor and Anderson. Neither one was able to gain and advantage. Throughout the eighteen holes it was nip and tuck. When they added up their scores at the end it was found that they had made the same number of strokes, 108, which was low gross score for the afternoon. Later in the afternoon, after the tournament play, they made a round of match play, which was also tied.

Senator Reed was on hand again. The veteran committeeman had visited his handicap and reduced it from 30 to 24. He played with J. H. Howell, who won first honors for the afternoon. Gifford W. Cooley began to show something of his old form again. He made the course in 112. As there were no very low scores, he managed to gain a point by it.

The scores handed in for the McCutchen Cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
J. H. Howell	115	18	97
W. J. R. Thiers	114	12	102
Gifford W. Cooley	112	9	103
T. L. Jennings	134	30	104
W. de la R. Anderson	136	30	106
Charles A. Reed	132	24	108
W. de la R. Anderson	108	0	108
Fred P. Taylor	108	0	108
George T. Rogers	129	21	108
Charles E. Baker	132	24	108
W. R. Faber	136	26	110
G. W. Bowden	140	30	110

Dr. Howell scored his first points for the McCutchen Cup. The three he scored place him tie for fourteenth place. W. J. R. Thiers, who was tied for fourteenth place, has now moved up to eighth with five points. Cooley took third honor, which was all that was needed to pass him into second place. Anderson still leads.

The official standing of the candidates for the cup follows:

W. de la R. Anderson	13
Gifford W. Cooley	11
W. J. R. Thiers	10
Charles E. Faber	7
Charles A. Reed	6
George C. Worth	6
W. R. Faber	6
Geo. T. Rogers	6
J. H. Thiers	5
Samuel Townsend	4
Morgan T. Townsend	4
Wm. A. Townsend	3
E. T. Douglass	3
E. D. Bland	3
J. H. Howell	3
Arthur Beck	3
W. R. Faber	3
Fred P. Taylor	3
R. S. Squires	3
Jacob Laible	2
Volney A. Green	2
Fred S. Overton	1
Clarence S. Romer	1
Augustus VanDeventer	1
C. B. Mitchell	1

There were three contestants for the Buttfield Cup who took part in that competition. Miss Ball won first honors by a narrow margin and Miss Howell was second by one stroke. There is no doubt now as to who is to be winner of the Buttfield Cup. Miss Elsberg has scored thirty points and her nearest rival is Miss Howell with eighteen. There are only three more Saturdays to play in October, when the cup contest closes, and as Miss Howell can't possibly score more than three points each Saturday, it will be impossible for her to make the necessary twelve points to tie Miss Elsberg.

The scores handed in for the Buttfield Cup were as follows:

	Gross.	Handicap.	Net.
Miss Adelaide G. Ball	83	13	70
Miss Saidee Howell	78	4	74
Miss Daisy Elsberg	77	4	73

There has been no official announcement of the number of points yet scored for the Buttfield Cup, but an inspection of the past scores shows the following competitors and the points scored by them:

Miss Daisy Elsberg	30
Miss Saidee Mae Howell	18
Miss Adelaide G. Ball	6

MANNING FREEMAN DEAD

PROMINENT IN POLITICS AND BUSINESS IN MIDDLESEX.

Born and Always Lived in Metuchen —Served as Lay Judge of Middlesex County for a Number of Years.

Manning Freeman, one of the prominent men in business and political affairs in Middlesex county for half a century, died Friday morning of heart trouble, induced by anemia, from which he had been a sufferer for several years. Mr. Freeman was born in Metuchen Aug. 13th, 1827. He was trained as a farmer and conducted a large hay and feed business in Jersey City for a number of years. In 1849 he engaged in the lumber and coal business in Metuchen. He had been at Spring Lake for the summer, but was brought home a few days ago.

Mr. Freeman was active in securing the erection of Raritan township and was a member of the Township Committee from 1870 to 1875. In 1875 he was elected township collector and he held that office until 1897, when failing health compelled him to decline a re-election. Nevertheless, his friends renominated him, and in spite of the fact that his family worked energetically against him, he was defeated by only 20 votes. He served in the Assembly from 1881 to 1883. He was a member of the State Democratic Committee in 1884. In 1888 he was appointed lay judge for Middlesex by Gov. Green, and was reappointed in 1893 by Gov. Werts, holding the office until it was abolished in 1897.

He leaves a widow and five children, one son and four daughters. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. James E. Martine, of this city, will be one of the pall bearers.

United States Senator John Kean's check for $4,346.05 was acknowledged at the meeting of the Board of Freeholders Thursday as having been received by County Collector Wood. This amount is the aggregate of expenditures by the county for engineering, maps, survey and costs in the proceedings for condemning land for the county boulevard project.

Senator Kean agreed, in his offer of $250,000 for the right to construct a trolley road on the boulevard, to make such payments as were required during the progress of the scheme.

Those who have been opposed have been asserting that the county was expending money without chance of being remunerated, and intimated that Senator Kean's offer was not made in good faith. The estimate of the costs were submitted to Mr. Kean, and the payment came promptly. Mr. Kean further assured the county that any payments required were in readiness on demand.

STRUCK ON THE HEAD.

Club Used for Chestnutting Fell With Disastrous Result.

James Gunning and Fred Kleiner, boys about twelve years of age, went after hickory nuts last Thursday afternoon over on the Green brook road. The boys took along with them some wagon spokes to use in clubbing trees. Master Gunning, of Wilson avenue, who appeared to be the most expert at throwing at the tree, met with quite a severe accident. One of the heavy spokes in falling from the tree struck him on the back of the head rendering him unconscious. He was taken to his home and lay in a comatose state for several hours. Dr. Adams was called to attend him. He is out of danger at present.

TESTING THE WATER SUPPLY AT DUNELLEN.

Fire Chief Doane of This City Was in Charge.

SATISFACTORY RESULTS.

WERE ACCOMPLISHED WITH A LARGE SIZED NOZZLE.

Powerful Stream of Water is Shown Capable of Doing Excellent Service in Putting Out Fires—Exhibition Witnessed by Many Prominent Citizens of This City, Bound Brook and Other Places.

The Watchung Water Company had an official test made of their new water supply for Dunellen in that borough Friday evening. The test was made at the direction of Charles P. Sebring, president of the company, and under the supervision of Fire Chief Doane, of this city, in the presence of prominent citizens of Dunellen, Plainfield, Bound Brook and Piscataway township.

The test was made in front of Taylor's hotel. A 50-foot line of hose was attached to a hydrant at this point with an inch and ¼ nozzle. A stream of water was thrown horizontally and perpendicularly a distance of fully 100 feet. It was a heavy stream, and the water was apparently clear, though this could not be fully determined owing to the darkness. There was connection to be sufficient force to gain in the event of a fire, the pressure being about 70 pounds to the square inch. The test was quite satisfactory to the citizens of the borough, many of whom expressed to Mr. Sebring their congratulations. It is expected that at the next meeting of the Common Council the service will be turned over to the Council and by them accepted.

After the test the guests of President Sebring were invited to a course dinner served at Taylor's hotel where the hospitality of the Watchung Water Company was enjoyed.

At this dinner after the tables had been cleared brief congratulations and complimentary impromptu speeches were made with reference to the introduction of the water works into Dunellen. Among those who made remarks were: Mayor Rockfellow, Fire Chief Doane, W. R. Codington, Councilman Cotieli, James Martte, Plainfield; H. Brokaw, Mayor of Bound Brook; S. D. Drake, of Lincoln; Councilman W. W. Smalley, of Bound Brook and others.

Among those present from this city were: Mayors Rockfellow and Smalley, Fire Chief Doane, Councilmen Corieli and Buckle, of the fire committee; Former Judge W. R. Codington, John H. Addlemann, Superintendent of the Plainfield Street Railroad; William Sebring, Collector James Marshall from Bound Brook were Mayor Brokaw, W. W. Smalley, president of Council; R. H. Bache, treasurer electric light works; Nat. Wilson, editor The Centre, Freeholder Augustus Mobus, S. D. Drake, Lincoln.

The Borough of Dunellen was represented by Mayor Swackhamer, Former Mayor P. Brakeley, Postmaster Deslaman, Wilson Fredericks, president of the fire board; Fire Chief Whyhurst, Chas. A. Corieli, secretary of Fire department; W. J. Winger, Alvah Gray, Eugene Runyon, A. R. Randolph, Councilman F. K. Wynkoop, J. W. Apgar and Arthur S. Gaston, Geo. W. Day, president of fire department, O. A. Douglass, editor of Call.

FUGITIVE NOW IN JAIL

John D. Rheinkop Skipped His Bail Bonds—Apprehended by Constable Pangborn in Morristown.

John D. Rheinkop, formerly a resident of Warrenville, was apprehended and arrested at Morristown Friday morning early by Constable Wm. N. Pangborn, of the school.

Sometime ago Rheinekop assaulted a German named Leisinger, aged 80 years, who resides at Warrenville. Soon afterward the man was missing, and in the meantime Heisinger made a complaint against him.

The case found its way to the Somerset County Grand Jury, and Rheinkop was indicted for assault. Rev. George Bowers furnished bonds for the man's appearance at court, but the culprit jumped the bail.

Constable Pangborn has been working on the case for sometime and finally succeeded in locating the offender of the law at Morristown, where he found him yesterday morning. The man was locked up at Somerville to await trial.

Sale of Property for Taxes.

Collector George F. Brown, of the borough, held the sale Friday afternoon to dispose of the properties affected by the opening of Watchung avenue, upon which the assessments had not been paid. There was less than fifty interested people present. The borough bought in twenty-eight properties, and assessments on the balance, three properties, was settled by the owners. Just what the borough will do with these properties has not yet been decided upon.

The New Gas Company.

The slogan of cheaper gas, or at least at a maximum price of $1 per thousand cubic feet, has a winning sound. In going before the present and prospective consumers of that commodity in Plainfield, seeking their aid and influence in establishing itself in this city ready to do business, the People's Gas Company holds out a popular promise.

At this time when municipal ownership of all commodities that depend upon public rights for their delivery to the people is being agitated in Plainfield, any effort at private ownership of a plant for the manufacture and distribution of gas is bound to meet with opposition from two classes—those who are thoroughly in earnest about municipal ownership, and the others who will accept the idea as a convenient cloak to assume for mercenary purposes—this latter class only hoping to prevent private competition without any idea of allowing municipal control to gain sufficient headway to overcome the monopoly that now exists in this city.

To follow the advice of either one of these classes would probably not serve the city's interests. First, because the people at large are not yet appreciative enough of the advantages of municipal ownership, to unite together to bring about its success in the gas business; and, second, because the purposes of masqueraders is so palpably ulterior that it requires but little perspicuity to see that fact.

We believe that the stockholders of the new gas company are thoroughly in earnest in the intention of giving Plainfield cheaper gas rates, and they have not organized with the hopes of eventually selling out to the old company at a huge profit on the original investment. Under these circumstances the Council should deal favorably with the company in its application for a franchise.

There is one stipulation, however, that should be made in the terms that will provide for the future crystalizing of sentiment in favor of municipal ownership. That is, the franchise, if it is granted, should be very explicit in providing that at any time in the future the city may purchase the plant and all assets of the new company at a price that shall not be in excess of the original cost, plus a reasonable amount for the business that may have accrued to the company from careful management.

This would safe-guard the interests of the people in respect to municipal ownership of a gas works, and would be eminently fair to the stockholders of the People's Gas Company.

Reed and Thompson.

By the use of an old argument and sharp practices Chancery Clerk Thompson hoped to outwit Senator Reed and secure control of the coming Somerset county Republican convention before the delegates met together. But in the first crossing of political swords between these two eminent G. O. P. men the Tall Sycamore succeeded in forestalling the purpose of his political adversary, and when the convention meets it will undoubtedly possess as many Reed adherents as it does Thompson followers.

There the tug-of-war between the two men will have to be fought out, and it promises to be an interesting fight, too. Though for years Chancery Clerk Thompson was the undisputed leader among Somerset Republicans, he has for the past two years been compelled to acknowledge that his erstwhile protege, the Honorable Senator from North Plainfield borough, has a following in the bailiwick which must be regarded with not a little importance when counting upon the various influences in party councils.

The day seems to have passed when it could be said that Mr. Thompson carried the Somerset county Republican vote around in his vest pocket.

Intelligent Voters!

There is urgent need in this country of some sort of a strict and thorough examination into the intelligence of applicants for naturalization as citizens of this great and glorious Republic. There are thousands of men made voters by naturalization laws every year who are no more fitted for holding the voting power than the densest subject of the Sultan of Sulu. Their knowledge and appreciation of the Government which they claim to swear allegiance to is as uncertain as the breezes that the Shamrock and Columbia have faced in their two trials of speed, and yet as fickle and fallacious as it is they are clothed with the same power to express a voice in the management of the government as the man who may have made political economy a life-long study.

As an evidence of what kind of intelligence is accepted as sufficient to make a foreigner a citizen of these United States, the Jersey City News reports the following as having occurred in the Hudson County Court:

"What is the Constitution of the United States?" asked Judge Blair through Interpreter Filaramo of a swarthy native of sunny Italy, who was anxious to become a citizen of this great and glorious Republic.

"A book," nodded the intelligent applicant.

"Who is the Mayor of Jersey City," the Court asked another intending citizen.

"I don't know," was the reply.

"Who is Vice-President of the United States?"

"Washington."

"How many members of the Assembly are there from this county?"

"Two," very confidently.

"How many Senators from this county?"

"Two."

"What does the Legislature do?"

"Everything."

"That answer is pretty nearly right," soliloquized the Court, as he ordered Sergeant-at-Arms Mitchell to administer the oath that made a citizen of this intelligent applicant.

Think of it! Such twaddle as this being accepted as sufficient reason for making a citizen and voter.

Mr. Bergen's Poor Argument.

As the hired representative of the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company to appear before the Councilmanic street committee and argue against the granting of a franchise to the People's Gas Company, Frank Bergen, the corporation lawyer of Elizabeth, was confronted with a dearth of material which might be moulded by subtle words into a forceful argument against the new company.

Mr. Bergen has a bright and astute legal mind, which frequently devises winning ways for accomplishing the purposes for which it is retained by well-to-do clients, but in the instance of appearing for the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company to prepetuate the monopoly which that corporation has enjoyed for years, by killing the new company that promises better things for the people, the eminent Elizabeth lawyer seems to be at a disadvantage with what would suggest to the Council is for the best interests of the city.

There was neither rhyme nor reason in what Mr. Bergen urged before the Councilmanic Committee last night. He assumed a patronizing air towards the promoters of the People's Company, cautioning them against a folly which he said was their fate if they persisted in the efforts to give Plainfield cheaper gas. And then he seemed to try to impress the Council men with the claim that it was their supreme duty to save the People's Gas Company from its own friends by never allowing it to get a foothold in the city—in fact, to let it die an undeveloped infant in the face of a promising career, but with the slyly approving smile of the corporation that has retained him with some of the enormous profits that a generation of monopoly has brought to its coffers.

Convincing facts or figures for this sort of logic were not to be had by Mr. Bergen, and the gentleman consequently made a bad showing on a bad job.

The colored politicians of New Jersey profess to be dissatisfied with the course of the National Administration in failing that if nothing further is done for them by the Cranberry State Republicans in the way of appointments to office, some of them may be impelled by a profound sense of political duty to vote the Democratic National ticket in 1900. New Jersey was one of the six States of the country which rejected the Fifteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for negro suffrage. The other States which opposed it were Kentucky, Delaware, Maryland, California and Oregon.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Lease is credited with suggesting the trust in spiritualism which is to be formed in Chicago this week. The idea is not alone to fix the price of an invoked spirit and to prevent rate cutting, but also to regulate the output of the business and to discourage irresponsible mediums who are engaged in it. Whether a guarantee is to go with every ghost raised by members of the trust is still to be determined.

Miss McClellan, of New York, is proposing an endless chain—has already started it, in fact—to raise a fund with which to present a gold loving cup to Rear Admiral Schley. The sum asked for in each letter is 10 cents, and if the amount collected proves too big for the cup it will be used to purchase a house for the admiral.

The Union County Democrats are still hunting for a Senatorial candidate. Wm. M. Oliver, former county clerk, it is said, will accept a renomination, and Jacob Glaser, Wickliffe B. Sayre, or former Sheriff Wm. H. Hicks stand ready to run for sheriff.

Congress will be asked to appropriate at least $200,000,000 for the Army and Navy for the next fiscal year.

GRAIN-O BRINGS RELIEF

to the coffee drinker. Coffee drinking is a habit that is universally indulged in and almost as universally injurious. Have you tried Grain-O? It is almost like coffee but the effects are just the opposite. Coffee upsets the stomach, irritates the digestive effects the heart and disturbs the whole nervous system. Grain-O tones up the stomach, aids digestion and strengthens the nerves. There is nothing but nourishment in Grain-O. It can't be otherwise. 15 and 25c. per package.

Growing Asparagus in Winter.

During the past two winters tests were made at the Kansas experiment station to determine the practicability of producing asparagus in winter. These were moderately successful. The stalks were raised under a bench in one of the propagating houses. About the middle of October the roots to be used were dug from a garden out of doors and buried where they could be conveniently got at. On the ground under the flow-pipe a bed with three or four inches of rich soil was made and in this the roots were placed so that there was one plant to about every 10 square inches.

These roots were covered with another layer of soil four inches deep. The bed was well wet up after planting and kept thoroughly moist. No cultivation was given as the soil remained loose and mellow. Stalks large enough for cutting were ready in two weeks after the bed had been made. In about six weeks the roots became exhausted and had to be replaced by new ones. The quality of the stalks was as good as those raised out of doors, but they lacked size. The first crop raised lasted for 33 days and from a bed of 224 sq ft an average of a pound a day was secured. At ordinary prices the receipts from this would but little more than pay for the work. It is probable, however, that the yield could be increased and the expense decreased if the work was taken up in a commercial way.

Windmills.

The "solid head" style of wheel is less likely to get out of repair, and is more easily repaired than the "movable slat" pattern. There are many different makes of both styles.

A wheel twelve feet in diameter is as large as is practicable for pumping, and as small as will work a pump in very light wind. Such a wheel, in wood, can be got at the factory for about $50; in steel, slightly more.

The windmill tower needs to be high enough to put the wheel above the level of nearby trees.

As the lift of water is not high, and no danger from freezing, the very simplest pump is the best.

The lower the tank or reservoir, the lighter the breeze that will lift water into it.

An open well, or open water of some kind, will be more satisfactory than a driven well, unless the supply in the driven well is unusually strong.

It is well to try the pump and mill before building the reservoir, as one may know then better how large to build. The greater the number of hours per week the mill will work the smaller the reservoir needs to be.

A windmill tower built with the corner posts curved in about midway up, something like the Eiffel Tower, is more graceful and is stronger than one with straight posts.

Advantages of Small Farms.

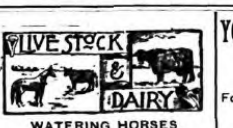
Too much land is expensive if it is not kept in good condition, as the taxes thereon will be an expense which must always be met. But few farms are well supplied with manure, and the result is that the land is not adequately furnished with plant food. Nothing is gained by spreading the manure necessary for five acres over ten times that area, for the smaller the yield the greater the expense of growing a crop in proportion to supply. The largest yields are on small farms, and the profits are greater because less labor is required in hauling and harvesting the crops. The distance in hauling manure regulates the number of loads, but the expense for labor is the same for a few loads as for many, where the handling of the manure is an important matter. It is in the concentration of effort that expenses are lessened. A farm can secure eighty bushels of corn from one acre he will make a larger profit than from forty bushels per acre on two acres, as he will have only one acre to plow and cultivate, and his land will become better every year because of being well manured.

Damaged Grain.

The question of feeding damaged grain is always interesting, anything concerning it acceptable to our readers. Here is a man who is feeding sprouted wheat, making it the morning feed in a daily ration which contains a mash at noon and cracked corn in the evening. His hens are a cross of the Indian Game and Brown Leghorn. Their average for the month is 19 eggs a piece. The wheat is improving hens in the flock. Six were broody at different times during the month. In March and April the flock was fed heavily of buckwheat. The reports for the three months indicate that as an egg producer the buckwheat was very much better than the buckwheat. The price paid for the damaged wheat was 70 cents per bushel, at a time when sound wheat was selling for more than double that figure.

Our Farmer's Experience.

The Toronto Globe says a Canadian farmer who kept 24 cows and 2 hired men tested his cows with the Babcock test and found that 8 were unprofitable. He disposed of them and let 1 hired man go, and at the end of the year found that he had made as much money from the 16 as from the 24. Now he has got down to 12 good cows and expects as much from them as he made from twice that number.



WATERING HORSES

They Should Have an Unlimited Supply to Drink at Will.

It is a very plain fact that it is always best to furnish a horse with an unlimited supply of water which he can take at will. An animal under these conditions will not take too much, but when we take into consideration how few stables there are so fitted as to allow this being carried out, it is in most cases out of the question—the more so as horses are out on long journeys or employed in work, coming to the stable hungry, thirsty and tired. Seventy-five per cent. of the animal body is composed of water, and it is essential the body fluids be that this proportion of fluid and solid constituents be maintained. The secretion and fluid excretions are constantly tending to reduce the fluid parts below the normal, says the Breeders' Gazette, and at no time is this more apparent than after long and active work—the loss resulting from increased perspiration and respiration.

It is at this time that popular opinion would withhold water until the animal cools down, and I have always made it a practice to permit the horse to take what water he requires at that time. When it is warm in all its parts, with all the fluid parts below the normal, says the Breeders' Gazette, and at no time is this more apparent than after long and active work—the loss resulting from increased perspiration and respiration.

It is at this time that popular opinion would withhold water until the animal cools down, and I have always made it a practice to permit the horse to take what water he requires at that time. When it is warm in all its parts, with all the fluids, it is best able to resist the chilling effects of a draught of cold water. The stomach empty the fluid passes into the bowels and is rapidly absorbed, thus supplying the necessary fluid to the blood, without which the various secretions needful to health and vigor cannot be maintained. "The most dangerous time to give a horse a full draught of water," says Dr Dunlop, M. R. C. V. S, in Farmall, "is after he has cooled down from fatiguing work and has partaken of a meal. The comparitively small stomach of that animal is replete with energy, the digestive work, the whole system languid, and not in a state calculated to resist the chill. The water mechanically washes the undigested food from the stomach to the bowels where it undergoes decomposition, evolving irritating and poisonous gases and finally causing diarrhoea and spasmodic colic or fatal enteritis.

Castrating Lambs.

There is always danger in castrating lambs after they are two weeks old, says the Breeders' Gazette, not that the losses may be great, yet if inflammation sets in the chances are against the lamb. Some years ago I suggested that the lamb should now weigh some sixty pounds and more I suggested that they be put forward and sold in June or July without castration. In case castration is attempted I should attend to it in the evening, as it is getting cool, and insert into the scrotum some tallow which has been melted and mixed with turpentine or a little of one of the carbolic dips. This will deter germs of inflammation from entering. Be careful, too, that the lambs are put on clean ground, preferably where no sheep have been for a year or two. Old rams can be castrated by the use of the docking tongs, heated to near whiteness. No blood follows the operation, which is simply to remove the entire scrotum with its contents. Some antiseptic dressing must be applied, such as pine tar or carbolic dip. This operation does not seem to set back the rams. They will hardly lose a feed.

Lolling Tongue.

If a horse puts his tongue over the bit use a straight bit. Get a thick piece of sole leather 4 inches long and 2 inches wide. Trim off the ends round, then punch two holes inches a half inch from the edge on each side, and cut on top of bit with a leather punch. Then soak leather in melted rosin before using, to prevent saliva from affecting the leather. Place bit on top of tongue. Take side pieces of bridle and run through eyes.

If the horse runs his tongue under bit, take a straight bit, drill two holes through it 2 inches apart in front of the mouth piece. Get piece of No. 10 wire, 6 inches long, bent half round; rivet the ends in the holes; then form it in the shape of a figure 8 open. When you put on the bit pull the tongue through between the wire and the bit, being that the space is large enough for it to pass. I have tried this and know it is a success.—J. B. Eaton, Seneca Co., O.

Stunting the Pig.

This may be done in a great many ways. First an unfortunate beginning by being born of stunted parents. See the farmer loses the necessity of feeding the dam—a limited ration or one not suitable to the nourishment of the system and that of the pigs. Then follows scanty feeding after weaning, with the expectation of better feeding after the crops are grown. Fourth, by too little feeding after sucking and after weaning on foods too rich in fat. This last is probably the most expensive of all. For besides the loss of growth, the farmer loses the excessive amount of grain fed. The stunted pig, from whatever cause, is an unprofitable investment on any farm. The thrifty pig is always a pleasure to his owner.

Uniform Color in Cattle.

Farmers are much improved with the importance of good breeding that those who buy stock cattle are very particular as to color. Reds, roans and blacks command a big premium over the ordinary mixed type, and even dealers in stock calves sort them up according to color. Such animals would not make a better gain than other kinds, but buyers realize that they would sell better than fat, everything else being equal. The color fad is not entirely a fad, and, of course, cuts absolutely no figure in the final test on the butcher's block, but there are very few people who are not pleased with the appearance of a lot of animals of uniform color.—Drover's Journal.

Cutworms are fond of fresh, tender young plants, but are yet more fond of sweet substances and also of meat bran. By mixing molasses and bran, 2 qts. to 50 lbs., and adding 1 lb. of Paris green and water enough to make a thick mash, scattering along by the plants, their destruction is assured. Stir the molasses in 1 gal. warm water and pour over the bran and green.

YOUNG CHRISTIANS' AUSPICIOUS EVENT.

Fourteenth Anniversary of Christian Endeavor Society.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH

ABLE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY REV. DEWITT MASON.

Who Spoke of the Advancement That Has Been Made in the Cause of Christianity Since the Dawn of the Christian Era—Some Interesting Statistics From the Secretary and Treasurer's Report.

The Young People's Society of the Christian Endeavor of the Trinity Reformed church celebrated the fourteenth anniversary of their formation Monday evening in the Sunday-school room of the church. The exercises were very interesting and showed that this organization is one of the prominent factors in church work that is highly creditable to the young folks who have identified themselves to the good cause.

Edgar Sheppard, the president of the society, presided. An interesting feature of the exercises was the report of Secretary H. F. Crawford. The report showed that during the year twelve new members had joined, while but four active members had dropped out. There have been 46 meetings held during the year with a total attendance of 2,727, an average of 59. The largest number present at any one time was 120. During the year the society has contributed for all purposes $121.34. The treasurer's report showed that from September 30th, 1898, to September 30th, 1899, there had been received the sum of $49.56 with disbursements of $36.53, leaving a balance in the hands of the treasurer of $13.04.

After the reading of the treasurer's report and Miss Etta Krymer had rendered a solo, President Sheppard introduced Rev. A. DeWitt Mason, of New York, who delivered an interesting and highly instructive address.

The speaker began by comparing these times with those of long ago.

The speaker told how the world has improved through humanitarianism and that in measure we are dependent upon each other for our physical as well as mental well being. Humanitarianism had been of great benefit in assisting the growth of the Christian era. With the close of the nineteenth century, he said, the sun does not set anywhere in this world where the word of God is not heard.

In closing his address Rev Mr. DeWitt referred to the great work that has been done in the foreign missions and the difficulties that had been encountered to develop Christianity in the dark lands. In 1810, when the first missionaries had been sent out, there had been contributed but $23,000, while last year there had been donated for the great work the enormous sum of $3,600,000. As a finale to his most interesting address the speaker impressed upon the members of the Christian Endeavor Society the importance of doing what they could to assist the work and to give as liberally as their means will permit.

Hudson Gas Deal Completed.

The consolidation of all the Hudson county gas companies was formally effected Saturday into the Hudson County Gas Company, with $10,500,000 capital. The new united gas company is part of the United Gas Improvement Company Philadelphia. This syndicate already controls the gas companies of Essex county, and it has now added those of Hudson county. A large gas plant is to be built on the Hackensack meadows, and the price of gas, which is now $1.25 per thousand cubic feet in Hudson county, is to come down unless the promises of the new company are broken.

LITTLE FELLOW BURNED

HE WAS PLAYING WITH MATCHES WHEN THEY IGNITED.

Screams Attracted the Mother's Attention and She Found Him Enveloped in Flames —Though Badly Burned His Life Is Saved

Last Saturday afternoon the 5-year old son of Mr and Mrs. Andrew Judge, of West Second street, opposite Pond's, was playing with some matches, and in so doing his clothes caught fire. He was alone in part of the house at the time, but his cries attracted the attention of his mother, who hastened to where her boy was. She found him enveloped in flames and his life in danger.

About the same time George Gray, who lives in the neighborhood, was near the house and he rendered assistance in extinguishing the flames and saving the boy's life. In removing the burned clothes from the lad's body pieces of flesh were taken also. He was burned severely about the body and suffered intense agony.

A physician was sent for and proper treatment was given. The little fellow is now confined to his bed and still suffers a great deal of pain. However, he will recover, but will be detained to the house for a long time.

The funeral services of Mrs. Thomas R. Crosley were held Sunday afternoon from the late home, 69 Duer street, at 3 o'clock. The house was filled with friends, relatives and neighbors. Rev. Dr. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, of which Mrs. Crosley was a member, conducted the service. He read the scriptures and made a few remarks concerning the exemplary Christian life of Mrs. Crosley and her faithful performance of her Christian duties. Rev. G. W. Gardner, pastor of Grace M. E. church, also spoke words of comfort to the bereaved husband and daughter, and offered prayer. The pall bearers were Jacob Voehl, John Cory, J. H. Derby, Wm. Hewson, Wm. H. Combs, Joseph Humble. Interment was made in Evergreen cemetery.

The funeral services of Mrs. Henry Piker were held yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the house on West Front street, and were conducted by Rev. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church. He spoke comforting words to the bereaved ones and also spoke highly of the life of the departed woman. There was a very large attendance of relatives and friends at the service. Burial took place in Hillside cemetery. Those who acted as pall bearers were County Clerk William Howard and brother, Charles Howard, of Rahway; John Piker and Fred Meiele, of New Providence; John Reiman and Wm. Belter, of this city.

OLD FACES RECOGNIZED.

Rally Day Brought Out Many Who Had Not Been to Sunday-School in a Long Time.

The rally-day exercises at the First Baptist church Sunday-school Sunday afternoon were largely attended by not only members of the school but by many others who have not attended in a long time. Many familiar faces were seen for the first time since the last rally-day and there was a general handshaking and a cordial welcome extended to them by the officers and teachers.

A pleasing programme was arranged for the occasion and included recitations, vocal and instrumental solos, etc. After the opening exercises conducted by Superintendent G. H. Batchelor, a recitation was given by Violet VanWinkle, entitled "Corn-field." The members of the primary department gave a pleasing motion exercise, and sang a selection entitled "God's Love."

A feature of the programme was a soprano solo by Miss Luella Harris, of the church choir, accompanied by Howard Case, organist. This was followed by an address by the superintendent, who gave all a hearty welcome. He spoke of the benefit derived from such events and he spoke of the schools success during the past year.

Another feature was the teaching of the lesson by Miss Cairns, one of the teachers. After a recitation by Beulah VanWinkle, the exercises closed in the usual manner.

BOARD OF HEALTH ACTS.

REPORTS OF PROCEEDINGS STATED AGAINST ORDINANCE VIOLATORS.

A Number of Technical Violations of Health Ordinance Brought to Attention of City Judge Wm. Runyon.

The enforcement of the health ordinance occasionally brings the Plainfield Board of Health into the city court. At the meeting of the board last week, there were a number of cases reported as having been started or completed during the month.

George J. Tobin was found guilty of a technical violation of the plumbing ordinance. Owing to a misunderstanding between Mr. Tobin and one of his employes, work was started before the permit was secured. Sentence was suspended. Daley Brothers, grocers, were found guilty of maintaining a nuisance. They received a crate of eggs which proved to be bad. They were left in the yard and the garbage carter failed to take them away. Health Inspector Addis found the eggs there and made a complaint Judge Runyon suspended sentence.

William Ross, proprietor of the Delmonico Oyster and Chop House on Park avenue, was found guilty by Judge Runyon of a similar offence and was fined. He failed to pay the fine. His lawyers, McClure & Meehan, claim irregularities in the court records of the case. It has been placed in the hands of Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh. The law provides explicitly the means for collecting such fines or for necessary punishment by imprisonment.

It was also reported at the meeting that proceedings were to be begun against Patrick Casey for failing to obey the order of the Board to connect certain buildings owned by him with the city sewer. A warrant has been issued by Judge Runyon, but it has not yet been served.

ALI'S VICTORIOUS ON THE GRIDIRON

Auspicious Opening of Football Season in Plainfield.

DEFEATED WESTFIELD A. C.

LOCAL ELEVEN WON FROM WESTFIELD'S BEST 10 TO 0.

Game Was Played on Martine Common Saturday Afternoon—Witnessed by Big Crowd—Same Old Story of Alis' Fine Play Overcoming Brilliant Individual Work of Visitors—The Touchdowns.

Same old story. The Westfield colors were again trailed in the dust of the gridiron by a Plainfield eleven. The Alis football team defeated the eleven from the Westfield Athletic club on Martine Common Saturday afternoon by a score of 10 to 0. It was the old trouble. While the Westfield boys were just as brilliant in individual play they lacked the system and team work that has always won for the Alis boys and gained another victory for them Saturday. It was a hard fought game, however, and was witnessed by several hundred enthusiasts.

The game marked the opening of the football season in Plainfield. The Plainfield A. A. is now a thing of the past and the Alis team can be considered the representative team of this city. Westfield and the Alis boys are old rivals so many journeyed out Park avenue to witness the first meeting of Sweeney's fall series.

The teams lined up as follows:—

WESTFIELD A. C.		ALIS.
White	right end	Woolston
Wright	right tackle	Waring
Voight	right guard	Kline
Ungrich	center	G. P. Smith
Miller	left guard	Long
Richardson	quarterback	Dumont
Jones (Captain)	right halfback	Finch
Lynde	fullback	Phillips (capt)

Referee—Thomas A. Cuming. Umpire—Thomas D. Smith. Timekeeper—A. Willis West. Linesmen—William Heiby, of Plainfield, and C. Smith, of Westfield. Twenty minutes halves.

Plainfield had the kick-off and Finch sent the ball well down the field. From the first it was evident that Westfield lacked successful team work. Her players were slow in start and the Alis rushers were through the line time after time. Alis soon had the ball and carried it by steady work to within eight yards of Westfield's goal when Cuming circled the end and scored the first touchdown. Dumont failed to kick the goal. Score, Alis, 5; Westfield, 0

There were no long runs but Cuming and Dumont were particularly effective in ground gaining. After the ball had changed hands several times, time was called with the ball in Westfield's possession on the Alis forty-yard line.

Dumont caught Richardson's kick-off in the second half and was downed without gain. Then Woolston slipped round the left end for the longest run of the game, thirty yards. He passed all the Westfield backs except Lynde who tackled him hard. Fair gains by Cuming and Finch into Westfield's territory only to lose it.

Westfield's gains were small but persistent and there was a present of five yards for off-side play. At last, the Alis line stood solid for four downs and Plainfield had the ball. Then the ball went up the field in good shape toward the Westfield goal line. Fifteen yards away Dumont made a clever run around left end and crossed the line for the second and last touchdown of the game. Finch failed to kick the goal. Score, Alis 10; Westfield, 0

For twelve minutes more the fight continued, the Alis boys fighting hard to get the ball into Westfield territory but there were several fumbles that proved costly. Westfield's right end was weak and most of the Plainfield gains were made around it. Time was called with the ball on Alis' forty-five yard line with the home team. At no time was the Alis goal seriously threatened. Westfield's offensive work was too slow to be dangerous.

A WARM WELCOME FOR PASTOR SCHENCK.

A Pleasant Feature of Rally Day at Trinity Church.

LOVING WORDS HEARD.

THE MINISTER HAS BEEN ABSENT TO RECUPERATE HIS HEALTH.

On His Return to His Pastoral Duties the Members of the Sunday-school Gave Him a "Welcome Home" That Evidenced Their Love and Admiration for Him—Touching Response From Minister.

The warm and noticeably spontaneous welcome accorded to Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Ph.D., pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, at the Rally Day exercises of the Sunday-school Sunday afternoon, must have been as gratifying to the beloved minister as it was heartfelt on the part of the members of the church and the teachers and pupils of the school.

The Sunday-school room had been prettily decorated in honor of the home coming of the pastor. Upon a large flag over the desk were the words "Welcome Home" and upon the primary class blackboard "Welcome to the One We Love," was artistically inscribed.

At Sunday's Rally Day exercises, which were held in the Sunday-school room just previous to the recital of the regular lessons, this welcome was extended.

The first came from little Miss Bessie Randall, who, on behalf of the primary department, cordially extended the heartfelt expression of the juvenile department. Miss Cora Laire, representing the main school, was next. Others were Edgar Shepard, of the Bible class, and Fred E Smith, assistant superintendent of the school, who represented the teachers' class. He was followed by Superintendent Anthony, who spoke a brief and loving welcome.

In reply, Dr Schenck said in part:

"These words from the primary department as well as from all parts of the school are words so tender and yet so cheering— Welcome Home.'

"There is, indeed, no place like home and no place as dear as Trinity. There is nothing can take its place in my heart. I am glad to be hear again to look into your faces. I thank you all for the kind words and can assure you that my heart is the full to express exactly how I feel. I heartily appreciate this welcome from you."

In conclusion Dr. Schenck said that he wished the Sunday-school to be a place where character was to be taught, the right spirit cultivated and where souls could be saved. These, he said, were the advantages to be de*rived from attendance at the Sunday*-school, which was opened to all.

The remarks of Pastor Schenck were very affecting and many of the teachers and some of the pupils were noticed to have frequent use for their handkerchiefs. The school then sang beautifully "Blessed Be the Tie That Binds."

Owing to the illness of one of the members, the church choir was not present as had been expected. By request Miss Etta Krymer, the soprano soloist of the choir, rendered very sweetly "Is Not Night if Thou be Near." The interesting exercises were then brought to a close by the primary department singing a well-known hymn. The recital of the regular lesson was then taken up.

At the close of the Sunday-school many of the teachers and not a few of the scholars remained to shake hands with their pastor and personally welcome him home.

Avoid all drying inhalants and use that which cleanses and heals the membrane. Ely's Cream Balm is such a remedy and cures Catarrh easily and pleasantly. Cold in the head vanishes quickly. Price 50 cents at druggists or by mail.

Catarrh caused difficulty in speak*ing and to a great extent loss of hear*ing. By the use of Ely's Cream Balm dropping of mucus has ceased, voice and hearing have greatly improved.—J. W. Davidson, Att'y at Law, Monmouth, Ill.

COURSE OF THIS LOVE LED TO POLICE COURT.

Unusual Experience of Paul Tabbert Trying to Get a Wife.

OUTCOME OF RECEPTION.

POLICE APPEARED AND CARTED OFF GUESTS TO JAIL.

The Affair Given by Tabbert in Honor of His Prospective Bride, Miss Anna Rheinhardt, of New York, Who Visited His Household Sunday—City Judge Runyon Was Lenient With Them.

Paul Tabbert's attempt to make a second entry into the holy state of matrimony has been beset with difficulties. In trying to properly entertain his prospective bride, Sunday afternoon, Tabbert and his choice, with several other guests, wound up in the city jail. An interview with City Judge Runyon resulted in the restoration of their liberty and they departed, Tabbert still enthusiastic in the prospect of obtaining a wife and Miss Annie Reinhart rather in doubt as to the advisability of the step.

Tabbert lives on West Eighth street, beyond Grant avenue. He has lived there for twelve years. His wife died several years ago, leaving him to care for seven children. One is now in the Reform School, three in the Children's Home and three live with their father.

The troubles he encountered in his solitary state decided Tabbert that it was time to find another sharer of his domestic happiness. Then came the finding of a proper housekeeper. Driven to desperation, Tabbert decided to advertise. So an advertisement was inserted in the New York Journal.

"How did you word it?" asked Judge Runyon this morning when Tabbert was relating his experiences in hunting for a wife.

"Wanted, middle-aged woman, to take charge of three children and run regular house," explained Tabbert.

"Running a regular house. That's what you were doing Sunday?" suggested the Judge.

"Dat vas one litti' bit to muchness," and the prisoner smiled.

There were very few answers to his advertisement Tabbert says. One candidate for matrimonial honors appeared, but she was sick, and he didn't want any sick woman for his housekeeper.

Miss Annie Reinhardt had been a domestic in a New York household. She had to work so hard, she said, that she felt she ought to get married.

"Didn't get no chance to get a man, except on the street," and here her hopes rose several degrees in the air, "so I answered his advertisement."

A week ago Annie came out to look over the ground. She came out again Sunday. This time her friend, Miss Mary Stooker, came with her. They were received at Tabbert's home, and then James Duffy and George Green dropped in to see the host.

The strain of Tabbert's matrimonial intentions has had a derogatory effect on his daily duties and Green and Duffy came to warn him that future indiscretions could not be overlooked by their joint employer, George O. Stevens.

Tabbert heard them and then honored the occasion with some wine of his own manufacture. After drinking awhile Duffy went out on the lawn and laid down. Tabbert liked his own production and the police found him waiving a revolver in the air and talking incoherently.

Chief Grant and Roundsman Frederickson visited Tabbert's establishment Sunday afternoon and arrested the whole crowd. Tabbert was afterwards captured by Patrolman Flanagan.

Monday a. m. Judge Runyon heard the story and dismissed the complaint against the two women. There had been no disorder on their part. Annie was undecided whether or not to venture into the matrimonial field, but her companion strongly advised her not to. Sentence was suspended on the three men after Tabbert had solemnly promised to give up liquor, home-made or otherwise, for a month. Tabbert declared that he was quite in love with Annie, despite the fact that the long feather in her golf hat drooped in most sorrowful fashion. He was for being married immediately.

"Come," he remarked after court was over as he pulled at the sleeve of his promised bride, "Vat is de use of waiting? Let us married now immediately." And he smiled a real, loving smile.

To Test the Law.

The legality of the bicycle ordinance regarding riding bicycles without a lamp at night is likely to be tested in Westfield. The bicycle of Fred Donaldson, a boy who lives in Fanwood, was seized Thursday night of last week, by Constable Chamberlin and Justice of the Peace Toucey, because he would not pay a fine of $3 imposed by the Justice of the Peace. Several people have interested themselves in the matter, and propose to test it.

THE TRAGEDY OF LABOR

A Pastor Abandons the Pulpit for Work in a Big Factory.

HIS STRONG FEELINGS.

But He Soon Got Enough and Went Back to His Pulpit Although a Wiser Man.

This Cultured Clergyman Says His Experience Thus Far Tells Him That Preachers Are Being Wrongly Educated — The Tragedy of Human Life.

The Rev. George C. McNutt is looked upon as one of the brightest Presbyterian clergymen Indiana has produced. He has been pastor of one of the largest congregations in Indianapolis. He established the Young Men's Christian Association there. He has been also a successful pastor in New York, California and Illinois.

He left his congregation at Urbana, Ill. He cast aside his clerical garb. He donned the clothes of a laborer. Penniless he went to the hickory fire a respected minister of the gospel transformed into a workman out of a job. Why does not the church of to-day reach the masses? That was the problem he set out to solve. That was why the clergyman became a tramp.

"You can't reach the children through the Sunday schools," the principal of the schools in an Indiana city said to him, and that started him into making an investigation.

"I knew," said Dr. McNutt, "as every one knows, this is a time of theological unrest. I knew that preachers and others were uneasy over the present condition of the churches, especially in the larger cities. I knew that the decline of the Christian religion in the New England States was, or appeared to be, so great as to call for a fast-day proclamation by the Governor of New Hampshire, but I did not realize that right here in Indiana we Hoosiers had drifted so far that the churches no longer represented even the child life of the community.

"Refusing to take an invoice, for fear of the facts, is the worst criminal business policy. What would an invoice of the Indiana churches show?

"Realizing that we preachers are likely to be long on theory and short on facts, and remembering the maxim of Emerson, 'Hunt your facts,' I am on a still hunt for facts, especially for the exact shade of the attitude toward the laboring classes, and of the laboring classes toward the churches.

"To go after such facts in a clerical garb would be like trying to surprise an Indian camp with a torchlight procession and a brass band.

"Attired as a workingman out of a job, I applied for work at the Diamond Chain mills in Atlanta, Ind. I sat down outside the gate and awaited my turn, and having no particular trade was assigned to the labor gang. A fortunate assignment in helping the machinist and master mechanic set up a 'pickler' and big hoisting crane gave chance for occasional breathing spells, but after that was done I took my place with the rest unloading steel billets for ten hours, a day at 15 cents.

"If there is anything monotonous, meaningless, stupefying, it is the steady lift, lift, lift of fifty pounds of steel in a man, averaging about seven or eight tons a day. Just when one's back is about to crack, along comes the boss. Bosses, like some other people, seem to have 'spells,' and it often happens that when the men are working the hardest the boss has a spell, and the fewer the profanity are opened.

"I remembered it occurred to me—and a man is not etymologically responsible for what occurs to him—that if by chance I should be uncovered and land in Andes, I should like to get the job of chief stoker and have charge of the bosses. Once, when a mason came to me to hand him a brick, I went for them with an alacrity with which a hungry dog goes for a bone. The Delsarte system, feathers and the sand like snowflakes.

"Am I an advocate of eight hours a day? An advocate! I am an anarchist on the subject.

"The blast from the great whistle after ten hours' handling of cold steel was as sweet music as will break on the ears of the redeemed. Curiously, that same whistle in the morning sounded like a wail from the depths.

"I listened and learned the meaning of many things never before understood. I can see more clearly, when I look at the dome of some great factory, the man behind the machine, and the little home, however humble, behind the man. Between the lines of the daily telegraphic despatch, 'Workman killed, leaving wife and children,' I can see the tragedy of human life and comprehend more clearly. I believe, the meaning of him in whose sight the laboring man stands as high as the theorbanger of a trust, who says, 'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.'

"After fourteen days and a half I found it necessary to lay off from my first job for repairs and reflection.

"'Is it not possible,' was one of my reflections, 'that our schools are turning out mechanistic lebedeums, theological rosebuds, who, having passed sixteen to twenty years through the hands of the polishers, are fitted only to shine in the drawing room of polite society rather than to be ministers also to and of the common people?'

"'Would it not be well to withhold the diploma of grace and give the senior a jumper, a pair of overalls, $5, and a ticket 1,000 miles away from home? After a year spent earning a living with toilers, making $1 a day, would he not be better fitted to present himself for holy orders?' This, of course, is on the assumption that a millhand is an unbeliever. His Master, who was a son of toil and was tempted in all points like as we are.

"'Are churches often affected by similar unsentimental meanness?' Is there as much joy over a sinner that repenteth—a farm hand, a bricklayer, a member of the labor gang or a ditcher—as over a young preacher, or one professor who 'comes to the church?'"

A STARTLING STORY.

Public Traffic in Human Souls in Berlin.

The increase in the number of Berlin restaurants employing waitresses has occasioned the rise of an extensive business in "Waitress Girls as White Slaves." That these girls are practically slaves is beyond doubt. Merchants engaged in this trade are mostly from Poland and Galicia, and they are well acquainted with the eastern provinces of the German Empire. They are continually traveling through there among the villages and small towns on the lookout for suitable merchandise. The girls must be young, fairly good looking, healthy and with attractive figures.

The merchant, as soon as he hears of such a girl, puts himself in communication with her and, by fair outward promises regarding her future in Berlin, persuades her, especially if she feels the pinch of poverty, to travel to Berlin. There she will tell her merchant's partner to be put in a way of earning a livelihood, the girl signing a paper pledging herself to pay a considerable sum, as merchants are fond of saying, "in case of failure." But the partner is bleeding her all the time while supplying her with fine clothes, a nice room, etc., and, notwithstanding the kindness of guests and liberal tips, she is gradually robbed of every penny she possesses, until she finds a refuge from her prosecutors on the streets.

The merchants have usually a large number of girls on hand. They are known in trade as "boxes." The partner in Berlin, for instance, will telegraph to an agent in the provinces: "Send me four cases, not too large or thick, with nice roping."

He means, "Send me four girls, medium height as to figure and well dressed. He will telegraph for "Two white boxes and one brown," meaning "Two blonde girls and one brunette." "A double box" is a girl speaking two languages.

There are now over 1,100 girls employed in this way in Berlin. Although a vast majority of these are poor country girls, it is curious to note that many of them are from the better classes of society. Two of them are wives of officers, five are officers' daughters, 15 used to be school teachers, eight were actresses, one a japanese daughter of a Count and a Polish Countess. The police have their eyes on these merchants, and if the traffic continues there will be a ventilation of their methods in the courts.

AN EASY MARK.

How Casey of Detroit Was Bunco'ed Out of $250.

Jeremiah Casey, farmer and Irishman, was in the city yesterday. Mike, who returned on the Oceanic from a trip to Ireland, was recently bunco'ed out of $250 in Brooklyn by one of the easiest games that confidence men work on hayseeds or gullible persons generally.

The farmer left his hotel in Manhattan to take a walk across the bridge. In the centre of the promenade he stood for a few minutes, when a stranger tapped him on the back and said:

"Be me sowl, if it isn't Casey!" The farmer opened his eyes in astonishment at the familiarity and said: "Faith, you're right, I'm Casey."

"Shure, I know it mon alive!" the stranger rattled on, imitating the brogue. "Whin and how are ye Casey, and did ye lukke your trip to the ould country, and how are the folks in Daytroit, Casey?"

"Daytroit" was the clincher. The men shook hands and walked toward Brooklyn, up Fulton street as far as Court street, when they bumped another man came running up breathlessly, and to Casey's new-found friend said: "Say, old man, I've been running after you for a block. I've got the deal in all right, and I've chartered the cattle steamer."

"Ah, but you're the smart mon. Now we'll be able to ship our cattle," said Casey's companion.

"Oh, by the way," said the second confidence man, "I've got a check for $250 here, and as I'm in a hurry for cash, old man, I'd like you to cash it for me."

"Me friend," said the other man, undisposed me cash before laving the office, and nary a thing have I here but checks. I'm divilish sorry I can't oblige ye."

"Too bad, too bad," said the other. "I wanted to send a draft to the West on account of that last consignment."

"But shure," said Casey, "it's the folkes of me dear friend, Casey, that is obliging. Shure, I know he wouldn't see ye stuck, would you, Casey?"

Poor innocent Casey, not knowing that in his pocket and handed 450 pounds in notes on the Bank of Ireland, with the coupons, that he regretted he did not have any more ready cash with him. No. 2 thanked him and disappeared.

Scientists assert that early man used to be able to wag his ears at will. Education of pleasure, or to brush away flies from under his back hair; but as time went on and he began to live into continual a re they became rudimentary, and

AILEEN'S JOURNEY.

A STORY FOR THE YOUNG.

Aileen always thought Sunday was the longest day in the week. Besides, it was painful.

"O dear," she sighed, "how I wish I had lived in olden times, when wonderful things happened every day, and fairies would greet you three wishes at a time!" And just then a wonderful thing did happen, so wonderful, indeed, that Aileen stopped right in the middle of a big sob, and remained there with mouth and eyes wide open.

Right in front of her, on the window sill, there stood the queerest little figure! She had to rub her eyes and pinch herself to make sure that she was really awake and not dreaming. But, no! it was true, there stood a real fairy godmother, exactly like the picture in her "Grimms's Tales." The sharp, little face, the quilted skirt, the tiny, buckled shoes, the slender wand with the twinkling star at the top, all looked as familiar as could be to the surprised little girl.

"You wished for me," said the fairy in a thin, sweet little voice, "and here I am. Once in every hundred years, at a certain hour on a certain day, we have the power to grant a mortal's wish." Now, while the fairy was speaking, a strange thing had happened to Aileen. All her half frightened surprise had passed away, and she felt as light and airy as a butterfly. Instead of towering above the tiny figure before her, she found her face was on a level with the fairy's head, and she was not one bit surprised to find that her Sunday frock of pink lawn had changed to a flower like garment, that her tan shoes and stockings had like the petals of a rose.

"I know the dearest wish of your heart," continued the fairy, "it is to take a trip to Fairyland, is it not?" And as Aileen smiled and nodded her head, the fairy advanced and took her by the hand. "Come, then, grow a little," she murmured, and in a moment they found themselves outside the windows in the cool, flower-scented air. Aileen could never tell you how it happened, but she found herself floating far above the earth, using with ease and delight the tiny gauze-like wings that carried her with the speed and grace of a bird. The rain was over and a beautiful rainbow stretched across the sky above them. Toward this the fairy led the way and without a question Aileen followed. It seemed to her that the rainbow bow was but a splendid curtain that divided the world she had known from the strange country whither the fairy was taking her. Quite enough, indeed, they drew near she could dimly see many tiny figures on the other side.

With the tip of her wand the fairy lifted one corner of the rainbow, and Aileen followed closely after into the enchanted land of which she had often dreamed, but which she had never hoped to visit. Aileen had never seen a picture of a fairy-home, indeed she had never imagined the fairies had any need of one. But now the thought struck her that flying might, in time, grow as tedious as walking, and she watched with great interest the winged steeds and their riders.

At last one of them caught sight of Aileen and her fairy guide, and with a sudden movement, blew a shrill blast on a golden horn. Like an echo, a clear sweet strain rose on the air, and through the music the words ran like a silver thread of song:

"Welcome, welcome one and all
Where the rainbow-curtains fall,
Eager heart and ready hand
Greet the guests in Fairyland."

In a moment Aileen found herself in the center of the group on the border of the lake. One kindly fairy ushered her to a seat on a tiny toadstool covered with a cushion of swandown, and other handed her a cup of fragrant lily-of-the-valley and filled with distilled dew, a drink the most delicious that she had ever tasted. They were the kind that Aileen felt not at all like a stranger, but was soon at her ease and busy chatting with them. She was so busy looking about her that she never even missed her fairy guide, who had vanished at the first note of the golden horn that had greeted their entrance.

She noticed that not all of the fairies were idle. Many after one curious glance or gentle smile in her direction kept on at their work that evidently had stopped for the moment. One busy fairy was carefully directing the work of hundreds of spiders, who were spinning threads of gold and shining silken webs of mingled hues, like the glorious rainbow curtain through which Aileen had taken her first peep into Fairyland.

It was a great surprise to Aileen to find that fairies had their work to do, just like mortals in the world she had left behind. She was also surprised that they spent their time in dancing, and that all their simple wants were supplied without labor or care of any sort. And, as if in answer to her thoughts, the fairy who had led her to her seat now approached and asked in a voice as musical as the silvery tinkle of a bell, so clear and sweet was it, if there were any questions she would like to ask.

"I have," said the fairy, "that everything is quite strange to you, who have always lived in the other world, but with us it is far different. We have no work and no sorrow, but even mortals dwell, and to share unknown to them their joys and sorrows.

"Often," continued the fairy, "have I watched you at your work and play, and many a time I have peeped at you through a cloudmist, or from behind the wing of my butterfly steed. Perhaps you have forgotten one summer day when you gathered daisies in the field and were them into a chain—"

"Yes!" interrupted Aileen, quite excited at the thought, "and as fast as I used them it seemed to me that others were ready in their places. That was the longest chain I ever made, and yet it was not tired a bit!"

The fairy laughed softly, and it seemed to Aileen that there was quite a sparkle of mischief in her bright blue eyes.

"No wonder you were not tired," she cried. "It was I who worked to gather the daisies as fast as you could weave them together."

And again the fairy laughed at the wonder and surprise that were so plainly written on Aileen's face.

And with heart beating fast with excitement and pleasure, Aileen rubbed her eyes, and, lo, she was back in her own home again.

A CHEAP CAMERA.

It Can be Made From a Cigar Box and Some Tin.

A camera can be made by any fairly deft amateur with the following materials: A cigar box, a piece of tin an inch square, 12 small nails, some glue, and a narrow strip of tin an inch long. Make of one side of the cigar box a little box just large enough to take a square, with one end left open. Blacken the inside with ink. Cut a hole one-fourth of an inch across in the end of the box opposite the open one. Bend the tin at the side edges of this hole. Drill a hole the size of a pin point in the centre of an inch square piece of tin and glue it inside the box over the hole in the wood the hole in the tin making a lens. Make a plate holder by gluing into the four corners of the box four thin pieces of wood, exactly long enough to keep each of each resting on the end of the box where the lens has been placed. Make the lid to the camera of wood, which possess of cigar box wood, blacken it on the inside, and on the centre of the inner side fasten a strip of tin an inch long, every bit as wide as the lid, in a semi-circle, with the centre fastened to the lid. This tin strip, when the lid is put on, will hold the plate in place. The camera is ready for dry plate measuring 2½x2½ inches.

A Lost King.

In olden times when European kings were as plentiful as Kentucky Colonels now to-day, it was not an unusual occurrence for a King to disappear and never be heard of again. In recent times, however, the people have been more careful of their Kings. So when King Sebastian of Portugal disappeared in battle July 29, 1578, while fighting Moors at Alcazar, there was a great commotion. The Moors surrendered to the Portuguese a body said to be that of the King, but it was rumored that the blood on the face of King in custody. The surrendered body was buried with royal honors at Belem, but the faithful Portuguese persisted in waiting for their lost King. So when Long after he would have died in the course of nature his country men longingly awaited his coming. Even up to this day in the Azores Islands the people of King Sebastian is believed by many, and on stormy nights credulous Portuguese citizens will wrap their cloaks about them and go to the sea-side and watch the storm, thinking that the King may appear in a cloud of fire and again rule over the people.

The Game of Sentences.

The game of "Composing Sentences" is one which has the advantage of making people think. It requires a quickly show which player has the most active mind. The idea is to deal out a dozen cards, each having some word on it, distributed on it, to the players—such cards as are used in word games, or they may be made for the purpose.

All hastily turning over a letter at the same time. As soon as the letters are seen the sentence has to be devised, using them all as the initial letters. The first to have a sentence ready in sequence of them is given a point on the score card; then new letters are turned up and sentences are made until one of the players reaches 10 points.

Of course it is necessary to have a large quantity of cards, so that when dealt out there will be a variety of letters. The game becomes lively as personal sentences suggest themselves, and it affords good practice in the formation of grammatical sentences.

A Moving Mountain.

There is a mountain of dark brown lava in the Columbia River nearly 2,000 feet in height and stretching along the stream for six or eight miles. When the white settlers first came into this region they were surprised to find that this mountain was traveling; that some day it would move across the Columbia and form a lake that would reach from the Cascades to the Dalles. Long the Indian said has been found true in some respects. The mountain is in motion. Its movement is forward and downward. The railroad builders who construct their line along the base found the track continually forced out of place. In some places the movement was considerable, as much as a foot in a few years. Geologists say this is because the mountain rests on soft sandstone, which is steadily being washed away by the current of the big river.

How Amber is Made.

Amber is the product of a gum from a cone-bearing tree. Thus it is closely akin to resin, but by nature's own wonderful processes the soft gum formation has been transformed to a composition that is durable, capable of withstanding fire, and is known as amber. A large proportion of them are entirely unknown to-day. Part of the amber is found under the sea. And all of it is surrounded in mystery of prehistoric life and vegetation.

The Funny Bone.

That which is popularly known as the "funny bone" is not a bone at all, but a nerve that lies near the surface, and which, on getting a blow or knock, causes the well-known tingling sensation in the arms and fingers.

Oysters are such nervous creatures that a sudden shock, such as a loud thunderclap, will kill a whole boatload.

WOMEN ON THE FARM

HOW THEY PRACTICE AGRICULTURE WITHOUT THE AID OF MAN.

Those Who Are Successful in One State—Stories That Teach a Lesson of Pluck and Independence for Women.

In every one of the 105 counties of Kansas there are fine farms owned and operated by women without the aid of men. The owners are women of pluck and perseverance, who have overcome all the difficulties that confront the farmers of the West, and in most instances their labors are rewarded with complete success.

The story of Mrs. Anna Lembach Neosho County's woman farmer, is full of interest. Mrs. Lembach lives four miles northwest of Erie. She has a comfortable home, a quarter section of excellent land and money at interest. All this represents the saving, scrimping, thrift and foresight of twelve years as a woman farmer. Mr. Lembach died in 1887. When his widow came to take stock of his available assets she found that they were a stout heart and a quarter Section of partially raw land. There was a mortgage of $1,200 on the farm and other obligations aggregating more than $500. In the house were six little children, the eldest a boy of 11 years. Then it was that Mrs. Lembach put her hand literally to the plow, and until her children grew into manhood and womanhood, she followed in the furrows of her own maidof-all-work. She plowed and planted, sowed and reaped, not by proxy, but with her own hands. She kept the expenses of cigar box wood, blackened it on the inside, and on the centre of the inner side fasten a strip of tin an inch long, every bit as wide as the lid, in a semi-circle, with the centre fastened to the lid. This tin strip, when the lid is put on, will hold the plate in place. The camera is ready for dry plate measuring 2½x2½ inches.

(Mrs. Anna Lembach.)

ment of her part of the estate, and her unselfish devotion to the children manifest. Things moved under her direction. Few farmers cooperate hired help to better advantage. Everything runs like clockwork. She looks after all her business matters in person, watches the markets, directs the planting, the cultivation and the harvest. In fact, she is the supreme monarch of her large farm and all her business affairs.

One of the most remarkable young women of Kansas is Miss Leah A. Kisled, who owns 320 acres near Industry, Dickerson County. She performs the entire work of her farm without the assistance of a man. Miss Kisled is 25 years old, and was brought up on the farm where she now resides. In recent years she has been the main support of a widowed mother, about three years ago she took lively active management of the farm. Her health was poor, but farm work proved of great benefit to her, and she says it has made her strong and well. To hold her good health if she did not remain outdoors constantly. This year she had eighty acres of fine corn. Then she had 2,000 bushels of wheat. She not only plowed the ground for this wheat, but she sowed the grain, cultivated it herself and shocked the corn. She can handle horses with any man in Dickinson County. In addition to raising a big wheat and corn crop this year, Miss Kisely raised several acres of oats, took charge of a herd of cattle, attended to the little garden, looked after her fruit trees and did all the work connected with the farm. The whole country admires her pluck, and the neighbors admit that she can give any of the men pointers on how to run a Kansas farm profitably.

Mrs. Nels Peterson is another prosperous farmer. She owns a good farm near Pleasanton, Linn County. For five years, from 1888 to 1893, her husband was an invalid. During all this time and since Mrs. Peterson has managed the farm and made money and laid by a little. She is industrious and an excellent financier. Her farm is well improved. Mrs. Peterson's principal source of income is from the sale of milk to the creamery. She keeps hogs, which are raised and prepared for the market. Mrs. Peterson is healthy and strong, and drives the best teams in Linn county.

Eight years ago General W. R. Brown, who owned 200 acres of land in Independence, died, leaving his widow alone. She took up the thread of farm work and has successfully managed the estate. Mrs. Brown has made wheat growing a specialty, the greater part of her land being rich bottom. The upland she has turned to account mainly for dairy farming and the grazing of stock of the adjacent town of Independence, but she grows corn, clover and millet, as the seasons dictate.

Mrs. J. O. Martin is Kearney County's most successful woman farmer. Her husband died in 1889, and Mrs. Martin was left with three children to support. She took hold of the farm and gave her whole time to the work. She raised cattle and grain and makes money right along. She has cleared the mortgage off her farm and lives well. Her farm is located in the Arkansas Valley. Mrs. Martin owns two windmills and an irrigating plant.

The leading woman stock raiser of Kansas is Miss Mary Best, of Barber County. She came from England to Medicine Lodge ten years ago and soon after engaged in farming ad stock-raising. With the assistance and opinion of ex-Congressman Jerry Simpson, Miss Best owns the finest farm in Barber County. She owns and controls 3,000 acres of land, 700 acres of which is in cultivation. She is dealing exclusively in cattle, and now has on her ranch near Medicine Lodge about 2,000 head, of which 700 head are her own and the balance she is holding for other parties. Miss Best handles from 2,000 to 3,000 head annually, and has always made money. She also has a contract with the United States Government to grow 450 bushels of sorghum seed. The seed is furnished by the Agricultural Department and is, without doubt, the finest grade in the world. Miss Best is a young woman of more than ordinary intelligence, and is known all over Barber County for her good business sense and her ability to manage a large farm. Her good sense may be attested by a number of young Barber County farmers who have sought her hand and heart in marriage, but who have die mally failed. The young lady says she can take care of herself.

Near the Missouri and Kansas line, in Linn County, Mrs. Mary J. Reese owns and successfully operates a large farm of 240 acres. She is a typical independent woman farmer. Her farm is worth $4,000, and she has $1,000 loaned out to the neighboring farmers.

The Misses Martha and Carrie James are two Osage County sisters who are running a farm entirely without the help of a man. Miss Martha James is 30 years old, and her sister Carrie is 20.

Both are natives of Kansas.

Hundreds of women are operating farms in Kansas, and in every instance they have prospered.

How to Move a Bureau.

"How in the name of time are we going to move this bureau without taking the drawers all out?" was the doleful inquiry. The family had been moving and cleaning house; and just as they seemed to see their way out of the muss, there stood that bureau in the way, with drawers stuffed so full that to remove them meant to spill half their contents. Neither a gas fitter nor the dismemberment and tedious reassembling was very inviting, and we were all ready to despair, but that is all but one of us did. "Where is that shelf?" was his inquiry. A thick, stout board about three feet long was brought, and the bureau first forward and then backward he soon had the board under the legs at one end. "Now," said he, bald-headed end of that broom under," said he, as he tipped up bureau and shelf together. The smooth broomstick was placed under the board between the bureau legs. The assistant, who was beginning to catch the idea, took hold of the broom by the brush end, the man of science took hold of the other end of the bureau and balanced it on the broomstick—much easier done than one would think—and we were "off in a hands." In less than a minute we had write this the heavy piece of furniture had been taken through a long suite of rooms, through a side door and into a sleeping room. A few deft manipulations shoved into its allotted corner. "It's all in knowing how," said this domestic engineer. "A colored man told me that scheme; he's dead now, poor fellow."

He deserves a monument.—Fredonia Up-to-Date.

Her Old Age.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton says: "I consider old age the hey-dey of life, the grandest of all periods to live to mental. We have learned to weigh things by the right standards and to judge more correctly. Our views are broader, our sympathies deeper, our whole knowledge of life's work deeper and truer. Clearer vision comes as the years go by. I say unhesitatingly that no woman reaches the fullest mental development until after she is fifty. The greatest blessing of old age is health. Without that life palls upon us at any stage. Even in the decrepitude of age it comes leisure. We have time to think, to read, to watch the fulfillment of our hopes and to rejoice in the stride of progress."

Teach Children to Read Aloud.

A careful mother will take great pains to teach her children to read aloud acceptably. Much time and money are often expended in cultivating the voice for singing, and yet quite as much pleasure may be given by the person who reads aloud in a pleasing manner. No attempt need be made at elocution as the word is ordinarily understood; distinct articulation and proper emphasis so as to convey easily to the hearer the meaning of the sentences read are all that is necessary.—October Ladies' Home Journal.

Quaint old Matthew Henry says: She was not made out of his head to top him, but out of his side to be trampled on, but out of his side to be equal to him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved.

TO RESTORE THE DEAD.

Astonishing Results of a New York Physician's Extensive Experiments.

MAY BE APPLIED TO MAN.

Infusion of Defebrinated Blood Restores the Silent Heart's Action in Many Instances.

This Physician's Assertions Would Show That Electricity Does Not Kill Instantly—But Fresh Blood Must be at Hand in Case of an Emergency.

Dr. Richard H. Cunningham, of Columbia University, New York, asserts that he can bring the dead to life when death has been caused by an electric shock.

Dr. Cunningham has for a long time been engaged in making experiments on dogs, turtles and frogs. He states that it has been demonstrated beyond contradiction that an animal apparently killed by contact with an electric current can, and in many cases does, live and circulation have ceased, may be brought back to life.

It is also asserted by Dr. Cunningham that an ordinary industrial electric current, such as is used in performing legal executions in New York State, does not produce instant death, and that if it is applied in time in instant readiness suitable apparatus, the suspended vital functions and consciousness would be restored.

Experiments which have been made according to the proposition establish the fact that in cases where death follows an electric shock, it is not caused by paralysis of the heart, but by changes in tissues to which death has heretofore been attributed, but to fibrilear contraction of the heart, which results in a condition of the nervous system. In cases of this kind, it is claimed, death is preceded by a period of consciousness, during which the recipient of the shock feels, but at the same time it is improbable that there is accompanying sensation of pain.

Dr. Cunningham says that it is only in the case of an electric shock where in the current is so strong that all the tissues are cooked, and the nervous system is also destroyed, that death is instantaneous.

Particular interest is attached to Dr. Cunningham's experiments because of the opinion now prevailing among accidental deaths due to the greater use of electricity, and also because of the electrocution of criminals, doubt having arisen in certain quarters as to the desirability of this means of legal killing.

Dr. Cunningham, as a result of his experiments, believes that while a criminal might not die immediately from the effects of the application of an electric current, it is not probable that he would survive long after the time he has passed to the operating table, it being unlikely that the nervous system has continued to exist for so long a time. He does not believe the victim is not dead. It is the nervous system that has received the shock and exhausted its vitality.

Because a man's respiration and circulation have been suspended he has not positively passed the point where death is beyond the power of restoration. Dr. Cunningham would not, in such cases, attempt to induce artificial respiration, a system to which resuscitators usually resort, which Dr. Cunningham believes to be useless. In his laboratory he has an apparatus which he has used in experiments upon dogs. He has found it particularly necessary to have some fresh blood on hand. He found it preferable to have blood from animals of the same species.

In describing the experiments being under the same conditions, Dr. Cunningham believes human blood would be necessary.

In describing the experiments which he has made with dogs, frogs, turtles, etc., as subjects, Dr. Cunningham says: "The quivering is the result of fibrillar contraction. In this condition the heart can be restored to its functions by the profusion of its blood vessels with warm defibrinated arterial blood, diluted with an eight per cent. saline solution. By means of it I have repeatedly caused the fibrillating heart to arrest its action. I have killed a body of dogs apparently killed by electricity to beat co-ordinately for an hour. This clearly disproves the fact that muscular action has been paralyzed or killed by the current.

"I have endeavored repeatedly to electrocute frogs and small turtles with the 133 volt continuous dynamo current, but none could be killed, and all the frogs fully recovered within a few minutes. According to the concensus of opinion, nervous death of the subject by electric shock agree that such a death is instantaneous.

"From my tracings recording the muscular and nervous contractions, from the experiences of three of my patients who have received severe shocks, and from the published accounts of the post mortem discovery after electric shocks, there seems to be ample time before loss of consciousness occurs for the recipient of the shock to realize that he is aware that he is, or has been, in contact with an electric current. Thus, every one of the nineteen mentioned felt some very distinct form of sensation before consciousness was lost. Generally speaking, the sensation was not exactly painful, and was described by those who had received it as the sensation produced by catching hold of the electrodes of a small but strong medical induction coil.

"After an apparently fatal shock has been received from a current the proper measures are to restore quickly the circulation not only of the blood, but also to keep it from clotting, but also of the heart, so that it may quickly recover its co-ordinate contractions.

"As far as I know there is but one way in which this may possibly be accomplished—namely, by creating artificially a temporary circulation of a fluid capable of sustaining the heart and the nervous system until the heart has recovered sufficiently to maintain the circulation in the normal manner.

TALENTED VIOLINIST.

Young Yankee Girl Plays Before a Crowned Head.

Miss Leonora Jackson, who is to make her debut in New York this season, is an attractive girl in her early twenties. She was born in Boston, and when a very young child she showed signs of the great talent which has since developed. Wealthy persons interested themselves in her and sent her abroad, where she has been successful from the beginning. Her principal teacher was Joachim, and she was studying with him when she won in 1896 the most desired of prizes, the Mendelssohn medal. Since then she has played successfully before all the great musical authorities of the continent. She has played in Leipsic, in Paris and in London. Last spring she was summoned to Windsor to play for the Queen, and before she comes to this country will play there again.

To Make Good Coffee.

To make good coffee you will find it necessary to have a vessel that is broad at the bottom and narrow at the top. On the continent, where it is as rare to have a bad cup of coffe as it is to have a good one in England, the coffee is never boiled, as it is considered that this method spoils the flavor Here is a simple recipe for making good coffee: Have a flannel shaped bag sent of loose white flannel. Put inside the bag one large teaspoonful of coffee for every cup you wish to obtain and one extra spoonful for boiling water, one cup for every spoon of coffee, let it filter through the bag into the vessel which is placed beneath. When the water has filtered through the bag, if the coffee is not black enough the operation may be repeated, and then the pot should be placed on the stove to make the coffee hot, without boiling it. The fireproof pots now sold very cheaply are excellent for making coffee in. Another point to consider is that of the milk. Many people serve luke-warm or cold milk with it; in either of these states the coffee can be really good. The milk must be absolutely boiling, so that it froths up in the pan before it can be considered fit to add to the coffee.

Cake and Bread Boxes.

Cake boxes with double trays, that swing out to afford easy access to each, are a considerable improvement over the old style. Bread boxes, too, are much improved. The patent one is self-closing, and takes forever out of the mouth that oft-repeated injunction to the cook: "Keep the bread box shut." The bread receptacle is cylindrical in shape, and revolves, pulling open like the covers of some of the small boxes, to spring back into place the moment the hand releases it. These boxes are made sufficiently long to hold loaves of French bread, and cost from $3.50 up, according to size. All bread boxes are made now with ventilating holes, to keep their contents from geting musty.

No More Old Women.

Happily no woman is ever old now, unless she chooses to be. The day is passed when the matron is relegated to the back parlor and allowed to wear only black silk, with an occasional black alpaca for a dissipation. Nowadays the mother dresses just as young as her daughters, and no one can say that she or her looks suffer from the change. She has as many partners as her daughters if she dances, and as usually does. Perhaps it is the change in the way of living, as well as in the change of dress, that has made a young woman of the matron, even after her fortieth year has passed.

Save Nasturtium Seeds.

Pickled nasturtium seeds are a good substitute for capers and are a pleasant as well as artistic garnish to a salad. The seeds should be pickled green. Leave a short stem on them and place them in a weak brine. For two days you can soak them in fresh water for a day. Pack them in jars and turn boiling vinegar over them. Seal and keep for a month before using.

Indian Pancakes.

One pint Indian meal, one teaspoonful of salt, mixed with enough boiling water to make a little thinner than mush. When cold add the yolks of four eggs, half a cup of flour sifted with three teaspoonfuls baking powder, enough sweet milk to make batter as for griddle cakes, and the beaten whites of four eggs, added just before baking.

Welsh Rarebit.

One pound cheese, grated, one large tablespoon butter, one tablespoon tomato catsup, one-quarter teaspoonful each mustard and salt, dash of red pepper. Cook in a double boiler, stirring all the time until smooth and thick. Serve on hot dipped and buttered toast.

INDIANA AMISHMEN

COLONY OF A QUEER SECT LIVING ON FARMS.

Laws Made at Home—One Man Owns as Much Property as His Neighbor. They Are All Happy and Content in Their Way of Living.

Ten miles northeast of Washington, Ind., there is a fertile section of land owned and cultivated by a peculiar race of people known as the Amish. Little is known of them except by the people living in the immediate vicinity of their settlement.

The Amish came to this country at an early date, and brought rich farms for a nominal price. They have added greatly to their possessions until now this settlement takes up thousands of acres. Their peculiar manners and customs are interesting.

According to their religious beliefs the Amish are not allowed to use buttons on their clothes. Instead of buttons they use hooks and eyes. Their clothing is homespun, and they wear black slouch hats. All Amishmen let their hair grow long and fall over their shoulders. They are bearded, not even when young men. They invariably drive fine, big horses. They prefer death rather than to swear in court. They are an economical set of people and are great traders. They seldom pay cash for anything, but always insist on trading farm products and poultry for what they want.

Their settlement is divided up into farms of an equal number of acres. They adhere strictly to the code of laws handed down to them by their ancestors. One of these laws is to the effect that no Amishman in the settlement shall be allowed to own more of the world's goods than his neighbor. Consequently the farms are about the same size and stocked equally. Another law says if one member of the settlement meets with misfortune his neighbors must go down in their pockets, pay his indebtedness, and, if necessary, buy him a new start in life.

The Amish originally came from a county in one of the Eastern States. There are a few families still living in the East, but the great bulk of descendants of the Eastern families emigrates to the Indiana settlement he is immediately presented with a farm equal in size to those of his brethren. The Amish do not believe in courts, that is, they never settle any of their difficulties in the courts. All disputes and disagreements are referred to and taken up for settlement by a majority of the members of the settlement. It is, however, a case in point when that the least trouble arises among them. They are law abiding, honest, and truthful. They do not deposit their money in banks, but accumulate and hoard it in their homes. They raise all the farming products usually grown in this section of the country, and are said to be the most successful poultry raisers in the United States.

Their every day life is their religion. They speak the German language, and no one but the Amish are allowed in educating their children, and start them, boys and girls alike, to work in the fields when young. The women and girls do all the washing and ironing, and farm machinery, and he was given strict orders never again to put his foot on property owned by any member of the settlement. Two or three weeks he allowed his beard to grow to its full length, discarded his new clothes for the old, and returned to his people. Long finally received him and returned his property to him.

Another Amishman, while doing his grinding in Washington, became struck with the idea of wheeling. He purchased a bicycle and went gleefully home, to show the machine to the members of the family. The Amishmen of the settlement looked wise and called a mass-meeting to decide whether or not it was proper for one of their number to indulge in such a contrivance as a bicycle. The verdict of the elder heads was against the young Amishman, and he was compelled to part with the wheel.—Indianapolis News.

Story of Edison.

It is not every one that understands the ordinary system of banking and the proper thing to do with a bank check. Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe was sorely puzzled over the huge check her publishers paid her for her royalties in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and her husband could not persuade her to get money on it. So, also, was it with Tom Edison when he got his first check. When he completed his model of his now famous quadruplex he submitted it to the president of a telegraph company, who asked him to leave it for examination. Edison was out of money and his landlady had warned him to pay his bill or he had decided to ask $5,000 for his invention, but when the president at the next interview asked his price his courage oozed out of him and he faltered out that he would like to have the company make an offer.

"How would $40,000 suit you?" said the president.

"What!" exclaimed the young wizard, "all in money?"

"Certainly, you can have it now."

"All right."

A check was drawn and handed over to Edison with these words: "That is a check for $40,000. Go to the bank around the corner and they will give you the money."

At the bank he got into the long line and worked up to the paying teller's window. Then he pushed the check over the sill. The teller saw that it was a certified check and said so, back with fitting remarks, which Edison did not understand, he being even then slightly deaf. He retired crestfallen and the line of the check and see that he had been swindled. He had another scene with his landlady that night and visited the telegraph president the next morning in sheer desperation. He told of his experience at the bank and begged for his money or his model. He was properly identified at the bank, indorsed the check and got his money in big bills.—New York Press.

ALL FOR A PENNY.

How a Young Bachelor Got Over His Annoyance.

It was obvious that he was a young bachelor, and it was equally obvious that the child annoyed him. He was going east in a Fifty-ninth street car. He had evidently been in a hurry, and was going to make a call. That was the inference from the careful scrutiny he gave his faultless attire the instant he paid his fare, and the assurance he gave himself that he had his card case all right. Then came the incident of the child.

Accompanied by his mother, who carried a large bundle and was poorly dressed, the four-year-old entered the car at the front, and immediately took possession of the side of the car upon which the young man was sitting. There were only three other passengers.

Climbing upon the seat the child proceeded to rush up and down, shouting out of the window. At a lurch of the car the child planted one dusty foot on the young man's trousers and clutched at him for support. The young man frowned, dusted his clothes and glanced at the mother. She expostulated with the child in vain, but to no purpose. That also annoyed the young man, for, being a bachelor, he believed in strict discipline for children.

Something about the youngster's chubby fist and he set up a pout.

"You've lost one of your pennies out of the window. I told you you would. Now give the fare to me," was the mother's comment. The young bachelor looked pleased.

There was one more romping for the child. He wept until Madison avenue was reached. There the motorman left his post long enough to lift him to the step of the platform, along with her bundle. She was so astounded at the unexpected politeness that she forgot to thank him.

While the departure of the woman, the bundle and the child the young bachelor gave a contented sigh and looked at his watch. Then he caught sight of a penny on the seat beside him. The look of annoyance came back. Then he did a queer thing. He grabbed the penny and signalled the conductor to stop. The conductor did it, although he had just started it. The crusty young bachelor sprang from the car, sped back across the avenue and caught the penny into the hand of the child who was still crying. Then he turned to look at the car he had left, and behold! he was waiting for him. The conductor and motorman had witnessed the performance. Both were smiling as he clambered aboard. They were still smiling when he left the car at Lexington avenue. Then they laughed.—New York Herald.

As Good as His Word.

Among the first of the men who sought gold around the timber line of Grey's Peak came "Mike." He said he came from Ireland by way of Denver. He was young and full of enthusiasm and told all who took the trouble to ask that he was just going to find a gold mine, dig out a sack of gold and then go back to Ireland for "Nellie."

The men who listened laughed at Mike, and they laughed more when they saw him go to work. He had no capital to speak of, and he was a most unlikely spot on the whole mountain. They asked him why he did not take a rest and get his hair cut. In a rage Mike said he would never get his hair cut until he found gold enough to buy the claims of the men who laughed, and for nineteen years he has kept his word.

No one knows just when he found the vein of gold which made his fortune, for the hut in which he lived masked the entrance to his mine. It was only when he assembled the miners by walking into the barber shop that his find was known.

The style of "Mike's" hair was an event that drew a crowd and grew into a celebration. Now he is on his way to Nellie, and it is said that Nellie is Nellie is wife, daughter or sweetheart.

The Praying Bug.

Of bugs there is no end, for it must be remembered that all insects save flies, bees, ants, moths and butterflies are bugs. The kissing bug season—and it was really a silly one—is over, and now comes the praying bug, a beetle with hardened wing covers that appears, with his forelegs uplifted as if in the attitude of prayer. The illustration is taken from life and is of life-size.

(The praying bug.)

Damage by Deer.

Farmers in Addirondack County, Me., complain bitterly of the injury done to their crops by the protected and rapidly increasing deer. "Why," say some, "if there is any owner of them I could complain and make him take them off, or pay for damage. At this rate it will not be long before we shall have to form a club in every cornfield in the State."

Too Many Lawyers.

Speaking of what is called the deplorable habit of Legislatures in making laws which are unintelligible to the people and the courts, the Galveston News says: "About half of the lawmakers are lawyers, but while they may be able to interpret a law made by some other lawyer, it seems that they cannot make one that some other person can understand."

THE CITY OF CIENFUEGOS.

A Gateway Through Which Passes a Great Percentage of Cuban Export.

THE BACK DOOR OF CUBA.

Some of the Largest and Best Estates Are in its Immediate Vicinity.

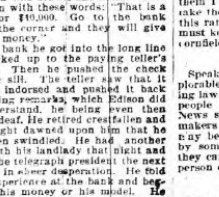
Soldiers and Patriots Who Refuse to Go to Work Though There Is Plenty of It—They Prefer to Pose As Heroes and Live on Charity—Reforms Which Are Greatly Needed.

To the American observer, Cienfuegos should properly be one of the most satisfactory cities of the tropics. Its streets are of good width, and it actually has footways which are entitled to the name of sidewalks. It is almost possible to walk three abreast. There is a large and beautiful park, iron-fenced with gardens and palm trees. The park is fronted by the imposing civic edifice, a notable theatre building, fine club house and various other creditable structures, says a writer in the Indianapolis News. There are a number of buildings, both commercial and residential, which are far above the Cuban average. There is an unusual number of stores which are spacious and which offer that attractiveness which results from spaciousness. Yet, somehow, I do not like the place. It may be that its approximation of American standards for cities of 30,000 people is the cause of my little dislike for it, because it suggests and yet so fails to realize the American standard.

Giving Havana the credit of being Cuba's portal, the city of Cienfuegos is Cuba's back door. It is an important gateway, and through it there passes every year a considerable percentage of Cuban export. The chief industry is sugar production, and all the largest and best estates on the island are to be found in the immediate vicinity of the city. Their business was very seriously interrupted during the war, and some proprietors were badly crippled. There was not, however, the wide spread destruction which occurred in some other districts.

There is a strong Spanish interest in the vicinity, and a considerable Spanish garrison occupied the town. The Cuban method of warfare is told in all seriousness by an ex-officer of the Cuban army. "During the war," he says, "the Spanish had a force of 40,000 men into Santa Clara province. After marching through the country for a time they returned and reported that no Cubans were left in the district. When we heard that we came down from the hills and burned many cane fields, to show them that we were as much enraged as ever." Enough of the destruction occurred to seriously impair the industry, and good authorities estimate the crop from a quarter to a third of the normal.

The labor question of the district is presenting serious phases. Hands are wanted and employment is given on the ground for the crops. At least 2,000 laborers are wanted. The Laborers are here, but they will not go to work. They are mostly Spanish troops. They are certainly a disreputable looking lot of soldiers, from a military standpoint, and their patriotism seems to consist in the right of idly loafering around, carrying a gun and machete, and living on the charity of the impoverished peasantry. It is not easy to see why these people could not be officially mustered out and returned to productive activity on the soil, pending the distribution of any moneys which may be coming to them, and any use which may hereafter be found for them as rural police, or in other suitable capacity.



BOAT LANDING ON DAMAGH RIVER.

The city of Cienfuegos is in need of sundry reforms, some which are of a local character and some of which depend upon the general system of island government. Most of them are of equally imperative consideration in other cities of Cuba. Chief among these is a water supply. The present institution is only notable because of its inadequacy.

Another greatly needed reform is along municipal lines, and concerns the matter of taxation. Under orders from the department of the Governor-General, officers are allowed to impose and collect any taxes save a few which, under the old regime, were known as municipal taxes. They are few in number and utterly insignificant with one exception. That exception formed the bulk of the amount collected, and represents a tax which is in disgrace to civilization. It is vicious and pernicious, and yet it is the only one of any moment which the municipality can permit the municipalities to collect for municipal purposes. This is the meat tax. The right to kill cattle was sold at auction to the highest bidder. The successful bidder often farmed out his contract in a sections at a handsome profit.

Every bee carries its market basket round its hind legs. Any one examining the body of a bee through a microscope will observe that on the legs of the creature there is a fringe of stiff hairs on the surface the hollow each other at the ends so as to form a sort of cage. This is the bee's basket, and into it, after a successful journey, it will cram enough pollen to last it for two or three days.

NOT AS HE WISHED.

He Chuckled Over the Joke but Only for a Short Time.

"I have been all over this country and in many others," said Harry H. Porter, a Chicago drummer, to a Tribune reporter yesterday, "but I had to come to New York to get bunceed, and then I was nearly as any farmer. I was standing at Broadway and Thirty-fourth street the other night waiting for a car when I noticed two fellows, about fifty feet away, who were carrying on an animated discussion. They looked to me like college boys and appeared to have reached the exhilirating stage of intoxication. Every now and then they would look at me and then fall to arguing again like a couple of lawyers. Finally they each pulled out a roll of greenbacks and deposited several of them with a bystander, who was, to all appearances, a total stranger to them. The taller of the two boys then approached me and said with a suppressed laugh.

"'Now, don't you let on what I am telling you, but I will do as I say we will each make a few dollars as easy as rolling off a log. I just bet my friend over there $20 that I could borrow a big bill from you. You give me the bill—of course we couldn't run away if we wanted to—and I'll collect the $20 and we'll divide it. Of course there can't be any "con" game about this. If there were all you would have to do would be to yell "cop" and we would be arrested before we could get twenty-five feet. I just want to give my friend a lesson. He is eternally wanting to bet.'

"Well, I always did believe in training young men in the way they should go, and, realizing that there was no possibility for the pair to escape, even if they were crooks, I gave the fellow a $5 bill. He took it with a chuckle, walked over to the stakeholder, returned to me and handed me a $10 bill, still chuckling at the good joke on his friend. I pocketed the note and began to chuckle a little myself. After while I went back to my hotel and was so much amused over the affair that, in my exuberance, I invited the bartender to have a drink. I paid for it with the $10 note and told the cashier the whole story.

"'What do you think about that for easy?' I said.

"'Never saw anything like it,' replied the cashier. 'But you lose. That note's counterfeit.'"—New York Tribune.

The Injustice of History.

"The explorer may be lost not only in wilds untrodden or in ocean wastes, but also in the depths of archives or out-of-the-way corners of libraries, where his unpublished records are stowed away, and remain buried beyond hope of unearthing until some delving antiquarian turns over the musty and yellow pages and finds something worth while. Here is an illustration or two of this interesting fact.

We know that the smallest of the Solomon Islands, separated from the second largest island in the world, New Guinea, by Torres Strait. The famous Capt. Cook thought he had made a great discovery when he first sailed through this strait and thus proved that New Guinea was separated from Australia, and the true outline of the island was shown as a part of the continent. The fact is, however, that more than 150 years earlier the forgotten Spaniards had done the same discovery; and the Spaniards had so long concealed it as a state secret in their archives at Manila that they had come to think it was their own. For a long day late in the last century, when England was at war with Spain and had seized Manila, an inquisitive man named Dalrymple, who was a chasseur, spoke around among the archives, and his most interesting discovery was this same "forced" strait. He at once published had not been masters of Manila for a while the truth about this important discovery might have been left for us to learn, even to this day. The credit given to the man who had won them, and this is how it happened that, generations after his death, the waters rushed through the continent of the island came to be known as Torres Strait.—Harper's Round Table.

Star Distance.

The stars are so enormously remote that only the nearest of them are known to us in "light years"; that is, in the number of years it takes their light to reach us, flashing through space at the rate of 186,000 miles a second. For example: The distance of one of the nearest of the stars, 61 Cygni, a star of the fifth magnitude in the Swan (Cygnus), or Northern Cross, is seven and a quarter light years.

The distance of this star may also be given as 400,000 times that of the sun. In neither way of reckoning do the figures convey much meaning. A much more vivid impression of the vastness of the space which separates this star from us is derived from the fact that the star is double—that a telescope separates it into two stars, and that calculation shows that these two stars, or suns, which to the naked eye, and even through a field glass, appear as a single star, are over seven million miles apart. So far away are these two stars that this interval between them shrivels to nothingness, as does the distance of 186,000 miles to 61 Cygni is one of the nearest of the stars.

Gould and the Green Reporter.

At heart Jay Gould was tender when innocence and timidity appeared before him. This fact I shall proceed to illustrate. When touring the far West, years ago, he studiously avoided newspaper men, until one day at Omaha he met correspondent, Syl Smith, begged him to give an interview to a very young and green reporter. "It would help him," said Smith, "to get a start here. Mr. Gould, and do him a world of good." Consent being given, the youngster entered the Wizard's private car. At sight of him Gould's knees and knees smote together, his tongue cleaved to the roof of his mouth, his brain seemed paralyzed. He was unable to utter a word. Gould requested him to be seated and ventured a commonplace or two to reassure him. Then: "Well, young man, I'm ready for the interview. What can I tell you?" The boy stammered something about a new road; did Mr. Gould intend to sell or not? "What would you advise me to do?" was the reply, whereat the reporter arose and fled precipitately. Gould held his car an hour and a half longer at Omaha to wait for Syl Smith all over Omaha to find him, but his hiding place was never discovered.

AFTER SEA SPIDERS

FISHING FOR UNCANNY CREATURES IN ALASKA WATERS.

Good Sport for Those Who Desire a Dash of Excitement—Great Sea Animals That Spread Nearly Twenty-five Feet From Tip to Tip.

If anyone desires a dash of excitement I can recommend the fishing of Alaska," said a returned Klondiker to a Chicago Inter Ocean reporter. "I had been fishing above Sitka when one day I found myself near a camp of Indians. As I had some time, I divided with them, and forthwith was invited to a feast of their own providing. We sat around a big wooden dish, in which was something that looked like frogs' legs, but frogs so gigantic that I knew it was something else. It required some courage to eat this dish, but hunger gives a man stamina of a certain kind, so I shut my eyes and began the feast. The article was not so bad as it appeared. It looked like crab, and some of it had the consistence of the rubber rings which babies chew on. Altogether it was not to be despised, combining food with exercise.

"It was sea spider, so the natives told me, a member of the cuttlefish family. As they were going out on the following morning to fish for more I persuaded them to take me with them. We dropped anchor in the lee of a little island of rocks, where we began fishing. It is a famous country for fish, and it was nothing but pull in for the natives, while I did not have a bite.

"My time was coming, however, I had on a heavy sinker, so that every time the boat lifted I felt a sharp jerk, which deceived me. But once, when the boat rose on a big wave, my line did not give, and I shouted to the Indian next to me that I was foul. He took the line, gave a tremendous jerk, and received one in return; then, bracing himself back, he began to pull and scream; then all hands screamed, and I understood that a sea spider had hold of the line and also the bottom. I expected every minute to see the canoe go over, but the men managed to keep it side, now forcing the rail down so that the water poured in, now lifting with a mighty yell, then slacking off so suddenly that I fully fell in a heap.

This gear is very convenient to the operator, for pressure applied to the pedals, the backlash is extremely small, and no adjustment to take up wear is ever needed.

Big Boat Race at New London.

Yale's athletic programme for this spring is now entirely settled. Manager Preston of the navy has announced that all doubt about the Yale-Harvard race on the Thames has been removed by the decision of the New London Board of Trade, which was as generous as that of last year. The early Yale-Harvard crew race has been abandoned, but by the action of Harvard's faculty in not allowing the Weld or Newell crew to come to New Haven.

Mr. Adams, of the Weld crew, was visited Manager Preston in the hope of having the Dunham eight participate in the Charles River regatta. The Yale navy is favorable to this proposed race, but it is not expected that permission will be granted after the action of the Harvard faculty.

Under such circumstances, the consolidation, and all the coaching is now done from her deck. There will be no change in the shells used this spring. Capt. Allen has ordered two cedar boats for the 'varsity and college eights. The freshmen will also have a new shell, but the boats for second-class crews have not been announced who will make these boats, but they will be along the same lines as those of last year.

Hints on Golf Shoes.

To the golfer his shoes are almost as important as his clubs. The American golfer is following closely in the footsteps of his British cousins and adopting their thick waterproof leather, which is well studded with nails. The preference in Great Britain is for shoes, rather than boots, or, as we would say, for low cut rather than high shoes.

Almost any sort of coarse grained tough leather is used now, and tan is the orthodox color. Just now the fashion is to have the shoes of the horsehide, which makes a very durable and pliable leather.

The beginner should be especially careful to buy in heavy shoes. Should he assay the game in ordinary walking shoes, by the time the first round is over he will borrow a phrase from the classic Boxiana, be "greasy on his pins." Sharp and strange pains will last through his feet, and the instep will swell to such an extent that though all the small bones are snapping. One such experience will probably plant the seeds of the crop of corns that will bother the fortnight throughout his entire golfing career.

Hare Hunting.

Hare hunting is undoubtedly a more antique sport than the chase of the fox. Xenophon pursued it with delight in ancient Greece, and in Britain the hare was for centuries looked upon as a far more worthy quarry than the fox, which, until the time of Queen Elizabeth, was rarely regarded as a mere vermin. Nicholas Cox, author of the "Gentleman's Recreation," a work on sport, published in 1674, says that the hare is "followed by all of all classes the hare makes the greatest pastime, so it is a great delight and satisfaction to see the craft and the poor little beast in her own self-preservation." And it is to be admitted that in those shifts and expedients which afford lovers of hounds the true delight of hunting the timid sare is at least as fertile as any known beast of chase in any part of the world.

NEW MATE FOR EDDIE BALD

Downing, the San Jose Sanchman, Will Travel With Him Through 1899.

Eddie Bald has chosen Hardy Downing the San Jose sanchman as his team mate for the season of 1899. Bald in speaking of the new man said:

"Downing first came to my notice upon the occasion of the recent match race with Stevens, at San Jose, and although he was defeated in that event he gave Stevens such a close rub that I am coming to the belief that, with proper coaching Hardy could give all these circuit cracks a hard tussle. He has a speedful burst of speed, and when his sprint is properly developed he will be as fast as any of them. He has a good cool head for competition and a lightning spurt that does my heart good.

"A man has to be a fighter to get through those big bunches on the National Circuit. As near as I can make out, Downing possesses all of these requisites, and with the coaching and assistance I will be able to give him he should be a wonder before the season is over.

The Spinroller Gear.

The plan of this gear consists of two sets of intermeshing spur roller teeth, each tooth curving inward to its axis. The rollers are supported at their ends by a pair of long fingerlike projections, which holds the rollers rigidly and prevents them from springing when pressure is placed upon

PRO AND CON TALK ABOUT CHEAPER GAS

Hearing Given By Councilmanic Street Committee.

LIVELY REMARKS HEARD.

PEOPLE'S COMPANY SEEMED TO HAVE BEST OF ARGUMENT.

Frank Berger, of Elizabeth, Appeared as the Counsel for the Old Gas Company but the Points He Made Were Very Weak — Senator Reed Was Principal Spokesman for the New Company.

Messrs. Barrows, Tolles and Van Herwerden, the councilmanic street committee, met Monday evening in the council rooms and invited the officers of the People's Gas Company to be present and talk over matters regarding the franchise asked for from the city. Those at the meeting included Messrs. Charles A. Reed, Wm. A. Coddington, Vincent W. Nash, Edward White and James E. Martine, of the new gas company. Frank Berger, of Elizabeth, was present to represent the Plainfield Gas Light Company. Street Commissioner Gavett was also present. Mr. Barrows occupied the chair, and started the discussion.

Senator Reed acted as spokeman for the company and replied so far as possible to the questions. He was unable to respond definitely to a number of questions, but gave the committee to understand that the company was organized in good faith and intended to do business and be just as fair as possible. All of this was sort of a preliminary action, but matters became quite warm when Mr. Bergen made his little speech on behalf of the company he represents.

He believed the new company was organized in good faith, but did not seem to believe that the members of the company fully realized what they are doing. He wondered what knowledge they had of gas that they should hope to reap any great benefit. He cited with much woe the troubles of other cities, where competition was started and how the various companies had been snowed under and were forced to give up their plants only to have John Kean buy them up. This, he said, was true in Elizabeth, where the people thought they would make M K an

The result of all this strife, Mr. Bergen said, was that the new companies could get very little business and the old company crowded them out. There is so little profit in gas that new companies cannot make enough to pay running expenses. He asked Mr. Barrows if he knew any place where two gas companies were running successfully, but Mr. Barrows being unfamiliar with the subject could not respond.

Mr. Bergen contended that the old company in this city must protect its rights and interests, and they would put the price of gas down very low, thus entrenching the new company on the start. The new company might get along for a while, but would soon go under. He said that the old company could make gas for $1, but was informed by a man who knows that first-class gas cannot be made at $1 with a profit. He then cited instances where the old company had been reducing the price of gas since 1893, and also spoke of the present reduction to take effect Nov. 1st. He advised the members of the People's Gas Company not to invest their money in gas, but to leave well enough alone.

Mr. Martine took exception to Mr. Bergen's remarks and said that a resident of Elizabeth thoroughly posted in gas matters told him that good gas could be made for $1. He recognized that Mr. Bergen voiced the sentiments of the Plainfield Gas Company, a monopoly, but with modern appliances, etc., gas can be made better and cheaper. He spoke of the reputation Plainfield has of being a high town, and he thought gas, water and other things along that line should be cheaper.

Senator Reed said that all Mr Bergen had stated was about what could be said of the old company, but he cited the fact that during the past ten years the price of gas had been reduced from $2 to $1.50, but according to Mr. Bergen's theory that company should be given a monopoly and no other company should be allowed to furnish gas any cheaper. The truth of the matter, said Mr. Reed, is that the Plainfield Gas Light Company will not reduce the price any faster than is necessary, and if the company goes out of business the stockholders will not be obliged to work on the streets to make a living.

In reply to this Mr. Bergen stated that with the two companies there is bound to be a fight, and the weaker company will eventually go under. He contended that the new company would not get much business, and the old company would slaughter the new one. He believed, however, that every city should own its plants and lease them to the highest bidder. He said that there should be one gas company, one electric light company, one water company, etc., and let the law adjust the prices.

Mr. Nash thought Mr Bergen's plan a good one for Mr. Bergen and a monopoly, but not for the people, but if the People's Gas Company lose money Mr. Bergen would not be the sufferer.

Mr. Coddington made a good point. He said that Mr. Bergen dwelt at length upon the fact that the old company would surely gobble up the new one, but the old company would not agree to give $1 gas forever afterward, while the new company, which might gobble up the old one, had already agreed to give price at that maximum price.

More discussion followed before and after the meeting adjourned, but it remained for Senator Reed and Mr. Martine to spring the greatest surprise of all. They examined present advertisement of the Plainfield Gas Light Company which announces a reduction in price, and there they discovered that no reduction had been made in gas for fuel purposes. The company in reducing the price had also reduced the discount, thus making the prices the same, $1 25 per thousand feet. All hands enjoyed a good laugh over this. After a little further discussion the meeting adjourned, after Mr. Barrows assured all that the committee would consider the matter, but do nothing until all parties concerned have an opportunity to be heard

BROKAW MUST PAY HARGRAVES $25.

Nominal Damages For Alienating Wife's Affections.

JURY OUT FOR FIVE HOURS.

STORIES TOLD BY PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

Mrs. Hargraves Caused a Shock in Court by Telling of Her Relations With Brokaw—Brokaw Said That His Sympathies Had Been Aroused Out of Compassion for the Woman's Lot.

After being out from 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon until 9 p. m. Monday the jury in the suit for $10,000 damages brought by Frederick W. Hargraves, of Westfield, against Wesley R. Brokaw, of this city, for the alienation of his wife's affections, brought in a verdict for $25 damages in favor of the plaintiff.

In his story told to the court Monday, Mr. Hargraves dated all his marital troubles from about December 20th, last, when he called upon Brokaw in order to see about the purchase of a piano, Brokaw offered to put a piano in the plaintiff's house on trial until April 1st at a rental of $5 per month.

The piano was put in and some time in the early part of January Brokaw began to call on Mrs. Hargraves at her home and she to visit Brokaw at his store.

The visits became so frequent that Hargraves finally objected.

On the night of April 25th he saw his wife at Brokaw's store after 10 o'clock at night, and he demanded her to return home. He saw her at the store on several occasions after that.

He finally ordered the piano out of the house, and on Sept. 28th his wife left his bed and board. On the day following a van backed up to the house and a large part of the household goods were removed and carried to Brokaw's store. On demanding of Brokaw what right he had to remove the goods, he was informed that Mrs. Hargraves had requested it, and that he had promised to store them for her, which he did.

Witness testified that seven weeks after his wife had left him he asked her to return to him, which she did about a week later.

The next witness called for the plaintiff was Mrs. Mary Hargraves, wife of the plaintiff, who evidently much against her inclination, substantiated much of the story told by her husband. Mrs. Hargraves, who is a rather comely looking woman, was neatly attired, and during the whole of her examination made no attempt whatever to vouchsafe any information other than that she was obliged to.

She testified that Brokaw called frequently at her home, but that in each instance the object was to see about the piano and its payments. At no time had Brokaw acted in any other but a gentlemanly way. She had visited Brokaw at his store, but on business only.

The reason for her leaving her husband was because he upbraided her in Brokaw's presence and attempted to strike her.

During her testimony Mrs. Hargraves caused the defense a shock of surprise by testifying that at one Brokaw, on suggesting to her divorce proceedings, said to her that he would like to have her for his wife, but that she gave him no hope, in fact, made no reply. Brokaw gave her $50 with which to procure a divorce, and afterward it was shown that Mrs. Hargraves gave Brokaw a receipt for $50 for a sewing machine.

Brokaw, on taking the stand, explained the part he took in the unfortunate affair which resulted in Mrs. Hargraves' separation from her husband.

At no time did he advise Mrs. Hargraves to sue for a divorce, although he had been informed by Mrs. Hargraves of her husband's alleged cruel treatment. Just before the piano was taken out of the house Mrs. Hargraves told him that if the piano was taken out she would go too.

He said that his sympathy had gone out to the woman because of the stories of abuse and cruelties which she alleged she had been subjected to at the hands of her husband. He said that he advised her only out of sympathy and compassion for the unfortunate lot which he thought was hers, and that he had only business relations with her. He violently attacked Hargraves' character.

ONE CAR VANISHES

LEAVES THE MIDDLE OF A TRAIN, AND THE CONDUCTOR IS BAFFLED.

Train Couples Again, and Completes Its Journey With-Out Leaving It's Loss Discovered—Charles Bragnell the Conductor Tells the Story.

The most remarkable of all railroad accidents occurred on the Chicago & Alton railroad near Atlanta, Ill., when a loaded car jumped out of a freight train and lodged in a ditch and the train coupled up and reached its destination without the crew either knowing that an accident had occurred or missing the car from the train.

Charles Bragnell, of Roodhouse, Ill., the conductor the train, tells the story. He says:

"When I delivered my train I was told I was a car short. I thought a mistake must have been made in checking me up. I was called up for an explanation. The clerical records showed plainly enough that I had taken out of East St. Louis a car of hard coal that I had never delivered. I had lost it some place between East St. Louis and Bloomington. I couldn't explain it. We had made up a heavy train, put two engines in front of it and a caboose behind it, and when I delivered it would have sworn that it stood just as we had made it up, and that every car left or added along the line was accounted for.

"The next morning one of the passenger crews reported a coal car wrecked in the ditch near Atlanta. When it was looked up it proved to be the car I had lost. The superintendent asked me why I had not reported the wreck. It was news to me and it was news to the whole crew. We knew nothing about it. It seemed impossible that it could have occurred and not have been seen, but it did. If I had read of such a thing happened upon another road I would not have believed it.

"The car that jumped out of my train was the eleventh behind the engine. It was loaded with hard coal and I suppose we were running something over twenty miles an hour when the car jumped out. The train we coupled up with automatic couplers, and when the car left its place the twelfth car, just behind it, came up and coupled on at the rear of the tenth car."

The Chicago & Alton experts have agreed that this remarkable loss of a car out of the middle of a rapidly-running train of twenty-one loaded cars can be explained in but one way. The flange of a front truck wheel upon the car wrecked is broken, and just below where the car lodged the ties are marked as though by a car off the track. The couplers catch with what is commonly known as "the Indian grip," catching automatically. When the flange of the coal car broke, it is reasoned, the car left the track at that end and uncoupled itself from the car ahead by pulling one of the couplers, or hands, below the plane of the other. At the same time and under the other end sank below the plane of its mate and uncoupled the car there, and, by some peculiar wrench, the uncoupling came about out of the train and fell fifty feet from the track, while the trainmen were all unconscious how near they had been to a bad wreck and disaster.

It is related among railroad men that an occurrence very like that at Atlanta happened years ago on the Lehigh Valley, where a car left its train and rolled down a long embankment and into a thick underbrush just leading in early the morning. The crew did not miss the car go and it was not known that they had lost it until the train was checked up and a car proven missing. In a little while the growing vegetation entirely hid it and the disappearance of the car of valuable merchandise became the chief mystery of the road. When the Pecwits fell in the autumn the car was found and the freight which filled it was recovered with very little loss. The Pecwits, if the duel brand is in great demand within a radius of many miles from Lyon House, Brentford.

The most noble the Marquis of Ripon has an ideal dairy at his seat, Studley Royal; and its products, yellow butter and delicious cream, are sold in two dairy shops, one in Leeds and the other in Ripon.

Another marquis still better known in the world of trade is Lord Londonderry, whose coal is as unimpeachable as his family escutcheon. Time was when the Earl of Hardwicke, as Viscount Royston, was a cigar merchant. He has now transferred his energies to Capel Court, and is half stock broker and half newspaper owner.

The Earl of Lonsdale augments his income from 13,000 acres by the profits of a green grocery shop at Charing Cross, to which the fruits and vegetables grown at his Derby seat, Elvaston Castle, find their way.

The Earl of Ban furly has for many years been an active and successful grape grower in Cobham, Victoria. His farm there is the envy and pride of the fruit colony, and its condition is due very largely to the Earl's own personal work on it.

The seventeenth Earl of Caithness has been literally nursed as a farmer, and presides over a 20,000 acre ranch, covering over twenty square miles, the fruit of his years of hard work, than of his Earl's coronet.

The last Earl of Seafield was a bailiff and small farmer in New Zealand, and his successor, the young Earl of to-day, is also engaged in industrial pursuits at Otamaris.

The late Viscount Hampden, when he was released from the exacting post of Speaker of the House of Commons, turned his attention to milk and butter, and his Glynde dairy was noted for its excellence.
